FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

ratio of these to the bulk of material from which they had been selected was too small to be determined. At the mouths of rivers which are rapidly extending their deltas, one does not find the sand sifted out in recent deposits; but at some ancient mouth, long since closed to the discharge of river-floods, he may find a belt of beach sand, having a very foreign aspect, but really sifted from the river muds in the long course of time.

The Lower San Juan has so extended its delta as to merge its mud, of late years, with the sands of Punta Arenas (or Isla Castilla, as the eastern portion of the beach is called), but the ground over which it advances is much of it shallow, so that a small volume of sediments makes considerable area. We have not succeeded in making any satisfactory computation of the amount of débris brought down by this river, but it does not, I think, exceed a hundred thousand cubic yards per annum as measured in the Greytown basin.

The plan already proposed by Commander Lull for restoring the harbor comprises three important works, namely, the dredging away of a portion of Punta Arenas and its aproning of shallow ground; the construction of a jetty to windward of the new opening, so as to shelter the approach from the sea and protect the channel from the wash of the waves; and the diversion of the waters now flowing through the Lower San Juan into the Colorado by obstructions at or near the forks. The object of the last-named work is to prevent sediments from encumbering the Greytown basin, &c.

This plan, as far as regards the main points stated above, is not inconsistent with the view I have adopted relative to the causes of injury heretofore and the obvious means of resisting them in the future, and I purpose to discuss this plan, not to present any fundamental objections, but to see how it answers criticisms from this different standpoint:

First. A jetty designed to arrest the traveling sands of the coast most effectually should extend in a direction nearly normal to the shore, and yet have a tendency to turn the sea slightly shoreward, so as to prevent the sands from escaping by the race round the end of the pier. The jetty plotted upon the map sent to me answers these tests pretty well. A position has been chosen where a line at right-angles to the general shore-line (which trends southwest in this neighborhood) is slightly inclined toward the direction of the sea, which, although created by the northeast trade-wind, is modified in the direction of its onset as it approaches the coast so as to strike at a less angle than it would if driven directly before the wind.

Second. The jetty intended to shelter the approach to the interior basin should serve as a breakwater to vessels obliged to come to anchor outside when unable to come in by reason of darkness or when waiting for a tow.

The jetty, as plotted, 3,000 feet long, will shelter nine ships under its lee, as the bottom now lies, and double this number if dredging is done within a reasonable distance of the beach and the entrance. These estimates are based upon the consideration that the wind is nearly constant, so that vessels may be expected to swing together over on octant of 500 feet radius, and that the least depth of water required will be 18 feet.

We are told at Greytown that vessels anchor at all seasons of the year on this coast, and escape injury, although they lie uncomfortably, even in ordinary weather, while the trade-winds prevail.

The sea of the Caribbean is very high, but it is very short from rear to front, so that a wave has no great volume, and under the shelter of a breakwater no considerable swell may be expected. Captain Selfridge informed me that he had found the water perfectly quiet in Porto Bello when the sea outside was running very high with the northeast trade-wind. This harbor is a good illustration, because it is scarcely 2 miles long, and opens divergently toward the sea. The exposure is, however, to the southward of west, so that the sea runs away from it. We shall have occasion to refer to this again when we come to speak of ports on the Pacific side of the isthmus.

It may be found necessary to extend the jetty at Greytown; to add a kant running westward from its extremity; but this could only be decided upon after ascertaining how fast the sands are disposed to creep out on the windward side, and how they may be inclined to deposit themselves beyond or within the end of the structure.

We may venture, not without misgivings, because of the inadequacy of our information, to make an estimate of the time that may elapse before the sands would accumulate as dry beach out to the end of the proposed jetty. We have already seen how rapidly the accumulations have taken place against the west shore, and we know that we have to resist the movement of nearly three-quarters of a million of cubic yards per annum. It is an important question how far the reaction of the jetty may extend to the eastward, because upon this reaction depends the form which the bank will take. At Port Saïd, which is situated on the flank of the delta of the Nile, much in the same way that Greytown is placed relative to the main delta of the San Juan, the accumulations have taken place in long triangular banks with bold fore shores.

Instead of piling up directly against the jetty, the shore, for perhaps a mile, has moved outward, each deposit against the mole having reacted and formed another deposit farther back. In this way the advance toward the end of the structure has been very slow. In a very general way, perhaps, we can detect a similar reaction along the shore since Punta Arenas completed its advance westward; at all events, the outward movements, although irregular from point to point, are not in any respect confined to the immediate vicinity of the obstruction (the main shore). On the contrary they happen to be less there than farther eastward, although the volume of accumulation is greater. Rejecting the shore-line, however, as being the least important contour, because the most liable to accidental movement, we shall descend to the 4 and 5 fathom curves and observe how they have advanced.

In the interval between the survey of Captain West and that of Commander Lull, seven and a quarter years, we find that the fore slope of the beach between the 4 and 5 fathom lines moved out, in the average 100 feet per annum. At these depths it is hardly likely that the washing away of the beach in storms has had much effect; and, of course, one of the first steps taken (should improvements be decided upon) will be to secure this beach, so that we need not take these accidents into account.

Now comes the report of Major McFarland:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 18, 1874.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. A. A. HUMPHREYS, Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.; Professor BESY, U. S. Coast Survey; Commodore DANIEL AMMEN, U. S. N., U. S. Interoceanic Canal Commission, Washington, D. C.:

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to present herewith my report upon the examination made by me, under your instructions, of the two proposed routes of water communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, known as the Nicaragua and the Darien, or Alrato-Napipi routes, and which were surveyed and reported upon respectively by Commander E. P. Lull and Thomas P. Selfridge of the United States Navy.

Under Special Order No. 34, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated Washington, February 16, 1874, I was directed by the Hon. Secretary of War, in addition to my other duties, to report to the president of the United States Isthmus Canal Commission for duty in connection with the examination of proposed routes of communication by canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and Capt. William H. Heuer, Corps of Engineers, was directed to report to me temporarily for the same service.

Having reported to you in accordance with the terms of this order, I was furnished with a letter of instructions, of which the following is a copy:

UNITED STATES INTEROCEANIC CANAL COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1874.

Maj. WALTER MCFARLAND,
Corps of Engineers, United States Army, Painesville, Ohio:

SIR: The object of the commission in asking for the detail of officers of engineers of the Army to aid them in the examination of the reports upon the Nicaragua and Alrato Interoceanic Canal route was that these officers might make such examination, measurements, and investigation of the two routes as would enable them to present a professional opinion upon the degree of practicability and the cost of each.

The Secretary of War has detailed you for that purpose, and directed Captain Heuer of the Engineers to report to you for duty.

The Secretary of the Navy has directed every arrangement to be made that is requisite to enable you to perform this duty, and copies of the instructions issued are inclosed herewith for your guidance.

You will proceed to Pensacola, Fla., accompanied by Captain Heuer, whom you will instruct accordingly, to meet the Gettysburg, which will leave there on the 25th instant. The usual mileage will be paid to yourself and Captain Heuer by Assistant Paymaster C. F. Eastman, of the Gettysburg.

Upon the completion of the examinations you will proceed to this place and submit your report.

The commission deemed it unnecessary to give you detailed instructions relative to the proposed examinations; the great question on any route being the practicability, cost of construction, and the permanency of the harbor at each end; the elevation of the summit dividing the two oceans, and the manner and cost of passing it; the supply of water, and, finally, the cost of the whole route.

The proposed locations of the canals are submitted as approximative, and not final, and you are, therefore, authorized to make such surveys as you may consider expedient to correct the details of location, in order to reduce the estimated cost of construction.

The extent of the exploration is necessarily subject to the limitations of time.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Brevet Major-General U. S. A., for the Commission.

THE NICARAGUA ROUTE.

The scheme for opening this route to navigation provides for a harbor at Brito on the Pacific coast; a canal 16½ miles long thence to Lake Nicaragua, with a rise of 107 feet, which is to be overcome by ten locks; an open passage through Lake Nicaragua, 56 miles in length; 63 miles of slack-water navigation in the San Juan River, secured by the construction of four dams, at Castillo, Balas, and Machuca Rapids, and at the mouth of the San Carlos, respectively, around the upper three of which are to be constructed short sections of canal, whose united length is 3½ miles; a canal about 42 miles in length leading from the basin formed by the lower dam directly to Greytown; and lastly, the formation of a harbor at that place.

SUMMARY.

| | Miles of— | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Canal. | Lake. | Slack-water. | Total. |
| Pacific to Lake Nicaragua | 16.33 | ..... | ..... | 16.33 |
| Lake Nicaragua | ..... | 56.50 | ..... | 56.50 |
| San Juan River | 3.51 | ..... | 63.02 | 66.53 |
| San Juan River to Greytown | 41.90 | ..... | ..... | 41.90 |
| | 61.74 | 56.50 | 63.02 | 181.26 |

The general design of this route, which is essentially the same as that adopted by O. W. Childs in his survey of 1857, seemed to be good. The lake and the river are both made use of as far as possible; and where the latter becomes too much obstructed by sand deposits to admit of its further use, which occurs at the mouth of the San Carlos, the first large tributary received after leaving the lake, it is boldly abandoned and a canal is run through the valley, the swamps, and the lowlands by the most direct route to Greytown. So far there seems to be no choice, nature having marked the route which must be pursued.

Between the lake and the Pacific coast, however, the route to be followed has not been so easily determined. Examinations of routes to the sea by the valleys of the Lapoa, Lajas, Del Medio, Gonzales, and Ochomongo Rivers, show that the choice lay between the route by the Rio Lajas and that by the Rio Del Medio.

Mr. Childs, in his survey, chose the former route, the highest point of which is only 49 feet above the level of Lake Nicaragua. On the latter, or Del Medio route, the summit is 85 feet higher than on the Lajas route, being 134 feet above the level of the lake; but, notwithstanding this, this route was chosen by Commander Lull for the reasons mentioned in his report, namely, that, although the cutting on this route would be deeper than on the other, the line would be shorter and straighter; deep water would be found nearer its lake terminus than on the other line, and the crossing of many troublesome streams would be avoided. Those reasons I consider sound, and I regard the route by the valley of the Rio Del Medio, therefore, as the best one for canal purposes yet discovered between the lake and the Pacific.

The level of Lake Nicaragua, at its highest stage, is taken as the height of the summit-level. This level is taken as 107 feet above mean tide in either ocean, and the level is to be kept at the height by means of the dam which it is proposed to construct at Castillo Rapids, which will prevent the fall of 5 or 6 feet in the lake level, which usually occurs during the dry season.

Ten locks on each side will effect the descent to the sea; those on the Pacific side being distributed over the distance of 16 miles between the lake and the ocean, with a tide lock in addition at Brito; and those on the Atlantic side being placed, one at each of the three upper dams, and the remaining seven distributed over the 42 miles of canal which would be between the San Carlos and Greytown.

The dams by which it is proposed to secure slack-water navigation in the San Juan appear to be well placed, and are calculated to raise the water from 19 to 27 feet; their heights will vary from 21 to 34 feet, depending upon the depth of water in which they are to be built.

The question yet to be determined in respect to these dams is whether there are any outlets in the banks through which the water which is to be backed up might escape. There appear to be no difficulties in the way of constructing any part of this proposed canal which the resources of engineering skill may not readily overcome, and the whole project seems to have been well considered.

The survey, from its extent and from the limited time which could be given to it, was something in the nature of a preliminary one, and some points yet remain to be determined, as, for instance, the nature of the material to be excavated, the exact locations of locks, &c., which subsequent examinations will fix.

HARBORS.

As was anticipated, the most serious question to be encountered in making a project for a ship-canal by this route is that of the formation of suitable harbors at its extremities.

The Pacific terminus of the projected canal is at Brito, called by courtesy a harbor, although it possesses none of the characteristics of one, and is, in fact, nothing more than a slight indentation in the short line.

It is proposed to form a harbor here by the construction of breakwaters or jetties, which, in connection with the excavation of a basin in the sandy deposit along the shore, would give an inclosed area of 67 acres, as estimated by the engineer.

This I regard as entirely inadequate to the wants of a great interoceanic canal, for it would afford neither room for vessels to lie at anchor nor enough protection for ocean vessels to admit of their lying at a wharf, and the delay, inconvenience, and cost (pilotage, &c.) of being compelled to run for safety or from necessity into the harbor of San Juan del Sur, as suggested, make it expedient and very desirable to construct, at the Pacific terminus of the canal, such a harbor as will answer all the purposes of commerce.

I am unable to offer at present any suggestion as to the mode in which this is to be accomplished, other than that of a detached breakwater for reducing the swell, for the necessary data in relation to prevailing winds, currents, swells, and depths upon which a complete scheme must depend, are not in my possession; but it may be set down as a certainty that the cost will be much greater than the amount which has been estimated as sufficient for the formation of a harbor at this point.

GREYTOWN OR SAN JUAN DEL NORTE.

The fine harbor which once existed at this port has long since been destroyed by the accumulation of sand, which has closed its entrance, and in place of the opening a mile and three-quarters wide, with 5 fathoms depth, which the charts show in 1832, there are now, commonly, no entrance at all, excepting where the penned-up waters of the bay break through the sand-spit which has closed the entrance, and form a channel-way 2 or 3 feet in depth, through which small boats and canoes may pass in and out when the breakers will permit them to do so. Seagoing vessels nowadays, in receiving or delivering freight at Greytown, lie outside and make use of lighters entirely in moving their cargoes between ship and shore.

The report made to the National Academy of Sciences in 1866 by a committee of its members, to whom had been assigned "the duty of examining into the practicability and best means of improving the navigation of the lower San Juan River, and reclaiming the harbor of San Juan del Norte, or Greytown, in Nicaragua," shows that between 1832, when the entrance was between a mile and three-quarters broad, and 1859, when it had a breadth of but one-eighth of a mile, the advance of Punta Arenas, or Isla Castilla, as it was formerly called, was at a rate varying from 266 feet to 1,100 feet per year, averaging about 400 feet per year.

It is of very little consequence to the present discussion where this destructive sand originally came from—whether brought down by the waters of the San Juan directly through the harbor of Greytown, or deposited by the other mouths and brought along the coast by the action of the prevailing winds and seas.

The one fact that we are sure of is this, that for a period of over twenty years these sands moved to the westward at the rates just mentioned until the harbor at Greytown was destroyed, and it may be set down as an absolute certainty that the same motion had continued for years before, though perhaps unobserved, just as it now continues, although the outlet from the harbor is closed; and as it will undoubtedly continue for years to come, until, indeed, the relative directions of the shore line and of the prevailing winds and waves are changed.

No measurements have ever yet been made with sufficient care or sufficient frequency to enable us to determine with precision what are the changes now actually taking place on the shore lines of this sand-spit. That it is moving westwardis certain, but whether it is moving outward or increasing permanently in volume nothing but a long series of minute surveys, made year after year, referred to the same bases and benches, and carefully compared with each other, can determine. Its movement appears to be one of translation only from east to west, with the usual building out seaward and washing away against the sea slope; constantly varying, with permanent accumulation only where obstructions occur, and therefore, of course, in the resultant angle formed by this growing sand-spit, and the nearly north and south coast line with which it comes in contact in its progress westward.

The question which at once arises is whether the scheme of improvement suggested in the report upon this route is sufficient to secure a permanent harbor here.

That scheme consists generally of the construction of a pier running out 3,000 feet in a northwesterly direction from Punta Arenas; the formation of a harbor or basin by dredging under the lee of this pier, as well as inside the former harbor, and the cutting off of the waters of the lower San Juan by the construction of a dam or dike across its head, thus throwing them in the Colorado branch.

The improvement as suggested is based upon the supposition that all the injury done to this harbor has been done by direct deposits from the lower San Juan, and that if these were cut off and a harbor were excavated where one formerly existed, there would be nothing again to destroy it.

Supposing that could be done, I am of the opinion that it would be ineffectual, because the sands already deposited are so great in volume that under the movement produced by the east winds and seas which here prevail, they would speedily choke up and destroy any harbor constructed to the westward of the mouth of Tauro Pass, unless thrown well into the sea.

The difficulties in the way of accomplishing the desired object by the means indicated are:

First. The impossibility of dredging in an open sea where, although there may be no gales, there is a constant ocean swell sufficient to prevent the use of any dredge whose usefulness up to the present time has been successfully and certainly established.

A swell of 2 feet is enough to prevent the dredge from working, and any swell increases the cost.

The construction of a single pier would not produce the necessary stillness in the waters behind it.

Secondly. The certainty that the westward progression of the shore sands would speedily fill in the angle between the pier and the shore to windward, and the sands then working around the other end of the pier would hug it and soon close any channels that might have been constructed inside of it.

Thirdly. The uncertainty of our being able to close the upper opening of the San Juan branch. The material of this whole delta formation is soft, and floods even now frequently rise above the banks. The Colorado branch can not receive and discharge more than it now receives without changing its regimen; and to attempt to compel it to receive the waters which now flow through the lower San Juan by shutting them off from their natural course, by the construction of a dam across its head, would be simply to test the relative resisting powers of the bed and banks of the Colorado on one hand and of the artificial obstruction on the other, a trial in which in this soft material the chances would be altogether against the artificial work around the ends of and under which the obstructed waters would almost certainly make their way.

The harbor of Greytown is, in my opinion irretrievably ruined, and the only question relating to it which remains to be determined is whether an artificial harbor can here be formed which may be expected to be permanently valuable for canal purposes.

I believe this can be done, but in one way only, and that is by carrying the canal boldly out through the harbor of Greytown and into the sea, into 30 feet of water, and by constructing outside of it and at a convenient distance from its extremity a detached breakwater so situated as to form a deep-water harbor behind it, and to give to the entrance to the canal a sufficient protection against the action of the waves.

Of course the westerly movement of the shore sands before described will gradually cause an accumulation of sand against the weather side of the most easterly of the two dikes or piers herein proposed; and this action will continue until the outer extremity of this pier is reached, where the sand will pass around it, and leaving a bar at the mouth of the canal, the mass of the sand will pass on to the westward and find a resting place under the lee of the most westerly pier, which will prevent it from encroaching upon the channel-way to the sea. The entrance to the canal being narrow, say not over 150 feet in breadth, and being protected by the breakwater from the swell of the sea, it will not be difficult to keep it open by dredging the bar which may here form.

It will be observed in examining a chart of the coast between the Colorado mouth and the Greytown outlet, that the general direction of the shore-line varies from northwest between the mouth of the Colorado and the mouth of the Tauro Pass, to west, between that point and the coast-line north of Greytown; and as the prevailing winds are from the east to northeast, as are also the seas which produce the trend of the beach from east to west, which depends upon the obliquity of the angle at which the wave strikes the beach, and consequently the rate at which the sand accumulates behind any obstruction, such as a pier, will be much more rapid between Harbor Head and the coast north of Greytown than it would be at Harbor Head or between that point and the Colorado mouth, where the prevailing seas strike the beach in a direction nearly normal to the shore-line. For this reason the dykes which form the seaward extremity of the proposed canal should run out from a point near Harbor Head or from a point to the eastward of it; and the canal would therefore cross the harbor or lagoon of Greytown somewhere near its head.

The waters brought down by the lower San Juan and dispersed through the lagoon would find their way to the sea over the low grounds or swamp lands lying to the southward of the canal dykes and through the Tauro Pass.

This scheme would, of course, add very materially to the cost of the canal project, but I am unable to state, without a more minute discussion of the question than I have yet been able to make of it, what the increased cost would probably be; and this, with some other questions of cost and detail, I am compelled to defer for the present.

To sum up, then, my conclusions in regard to the proposed Nicaragua ship-canal are these:

First. The general scheme is good, and the route is certainly practicable.

Secondly. Further examinations need to be made of the country in rear of the proposed dams in the San Juan River—this question affecting not the practicability of the proposed work, but the probable cost of it.

Thirdly. Additional and extensive borings need to be made in order to determine the nature of the material to be excavated.

Fourthly. The proposed harbor at Brito should be enlarged.

Fifthly. The harbor at San Juan del Norte, or Greytown, can not be restored, and the proposed remedy is inadequate.

A harbor must be constructed here in deep water, and the canal led out to it.

JANUARY 12, 1875.

COST OF THE NICARAGUA ROUTE—QUANTITIES.

It has not been thought necessary to recalculate the amount of work which, according to the published report of this survey, will be necessary in order to open the canal route.

The maps, profiles, and original sheets of estimates have been freely placed at my service, and I have compared them together as well as the time at command would permit.

The dimensions in general appear to have been reduced as low as possible, and, in some instances, to such an extent as to impair the efficiency of the canal if constructed in accordance with them; and the calculations of quantities have been determined from dimensions of the proposed sections with a degree of mathematical exactness that can not be adhered to in practice, and which must often be largely exceeded.

The depth of water proposed for this canal is 26 feet, which is about the same as that which has been given on the Suez Canal.

The width varies according to the nature of the construction, as follows, namely:

| | At bottom. | At water surface. |
|---|---|---|
| | Feet. | Feet. |
| In earth cutting | 50 | 126 |
| In rock | 60 | 106 |
| In earth embankment | 72 | 150 |

In the Suez Canal, which is all in cutting, the widths are as follows:

| | Feet. |
|---|---|
| Least width at bottom | 72 |
| Least width at water surface | 196 |
| Usual width at water surface | 328 |

The side slopes proposed for the Nicaragua Canal are in earth, the steepest admissible, namely, one upon one and a half. Those adopted for the Suez Canal are from one upon two to one upon four or five, and I think it certain that in the light soil of that part of Nicaragua which the canal must traverse in its course from the lake to the Pacific coast, and also in its passage through 10 or 12 miles of low overflowed lands, which lie between Silico Lagoon and Greytown, these slopes will have to be increased to one upon two or three, materially increasing the amount of excavation to be accomplished.

In the proposed improvement of the San Juan River between Lake Nicaragua and Castillo, a distance of 37 miles, 80 feet has been taken as the bottom width of the channel which it would be necessary to dredge. This is too narrow. The least width that should be given, even to the entrance of a harbor with plenty of sea room inside and outside of it, or to a passage across a bar, is three times the width of the larger class of vessels which make use of it; and where the channel is to be of considerable length, and is crooked and affected by currents, and especially where it passes through a river or a bay where its limits can not be fixed permanently and conspicuously, as by the banks of an ordinary canal, its breadth should be increased much beyond this, in order to guard, as well as may be, against the accidents of grounding and collisions. In this case it is my opinion that the width of the cut should be not less at the bottom than 200 feet, which would give an average width of 240 feet at the top of the cut, assuming its depth to be 5 feet, with slopes of one upon four.

The calculators presume that the exact depth of 26 feet, with side slopes of one upon three or four, can be attained by dredging; in practice, however, this can not be accomplished, for under the most favorable circumstances the dredge, from its mode of action, will have to work to an average depth of a foot below the depth it is desired to secure, and this is true also in regard to the removal of rock under water, as the blast must be sunk to a depth of 1 or 2 feet below the bottom which it is desired to secure in order to shatter the rock down to that level. Taking this increased depth and width into consideration, the amount of material to be removed from this part of the route will be between two and a half and three times that given in the original estimate.

In the opening of that part of the route which passes through Lake Nicaragua, it is proposed to cut channels from either shore out to the 26-foot curve, distant 1,200 feet from the shore line on the west side and about 7 miles from the shore line on the east side. This makes no allowance for reduction of depth due to wave action. Without knowing from observation what height the waves attain in this part of the lake, it is yet certain that in a strong wind it can not be less than 4 feet, for this is the amount given by calculation, when the line of exposure is taken at 7 miles, the least possible being the length of the channel itself. This would require an increased depth of 2 feet, which would require the channel to be carried out to the 28-foot curve, which, if the slope of the bottom be taken as nearly uniform, would be found between 1 and 2 miles out of the 26-foot curve.

The bottom through which this channel is to be cut is reported as soft mud, and this, in the single instance in which we tried it, we found to be the case.

It is my opinion that it would be impracticable to keep a channel open through this soft material by dredging alone. In order to prevent it from filling up again immediately, it would be necessary to protect its sides for their entire lengths from the shore to its outer extremity; and if this part of the lake is exposed to no heavier wave action than has just been mentioned, this protection may be given by a combination of ordinary and sheet piling, strengthened at intervals by piers or brace piles. It would not be safe to estimate the cost of this mode of construction at less than $20 per linear foot of structure, and unless the circumstances prove favorable, it will not be possible to do it for this.

An extension of the channel on the west side would also be necessary for the same reason that makes it necessary at the east side; and, for the same reason also, it will be necessary to make it deeper throughout, unless side protections are given to it.

PRICES.

The prices in general seem to be fair, and are apparently based upon those paid for similar work in the United States, taking $1 as the rate of pay of an ordinary laborer for one day's work of ten hours. In some instances, however, the rate is too low.

The rate per cubic yard for excavating rock under water is put at $5. It would cost nearly this to excavate rock in comparatively shallow water, and as in this work the depth to be attained is 26 feet, the rate will be at least double, and I have therefore taken it at $10 per cubic yard.

In the estimates for locks no provision is made for the use of dressed stone in the construction of the walls, concrete being proposed as a substitute. Ordinary concrete will not answer for this purpose, not possessing sufficient hardness to resist the wear and tear resulting from the impact and rubbing of the heavy vessels which would immediately come in frequent contact with it. If any material of this nature be used instead of stone, it must be the hardest kind of Beton agglomerate, made with the very least quantity of Portland cement as a matrix; and this would cost not less than $14 per cubic yard, and even then the hollow quoins and gate recesses should be built in the best manner of dressed stone. The cost of this dressed stone would probably not fall below $25 per cubic yard, while good rubble would cost $10.

Each lift lock should have a third pair of gates placed midway between the other two, to be used in passing the smaller vessels that may make use of the canal, both for the purpose of preventing too great a draught upon the waters of the intermediate levels and for saving as much time as possible in the passage.

In regard to the harbors at Brito and at Greytown, it is not possible now to give an exact estimate of their probable cost; for neither the position nor the length of the exterior breakwaters, which I consider necessary at both harbors for breaking the swell at the canal entrances, are determined; nor are the lengths of the canal and harbor piers, nor the depth of the water in which these obstructions would be placed. It is possible, however, that the Greytown breakwater would be placed in not less than 40 feet of water, and that its length would be not less than half a mile; and if we assume that it is to be built of pierres perdues, that its crest is 25 feet broad and is 15 feet above the mean level of the sea and that its outer and inner slopes are respectively one upon four and one upon one, we shall have the basis for the formation of an approximate estimate of its cost.

In comparing the cost of breakwaters which have already been constructed, it has been usual to state that their cost per linear foot, which varies from about $750 to $800 in the case of the Portland, England, and Delaware, United States, breakwaters, to $1,100 and $1,500 for the Cherbourg, France, and Plymouth, England, breakwaters (authorities differing, however, from 25 to 50 per cent.), but as this method of comparison is entirely independent of the depth of water in which the work is situated, and of the cross-sections of the work, it affords absolutely no means of comparing their relative cost and economy. For this purpose some fixed standard, such as a cubic yard, should be known.

The cost of the Delaware breakwater has been about $8 per cubic yard. That of the Cherbourg breakwater has been probably much less, as a workman's wages in France are not much more than half of those paid in the United States.

As there are no harbor facilities at Greytown to aid the construction, and as the natural stone, if used, must be quarried in blocks large enough to resist the dispersive action of the sea, and as it must be brought from great distances, it will probably cost not less than $10 per cubic yard, which would make the cost of the breakwater about $5,000,000.

If the two canal piers have a breadth of 20 feet each, with their crests 10 feet above the water level, and their side slopes of one upon one and reach the 30 feet curve at a distance of 3,000 feet from the shore line, their cost at the same rate would be about $3,000,000. No timber whatever should be used in these structures, and the blocks of which they are composed should be as large as can be conveniently managed. The piers at Port Said, at the Mediterranean end of the Suez Canal, are built of blocks of artificial stone, composed of dredged sand and hydraulic lime of theil. And these blocks, which weigh 20 tons each and measure about 12 cubic yards each, cost in final position $15.75 per cubic yard. It may be found convenient or necessary to resort to the use of artificial stone in the construction now under consideration.

The necessary dredging and pile protection of the channel in the passage across the harbor will probably cost not less than $1,500,000, making the total approximate cost of constructing a harbor here $9,500,000.

In regard to the proposed harbor at Brito, there is the same want of data necessary for forming a reliable estimate of cost, as in the case of the harbor at Greytown; but as the breakwater and piers here would probably be much shorter than those required at Greytown. I have assumed the probable cost of constructing a harbor at this point to be $5,000,000.

It is to be borne in mind that the survey upon which the estimates have been based was made in the nature of a preliminary rather than of a final locating survey, and the data obtained are, therefore, necessarily incomplete. Accepting, however, as a basis, the statements of amounts given in the published reports, and making such changes in quantities and prices as shall be herein indicated, the following will be the probable cost of the opening of this route on the supposition that as much work will be accomplished by a laborer in one day when engaged upon this work as is commonly done in the same time by a workman, and that this work costs $1:

ESTIMATES.

|---|---|
| Western division | $25,500,000 |
| Middle division | 3,000,000 |
| Eastern division | 45,000,000 |
| Harbor at Brito | 5,000,000 |
| Harbor at Greytown | 9,500,000 |
| | 88,000,000 |
| Contingencies, 25 per cent | 22,000,000 |
| Total | 110,000,000 |

As the country through which this route passes is not densely enough peopled to furnish the ten thousand laborers required for a speedy construction of the canal, it will be necessary to import the required workmen, and these will probably be found among the Chinese, or among the negroes of our own Southern States. The Chinese, however, are better adapted for work which requires skill and ingenuity than for the hard laboring work which the construction of this canal would require; and, although they are usually hired at a lower rate than is demanded by our Northern laborers, they accomplish much less of this work than do the latter, and there is, therefore, no economy in their employment. This is the testimony given me by the chief engineer of a Southern road on which between three thousand and four thousand Chinese laborers were employed at one time. These men are employed chiefly where the services of Irishmen and Germans are not to be had. Our Southern negroes would be far better for this purpose than the Chinese, if they could be induced to undertake it, for they are hardy, industrious, and tractable when well treated, and the climate of Nicaragua would suit them admirably. It would probably be difficult, however, to get them to leave their homes in the United States.

Concerning the relative amount of work that can be accomplished in a temperate and in a tropical climate by a laborer in one day, I have but scanty means of judging. It is certain, however, that the relaxing effect will not admit of the continued physical effort which may be sustained under the more bracing climate of the North.

From what I have seen of this relaxing effect in our own country, along the Gulf coast, I am compelled to believe that the amount of work which a laborer in Central America would accomplish in a day would not exceed two-thirds of that which he would accomplish in our own Northern States; and if this be the case the cost of the labor employed in the opening of this route would be increased 50 per cent. Finally, however pleasant and healthy the climate of Nicaragua may be, it is certain that delays and damages must occur during the rainy season, and that sickness must arise in the breaking up of virgin soil and in the employment of unacclimated persons, all of which will necessarily add to the expense.

Omitting these latter considerations, however, which do not admit of calculation, and assuming that $60,000,000 of the amount which it has been estimated the canal would cost would be paid for labor, the reduced value of this labor, as indicated above, will require this addition of $30,000,000 to the amount previously given as the approximate cost of this canal, and the estimate becomes:

| Cost on basis of Northern rates | $110,000,000 |
| Increase due to decreased value of labor in tropics | 30,000,000 |
| Total | 140,000,000 |

Which I regard as the probable cost of opening this route. This is at the rate of $772,000 per mile. The Suez Canal, with no locks, cost a little less than $1,000,000 per mile.

Now, Mr. President, you will see that even this immense sum of money, stated to be necessary by Colonel McFarland, will not be sufficient, for the reason, first, that he has assumed the cost of labor to be $1 per day, whereas it will be from $2 per day and upwards, if we may judge from the cost of labor at present at the Panama Canal; and second, the canal designed by Colonel McFarland is altogether inadequate in size, if we may judge from what the experience on the Suez Canal has shown to be necessary. The increase to Colonel McFarland's estimate by making the labor $2 per day instead of $1 will be $60,000,000, which alone makes a grand total in cash cost of $200,000,000. If this canal be built according to the proposed enlargement of the Suez Canal, the total cost will be $264,500,000.

Now, this company, Mr. President, which we are asked to charter, must necessarily float its bonds and stock in the money markets of the world. The securities will, no doubt, be sold at a large discount, and it may reasonably be expected that at least 25 per cent. of the face value of stock and bonds will be lost in commissions and discount, leaving only $75,000,000 in cash to pay for a work that will certainly cost in cash $264,500,000. The loss by discount alone on the bonds and shares of the Panama Canal Company already amount to $88,000,000, which is a loss of 33 per cent. Is it reasonable to suppose that a scheme with much less merit and without the prestige of a great name can sell its securities at a less discount?

I have given this question of the practicability of the Nicarauga Canal, according to its present plans, very careful consideration, and have read the numerous reports and statements for and against its practicability, and I have come to the conclusion that the present plan is not only entirely inadequate to do the business which may be expected of the canal, but that it is utterly impracticable to force vessels of even ordinary size through certain parts of it.

There is not to my knowledge anywhere in the world a ship-canal excavated through 7 miles of rock. The Suez Canal, which was excavated its entire distance through sand, and whose least dimensions at the surface of the water is nearly 200 feet, is incapable of safely passing vessels through it. The bed and sides of this canal, however, being of sand, do not often injure the vessels when they get aground, but that they do get aground and that it is a common sight along the length of that canal is well known. It is a fact that from 1870 to 1883 11 per cent. of all vessels, large or small, that went through the canal got aground. The most of them remained aground until they were pulled off by the powerful tugs that are kept in the canal for that purpose. So inadequate is this canal (and it is the largest in the world and by far the most important) that it is a fact, so stated in evidence taken before a canal committee of Parliament, that in 1882 the passage of ten ships through the canal chokes it.

The principal reason why vessels get aground in this or any other channel of like, or smaller dimensions, is, that there is not sufficient water in the canal prism to enable the vessel to be guided by its helm, or to attain the speed necessary for safe guidance. A steamer passing through such a restricted channel churns up the water with its propeller to such an extent very often, that though there are two feet or more of space between the bed of the canal and the kneel of the steamer, she often grounds by the removal of the water under her by her own wheel and her motion through the water. Any navigator or sailor is familiar with these phenomena, but the reasons for them are not generally known. For this reason I think it would be well for us to consider a moment the scientific reasons for this peculiar action of the vessel. We find in a book by Mr. Scott Russell, one of the leading authorities on naval architecture, the following statement of the reasons for a ship behaving in the manner I have described in a narrow channel:

The water excavated from the way of the ship causes a continual accumulation of water in the region of the canal towards which the ship is moving. * * * If this wave travel ahead of the ship only one-fourth of the pace of the ship, the accumulation will be quadrupled; one-eighth will make it eightfold, and so on, until the progress of the ship becomes extremely difficult, or impossible. This is what constantly takes place as the rise of the ship and the pace in a narrow and shallow channel becomes greater. Practically, working at high speed becomes not difficult or costly, but impracticable. * * * The consequences of this rapid increase of head accumulation, which takes place as the speed of the wave in advance of the vessel diminishes, are very serious.

First, it throws the ship's head up out of trim; next, it increases the pressure of water on her bow; third, it makes her travel up-hill; fourth, it produces a backward current along her sides. And these hindrances to speed accumulate rapidly, much more rapidly than as the square of the resistance, until the amount becomes insuperable; that is, many times the resistance due to the law of the square of the speed. * * * It is now necessary to notice the complementary effect to that of accumulation in advance of the vessel; it is subsidence of water astern. It being known that the excavated water is sent on in advance of the vessel, it becomes plain that the channel out of which this water has been taken must have its height lowered by the subsidence of the water into the vacant channel out of which the ship has been drawn.

The difficulty of propelling a vessel through a narrow channel is shown by the following extract from the transactions of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Great Britain, volume 76, page 162, 1883:

A vessel in its progress is continually displacing a mass of water equal to its own submerged bulk, and proportional to the greatest immersed cross-section of the vessel. In open water the vacuum that would otherwise be left in the wake of the vessel, is filled by the water rushing in from all sides. When the movement of a vessel takes place in a restricted channel, the case is altered. There is no longer an indefinite supply of water all around the vessel to rush into the hollow at the wake. This hollow must be filled by water which flows backwards, as a counter current driven by the head due to the height of the wave caused by the vessel. This backward current will be directly as the speed and the cross-section of the vessel, and inversely as the free water way. Consequently, a boat encounters continually an opposing current, so that her speed will be the difference between her own proper one and that of the opposing current.

In order that we may more fully understand this very important question I submit two sketches, furnished me by an engineer, one being a comparison between the Nicaragua Canal and the Suez Canal, with an accompanying table of dimensions, and with a ship such as the promoters of the Nicaragua Canal expect to put through it, and the other a cross-section of the seven miles of rock cutting at Nicaragua with the mid-ship section of three vessels shown in it, one being a Peninsula and Oriental steamer, such as passes through the Suez Canal, another the United States iron-clad Miantonomoh, and the other the Italian iron-clad Italia. If the Senate will bear in mind that in order for a vessel to navigate a canal, whether straight or crooked, with safety, the water prism must be at least six times as great as that of the vessel passing through. The utter impracticability of even ordinary size vessels navigating with safety, if they could do it at all, this narrow rock through with its projecting points is very clearly seen.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the official report of 1885 on the Nicaragua Canal. This is found in Senate Document No. 99, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.

The difficulties to be overcome in the construction of the canal, although touched upon as lightly as possible, yet reveal themselves to the careful reader, who will fully appreciate them after the statements that I have just made on the difficulty of moving a vessel through a restricted channel.

The engineer who made the last survey and report evidently intended to so remodel the Isthmus as to give his canal free chance, regardless of any natural obstacles.

The main drainage channel of Lake Nicaragua and of the whole eastern slope of the isthmus is conveniently turned aside by a huge dam, whose foundations have never been examined, and whose height, as planned by the engineer, is 75 feet, and whose length is nearly a quarter of a mile. Further on he is obliged, in order to retain the immense floods, to build an embankment over a mile and a quarter in length and 51 feet high, and with it provide waste weirs to accommodate the surplus water, and in addition to this a tunnel through the rock with adjustable gates. Between Lake Nicaragua and the Pacific the same methods are adopted; mountain torrents are entirely diverted from their accustomed channels by dams and embankments and artificial channels, and on the Atlantic slope the canal is to be protected, if protection is possible, by a series of embankments and lateral artificial channels.

At this point the Deseado will be diverted by a channel north of the canal a distance of 43,000 feet (8 miles); the latter will be protected on both sides by drainage channels formed partly by the present bed of the stream and partly by ditches. The remainder of the canal, also about 43,000 feet, from the Deseado to the sea, will be protected by embankments, an artificial channel being cut south of the canal to divert the river San Juanillo, and another north of the canal to give Laguna Bernard and its tributaries an independent outlet to the sea.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that any experienced civil engineer would be willing to stake his reputation upon the approval of these plans, or pronounce them practicable; and yet we are asked to legislate upon a most important matter, and to charter a company to build a great interoceanic transit-way, when no adequate surveys or study has been given to the subject by men experienced and skilled in this class of work.

For one, I am opposed to granting a charter to this company until all these doubts which I have set forth are removed, and until the dispute between the two petty States of Central America in regard to their territorial limits and rights shall be fully settled, and until our serious misunderstanding with Great Britain in reference to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty be entirely removed, and until these people who ask for a charter shall come here with a concession as a basis for our action. Until all these doubts are removed and the proper action taken by the different governments interested Congress has no right to legislate upon this subject; and if it does so, and the result of the legislation is a granting of this charter, we will only add to the already embarrassing complications that now exist in reference to the Nicaragua Canal.

The Secretary of State has expressed his opinion to Congress upon this subject, that until this territorial difficulty was adjusted we could not act intelligently upon this matter.

In conclusion, fully aware of what has been said here in favor of the immediate passage of this bill, that we should give opportunity to anybody and everybody to build any sort of transit across that isthmus, I repeat now that there is no analogy between this case and that of the Tehuantepec ship-railway. In the Tehuantepec ship-railway case there is a concession known to all men, placed before the Senate, given to Captain Eads by our sister southern Republic, Mexico.

In this case there is no concession, and there are engineering difficulties fully as great as in the case of Tehuantepec, if not greater. In addition to this, we are plunging ourselves, without knowing what has been done, into the internecine and international strife of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, committing ourselves in advance to whatever terms Nicaragua may impose upon this company. In my judgment the ultimate end will be that the Government of the United States will be called upon to construct this canal and to make good to Nicaragua any terms which that government may impose.

For these reasons I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I agree not to take five minutes, although I should like to take an hour, to restate to the Senate all the grounds upon which the Senate has hitherto acted by a large majority in favor of the ship-canal by Nicaragua; and I wish to say in passing, lest it should hereafter be quoted as admitted by agreement, that I dissent entirely from the observations of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the subject of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Having said that, I will just in three minutes reply to my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

In the first place, he seems to impute to the Committee on Foreign Relations some occult and improper purpose in suddenly reporting this bill after the Eads performance had got onto the Calendar. He does the Committee on Foreign Relations great injustice. Senator Miller, of California, years and years before Eads's scheme was ever conceived of in his own mind, introduced a bill in substance just like this, to provide for a United States corporation to build this canal at Nicaragua, and it went to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it provided, just as the Eads bill did in the first instance, for national aid. That seemed to be a difficulty as to any private corporation canal, and the matter did not get through. Therefore this had nothing to do with Mr. Eads at all.

Then at a former Congress there was a treaty pending, as everybody knows, which was to take it out of private hands altogether, and then at this present Congress this bill was introduced in the regular way, just as it had been years before by the then Senator from California.

Mr. MORGAN. Last June.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was introduced last June. Then, again, as to the nature of the concession, that we do not know what it is going to be, I find in the Eads bill that the Senator has had passed, that his company is not only to have the concession that it already has, but such others as may hereafter be secured from the Government of Mexico. That is in the Eads bill. Therefore that bill is a precise precedent for this one on that point.

Mr. VEST. Eads has a concession already.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but the charter which Congress has given to Eads is not only for that but for any other kind of concession, without any limitation and without any control by the United States over the nature of it, whereas in this bill it is provided in the fourth section that the company is to exercise such concessions as are not "inconsistent with this act or the laws of the United States, or the then existing treaty stipulations of the United States with the Government of Nicaragua," and then, in another place, with Costa Rica.

So the opposition to this bill upon such grounds, I must say with great respect, has not a single leg to stand upon. The simple question is whether the private ambition of Mr. Eads on a scheme that has never yet been tried on the face of the globe and which nobody yet knows can be accomplished, is to turn over the Nicaraguan canal to some foreign government instead of having it in some sense under the influence of citizens of the United States.

That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am authorized by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] to say that if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] desires to vote in favor of the bill, the Senator from Rhode Island is quite willing that he should.

Mr. COLQUITT. I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITTHORNE (when Mr. CULLOM'S name was called). The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If present, the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea," and the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. If I were not paired, I should vote "yea." I understand the Senator from New York, if present, would vote "yea." Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. Can his colleague tell me how he would vote if present?

Mr. KENNA. I am not positive about what my colleague would do, but I think the Senator may feel at liberty to vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," as I am informed. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when Mr. WALTHALL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is absent unavoidably. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. I am authorized to say that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] is paired with my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN]. The Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea," and my colleague would vote "nay," if present.

Mr. PLATT. My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent, paired on political questions with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea" on this bill.

Mr. CAMERON (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I prefer not to vote.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea" on this bill.

Mr. CAMERON. Then I shall let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 5; as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Allison, | Edmunds, | Mahone, | Sawyer, |
| Beck, | George, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Sherman, |
| Brown, | Gorman, | Morgan, | Spooner, |

| Camden, | Gibson, | Mitchell of Pa., | Walthall. |
| Chace, | Gray, | Palmer, | |
| Cockrell, | Hale, | Sabin, | |
| Cullom, | Hawley, | Saulsbury, | |

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the preamble will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations is to strike out the preamble, in the following words:

Whereas the United States has entered into certain treaty stipulations with the Republic of Nicaragua for the protection of a ship-canal constructed within its territory; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has, through a series of years, executed sufficient surveys to establish the fact that great commercial advantages are realizable through the constructure of a ship-canal via Lake Nicaragua and a considerable length of the river San Juan, and that these advantages are not to be found over any other route between the two seas; and

Whereas the commercial interests of the United States demand that the coasting trade of its citizens between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts shall not be subject to tolls imposed by a company other than one incorporated and controllable by Congress; and

Whereas certain persons have assurances that they will receive favorable concessions for the construction of a ship-canal provided they have corporate powers and can give satisfactory assurances to the Government of Nicaragua that they have the ability to construct the work without unreasonable delay: Therefore.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Whereas it is deemed desirable for the public interest of the United States that a ship-canal be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, on what is known as the Nicaragua route: Therefore.

The amendment to the preamble was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the bill be printed as passed, for the convenience of the Senate and other people.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. The appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose this bill will come up to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. That being so, I move an executive session.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw that motion for a single moment I wish to say that an executive session of a few minutes is all that I desire. It will not take many minutes to dispose of the matter I have in mind.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fourteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at 6 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 22, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 21, 1887.

MILITARY PROMOTIONS.

To be Chief Signal Officer, with the rank of brigadier-general, Capt. Adolphus W. Greely, Fifth Cavalry, vice Hazen, deceased.

First Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. Frederick K. Ward, to be captain, February 11, 1887, vice Parnell, retired from active service.

Second Lieut. J. F. Reynolds Landis, to be first lieutanant, February 11, 1887, vice Ward, promoted.

Fourth Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. Alexander Rogers, to be captain, February 11, 1887, vice Callahan, retired from active service.

Second Lieut. Alexander T. Dean, to be first lieutenant, February 11, 1887, vice Rogers, promoted.

Ninth Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. John Conline, to be captain, February 11, 1887, vice Valois, retired from active service.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Horace E. Morse, of New York, to be collector of customs for the district of Cape Vincent, in the State of New York, to succeed George W. Warren, whose term of office will expire by limitation on March 2, 1887.

Arthur K. Delaney, of Wisconsin, to be collector of customs for the district of Alaska, in the Territory of Alaska, in place of Peter French, suspended.

SURVEYORS OF CUSTOMS.

Owen McGloughlin, of Iowa, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, to succeed Robert Armstrong, whose term of office will expire by limitation March 2, 1887.

John M. Mercer, of Iowa, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Burlington, in the State of Iowa, to succeed George Frazee, whose term of office will expire by limitation March 2, 1887.

ASSISTANT TREASURERS.

Samuel N. Aldrich, of Massachusetts, to be assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, in place of Martin Parry Kennard, whose commission will expire by limitation March 1, 1887.

Henry Overstolz, of Missouri, to be assistant treasurer of the United States at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, in place of Albert G. Edwards, whose commission will expire by limitation March 2, 1887.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

Charles E. Broyles, of Alamosa, Colo., to be register of the land office at Del Norte, Colorado, vice Samuel C. Williams, who was confirmed at the last session of the Senate, but has failed to qualify.

DISTRICT JUDGE.

Amos M. Thayer, of Missouri, to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Missouri, in the place of Samuel Treat, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

James L. Hanna, to be postmaster at Oakland, in the county of Alameda and State of California, in the place of William E. Dargie, whose commission expires February 27, 1887.

William H. Cheney, to be postmaster at South Manchester, in the county of Hartford and State of Connecticut, in the place of William H. Cheney, whose commission expired February 15, 1887.

Thomas Buckley, to be postmaster at Plantsville, in the county of Hartford and State of Connecticut, in the place of Heber S. Ives, whose commission expires February 24, 1887.

H. A. Tanner, to be postmaster at De Land, in the county of Volusia and State of Florida, in place of Basil B. Bennett, removed.

George W. McDonald, to be postmaster at Attica, in the county of Fountain and State of Indiana, in the place of Albert S. Peacock, whose commission expires February 24, 1887.

Frederick A. Cummings, to be postmaster at Bangor, in the county of Penobscot and State of Maine, in the place of Augustus B. Farnham, whose commission expires February 19, 1887.

Charles Walker, to be postmaster at Lewiston, in the county of Androscoggin and State of Maine, in the place of Horace C. Little, whose commission expired February 12, 1887.

Simon Farnsworth, to be postmaster at Millbury, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in the place of Mary F. Bowen, whose commission expires February 21, 1887.

Hugh McLaughlin, to be postmaster at Iron Mountain, in the county of Menominee and State of Michigan, in the place of Charles E. Parent, whose commission expired February 15, 1887.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 21, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

PROPERTY OF AMERICANS DESTROYED AT ASPINWALL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith to the House of Representatives a report from the Secretary of State, in response to a resolution of that body of the 16th instant, inquiring as to the action of this Department to protect the interests of American citizens whose property was destroyed by fire caused by insurgents at Aspinwall in 1885.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, February 19, 1887.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. LAFFOON, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GROSVENOR, for three days, on account of professional business.

To Mr. JAMES, for two days.

To Mr. WINANS, indefinitely, on account of severe sickness in his family.

To Mr. FREDERICK, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds that House bill 1630 with the Senate amendments thereto, to increase the pension of the widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, has been improperly referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. If there be no objection that committee will be discharged from its consideration and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONTESTED ELECTION—KIDD VS. STEELE.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, presented a report in the contested-election case of Kidd vs. Steele, concluding with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Meredith H. Kidd was not elected a Representative in the Forty-ninth Congress from the eleventh district of Indiana, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That George W. Steele was duly elected such representative, and is entitled to retain his seat.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I shall ask the House to consider this report on Thursday next immediately after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there is another privileged matter postponed until next Thursday—what is known as the dependent pension bill, with the President's veto message.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this is the unanimous report of the committee, and need not occupy more than a few minutes.

REPEAL OF THE PRE-EMPTION LAWS, ETC.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the preemption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the discussion of that conference report is likely to consume some time. Those of us who are interested in the matter are quite willing that it shall be considered to-day, provided we can have sufficient time for its full discussion. I understand, however, that this is the day when motions by committees to suspend the rules are in order, and we who differ from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] as to what action the House should take on this bill are not willing that he and those who agree with him shall have an opportunity to present their views unless we can have an opportunity of presenting the other side. If we can have the matter fully considered to-day, and can have a full hearing, there is no disposition on our part to oppose the present consideration of the report; but otherwise we must object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. COBB. That is a matter for the House to determine.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question of consideration can not be raised, for the reason that this matter has been partially considered already, and has been postponed by a vote of the House. It is in order, however, to move to postpone it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this is the one day in the month when motions on the part of committees to suspend the rules are allowed, and this report can be called up any day. Therefore I do not think it is fair for gentlemen to come in here and press the consideration of this bill on the one day in the month which is set apart for motions by committees to suspend the rules, when, as I have said, this is a matter of privilege that they can call up for consideration at any time.

Mr. COBB. Regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. If necessary, I shall move to postpone the consideration of this conference report; but, before making that motion, I ask unanimous consent that, if we consider the report to-day, debate upon it shall be closed at 2 o'clock. If we can have that order made, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. STRAIT. I object.

Mr. PERKINS. That will not be satisfactory.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of this report until to-morrow.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry: Is not to-morrow after 3 o'clock set aside for eulogies on the late Senator Pike?

Mr. SPRINGER. There will be plenty of time to dispose of this report before the arrival of that hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] is correct.

Mr. DUNN. This subject will involve a long debate and perhaps can not be finished before 3 o'clock. I hope that the House will proceed with it to-day.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to two hours and a half, one hour on this side and an hour and a half on the other.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that debate on this report be limited to two hours and a half, one hour on one side and one hour and a half on the other.

Mr. STRAIT. That will be satisfactory on this side.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is then on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the further consideration of this report be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. SPRINGER. After the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. It is privileged, and can be called up at any time.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER, there were—ayes 40, noes 54.

Mr. SPRINGER. No quorum has voted. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. COBB were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 81.

So the motion of Mr. SPRINGER was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses to postpone the consideration of the report. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House I will endeavor to so elucidate the points of difference between the Senate and House on the pending measure as to enable every gentleman to judge of the merits of the controversy and to vote here to-day with a full knowledge of the true state of the case. I take it for granted that the members of the House are generally familiar with the existing public land laws. But with a view to starting right I will ask the indulgence of the House while I get before us the substantial provisions of such of these laws as are important to the present consideration. I read as follows:

SEC. 2259. Every person, being the head of a family, or widow, or single person, over the age of twenty-one years, and a citizen of the United States, or having filed a declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws, who has made, or hereafter makes, a settlement in person on the public lands subject to pre-emption, and who inhabits and improves the same, and who has erected or shall erect a dwelling thereon, is authorized to enter with the register of the land-office for the district in which such land lies, by legal subdivisions, any number of acres not exceeding one hundred and sixty, or a quarter-section of land, to include the residence of such claimant, upon paying to the United States the minimum price of such land.

SEC. 2260. The following classes of persons, unless otherwise specially provided for by law, shall not acquire any right of pre-emption under the provisions of the preceding section, to wit:

First. No person who is the proprietor of 320 acres of land in any State or Territory.

Second. No person who quits or abandons his residence on his own land to reside on the public lands in the same State or Territory.

SEC. 2261. No person shall be entitled to more than one pre-emptive right by virtue of the provisions of section 2259; nor where a party has filed his declaration of intention to claim the benefits of such provisions, for one tract of land, shall he file, at any future time, a second declaration for another tract.

SEC. 2262. Before any person claiming the benefit of this chapter is allowed to enter lands he shall make oath before the receiver or register of the land district in which the land is situated that he has never had the benefit of any right of pre-emption under section 2259; that he is not the owner of 320 acres of land in any State or Territory; that he has not settled upon and improved such land to sell the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use; and that he has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself; and if any person taking such oath swears falsely in the premises, he shall forfeit the money which he may have paid for such land, and all right and title to the same; and any grant or conveyance which he may have made, except in the hands of bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be null and void, except as provided in section 2288. And it shall be the duty of the officer administering such oath to file a certificate thereof in the public land office of such district, and to transmit a duplicate copy to the General Land Office, either of which shall be good and sufficient evidence that such oath was administered according to law.

SEC. 2263. Prior to any entries being made under and by virtue of the provisions of section 2259, proof of the settlement and improvement thereby required shall be made to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land district in which such lands lie, agreeably to such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and all assignments and transfers of the right hereby secured, prior to the issuing of the patent, shall be null and void.

That is the pre-emption law.

The commutation clause of the homestead law is simply another name for pre-emption, since it provides that the homesteader may at any time before the expiration of the five years' residence upon the land required by the homestead law pay the minimum price in cash for the land and obtain a patent "on making proof of settlement and cultivation as provided by law granting pre-emption rights."

The timber-culture law, which I will not consume time in reading, provides substantially that any person having the qualifications of a pre-emptor as to citizenship may enter not exceeding 160 acres of prairie land for the purpose of planting and cultivating trees thereon. If the entryman enters 160 acres of land he is required "to plant, protect, and keep in a healthy, growing condition for eight years 10 acres of timber;" if the entry is for only 80 acres he is required to plant 5 acres of trees; and if the entry be for 40 acres or less he is required to cultivate 2½ acres of trees. By making proof of compliance with the provisions of the act the entryman becomes entitled to a patent.

The desert-land law, which applies to the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada and to the several Territories of the United States, is short, and I will read it.

[SECTION 1]. That it shall be lawful for any person of the United States, or any person of requisite age "who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration to become such," and upon payment of 25 cents per acre, to file a declaration under oath with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years thereafter.

Provided, however, That the right to the use of water by the person so conducting the same on or to any tract of desert land of 640 acres shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation; and such right shall not exceed the amount of water actually appropriated and necessarily used for the purposes of irrigation and reclamation; and all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands, and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights.

Said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land if surveyed, and, if unsurveyed, shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey.

At any time within the period of three years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and receiver of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment to the receiver of the additional sum of $1 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding 640 acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him: Provided, That no person shall be permitted to enter more than one tract of land, and not to exceed 640 acres, which shall be in compact form.

SEC. 2. That all lands exclusive of timber lands and mineral lands which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands, within the meaning of this act, which fact shall be ascertained by proof of two or more credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the land office in which said tract of land may be situated.

These are the four laws which have occasioned so much discussion in Congress, in the press, and throughout the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what did we start in to do? Let us keep clearly before us the purpose we had in view at the inception of the pending legislation. We started in to repeal these laws. We started in to blot them out and eliminate them from the statute-books of the country, of course reserving unimpaired any rights already vested. We started in to repeal these laws, and preserve the public lands remaining for homestead settlements only.

Why? Why did we desire to repeal these laws? There are at least two reasons that induced your Committee on Public Lands to report a bill repealing them, and the same reasons, I presume, induced this House to pass it. First, under the operation of the existing statutes, even when honestly observed and administered, according to the practice which has obtained, whether that be in harmony with the original purpose of these laws or not, a single individual may make a commuted homestead entry of 160 acres, a pre-emption entry of 160 acres, a timber-culture entry of 160 acres, and a desert-land entry of 640 acres, making a total of 1,120 acres.

In view of the marvelous augmentation of our population and the constantly increasing demand for homes upon the one hand and the rapid decrease in the area of our public lands upon the other, it is deemed wisest and best to remove the opportunity of acquiring the public lands in large holdings by single individuals and to distribute them in less quantities to greater numbers. The United States certainly have the right to dispose of their lands as they please, but they should please to dispose of them in that way best calculated to promote the highest public good.

I took occasion once before to say in this House what I now beg leave to repeat, that whenever a citizen becomes a land-owner, sheltered by his own roof and with the means of comfortable subsistence at his command, he has a personal interest in maintaining social and public order, in preserving the institutions of his country, and thereafter may be relied upon as a safe, conservative, and law-abiding citizen. It is wise and best, therefore, and humane as well, that these common lands of the people should be so distributed as to furnish the greatest number of homes possible to those who seek them.

Eleven hundred and twenty acres are equal to seven homesteads of 160 acres each; or if we exclude the 640 acres that may be taken under the desert-land law, as not being adapted to ordinary homesteads because of their desert character, there will still remain 480 acres which may be taken by a single person under the commutation homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture laws, equal in amount to three ordinary homesteads of 160 acres each. Is it right, or fair, or just, where three or seven men, as the case may be, come seeking homes upon these lands that one should be permitted to take them all, and acquire a lordly estate to the exclusion of the rest?

We have thought not, and that is one of the reasons why we have regarded it of the highest moment that the proposed legislation should be enacted at the earliest possible period, even if it was true, which it is not, that there are no violations of the letter or the spirit of the present laws.

But there is a second reason, and a very urgent and imperative one, why these laws should be repealed, founded on the vast abuses that have grown up under them. These laws, enacted to subserve purposes the most beneficent and patriotic, have been, and are being, misused to defraud and despoil the people on a gigantic scale of their most precious inheritance. They were designed solely for the purpose of inducing actual settlement and occupancy of our public domain by thrifty and industrious farmers; but they have been seized upon and employed to serve the dishonest purposes of cormorants and land-grabbers, who, by sharp practices, are absorbing millions of acres of the public lands for speculative or unlawful purposes, to the deprivation and detriment of thousands of homeless men.

I know there are gentlemen in Congress and out who antagonize this policy inaugurated by the House, who assert that all this talk about the fraudulent appropriation of the public lands is a distortion and exaggeration of the truth. I do not believe it is. I believe fraudulent entries have been and are being made to an enormous and startling extent. It is a question of fact that ought to be susceptible of ascertainment, and I regard it as a fact already very definitely ascertained. And it is a fact which I now invite the House to aid me for a short time in examining, in anticipation of what I intend presently to say with reference to the deliberations of the conference committee.

I desire now to read from Executive Document No. 61, transmitted to the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress by the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 7th instant, with accompanying papers, setting forth the urgent necessity of stringent measures for the repression of the rapidly increasing evasions and violations of the laws relating to public lands, and of a special appropriation for this purpose, both in the current and approaching fiscal years.

The subject is presented for the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1883.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 7, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith copy of letter addressed to me, on the 3d instant, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with accompanying papers, in which he sets forth the urgent necessity of stringent measures to repress the rapidly increasing evasion and violation of the laws relating to public lands, and the need of a special appropriation for this purpose, both in the current and approaching fiscal years.

The evidences of fraudulent entry and illegal appropriation of public lands have of late accumulated to an alarming extent. As the quantity of public lands diminishes, their value naturally appreciates, so that now their market value frequently exceeds greatly the Government price for them. This stimulates entries for speculative purposes, and laws intended to benefit settlers in good faith are so perverted for fraudulent purposes that the actual settler finds it difficult, if not impossible, to get title to public lands without first paying tribute to the dishonest claimant. No sooner is the plat of survey filed in the local land office than claims (pre-emption, homestead, and timber-culture) are at once filed covering all the agricultural lands; claims that will, however, many of them, be relinquished for a consideration. This wholesale offer of relinquishment is, of course, prima facie proof of fraud. This class of claimants have been specially numerous and busy in the Territory of Dakota, where large bodies of public lands have recently been opened to settlement so that the territorial governor has felt constrained to call the attention of the Legislative Assembly to the subject.

Under the desert-land act, too, large tracts of public lands have been unlawfully secured.

Forged soldiers' additional homestead certificates have been located on a large belt of the most valuable timber lands in California, and the timber cut and removed.

In the grazing districts thousands and even hundreds of thousands of acres have been unlawfully inclosed, and bona fide settlers shut out.

In the views set forth in the Commissioner's letter I fully concur.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1883.

SIR: In my annual report for 1882 I made the following reference to fraudulent entries of public lands:

Investigations made during the past year have developed the existence of much fraud under the shield of the pre-emption, homestead, and timber-culture laws.

These investigations have been based upon complaints made to this office that great quantities of valuable coal and iron lands, forests of timber, and the available agricultural lands in whole regions of grazing country have been monopolized by persons who have caused fraudulent pre-emption and homestead entries to be made by their agents and employés.

A proper investigation of the numerous complaints that are constantly being received would require the employment of a large force of special agents, and involve an expense far beyond the customary appropriation by Congress available for that purpose. Efforts have been made to check unlawful acts of this character in the coal and iron regions of Alabama, the timber regions of Minnesota, the grazing country of California, and on agricultural lands in the Territory of Dakota by the special investigation of cases of alleged frauds, trials before local land officers to cancel illegal entries, and the institution of civil and criminal suits. These proceedings have, however, necessarily been confined to one or two localities in each of said States and Territories, owing to the limited facilities of this office for such service.

The rapid absorption of public lands under the various acts for their appropriation and disposal has brought the remaining lands into great request, and the marketable price of unimproved land in many parts of the country much exceeds the Government price.

This fact stimulates entries for speculative purposes, and the exceedingly liberal legislation of Congress designed to favor actual settlers has become an instrumentality for the fraudulent acquirement of titles and claims by means of which the actual settler is prevented from making settlement unless he enters into an expensive contest to clear the land from a fraudulent claim, or purchases at a speculative price the relinquishment of some claim of that character.

My information is that desirable agricultural lands in new States and Territories are, in many instances, and in some portions of the country apparently in all instances, covered with claims simultaneously with the filing in the local land office of the plats of township surveys.

These claims consist of pre-emption filings, soldiers' homestead filings, timber-culture entries, and homestead entries. Such filings and entries are frequently made by professed agents or attorneys, who in many cases immediately thereafter advertise relinquishments of the same for sale. The offering of relinquishments in this wholesale manner is prima facie evidence of the fraudulent character of claims proposed to be so relinquished. And yet such claims hold the land until the parties controlling the relinquishments can find customers in the persons of actual settlers or other parties who will buy the relinquishments from them, unless the fraudulent claims are removed by individual contests, or by an investigation and hearing at the instance of the Government.

Settlers seeking lands can not usually afford to expend the means or time necessary to the prosecution of a contest, and they are, therefore, compelled by the circumstances of the case either to abandon an attempt to make settlement or to buy their way to the public lands from persons who unlawfully control such lands.

In the Territory of Dakota, which cast 50,000 votes at the last election, the number of agricultural entries to the present date exceeds 150,000, and such entries are now being made at the rate of more than 50,000 yearly. As a very considerable portion of the inhabitants are settled on railroad lands and school sections, it is manifest that the number of entries of public lands is far beyond the actual occupation of such lands, and far beyond the entries that could legally have been made. The governor of this Territory in his last annual message to the Legislative Assembly makes the following statement:

"The well-intended acts of Congress, allowing the entry of 160 acres of land as a tree claim, have been so completely nullified by the manipulations of land-sharks that our broad and fertile prairies are comparatively treeless."

The governor recommends that a certain number of acres of land be exempted from Territorial and local taxation in order to encourage the growth of trees and homesteads, for the reason expressly given, that frauds have been so extensively perpetrated under the timber-culture act that the practical operation of that act has been to prevent instead of to promote the cultivation of trees.

These frauds are not confined to the Territory of Dakota, but extend to other States and Territories as well.

Under the desert-land act entries are procured to be made in the interest of others than the professed entryman, in violation of the restriction to one entry by any one person, and large tracts of land are thus unlawfully secured.

Desert entries are also frequently made upon good grass or agricultural lands which are leased for grazing or other purposes, or held for speculation. Such entries are also used to control the water supply upon which larger areas of country are dependent when no intention of complying with the law exists, or little or no attempt at such compliance is made.

Forged soldiers' additional homestead certificates have been located on a large belt of the most valuable timber land in California, and the timber cut and removed.

In the grazing districts of Western Kansas, in Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Idaho, Wyoming, and Montana, the title to agricultural lands and water rights is in large classes of cases obtained by perjury and fraud, followed or preceded by the unlawful inclosure of tracts of public lands, varying from some thousands to several thousand acres each, over which dominion is exercised by private parties to the exclusion of valid settlement rights under the laws of the United States. It appears also, in some cases, that lands so fenced in are parceled out according to the number of the cattle possessed by individual ranchmen, and the right to herd upon such public lands leased to them for a money consideration.

In California, Oregon, and Washington Territory collusive entries are made under the timber-land act for the purpose of procuring or controlling the timber in large quantities, contrary to the restrictions of the law. It is also represented that lands valuable for agriculture as well as for timber are entered under the timber-land act, and that titles to large bodies of timbered farming lands are thus illegally obtained by single individuals.

Valuable timber lands, and lands unfit for anything but timber, are fraudulently entered under the homestead and pre-emption laws in the above and other States and Territories.

Timber lands in Northern Minnesota have been so largely entered by false affidavits of settlement under these laws that I felt compelled during the past year to place 3,000,000 acres on the market at the minimum price on agricultural land to avoid such wholesale criminality.

A partial investigation in Alabama has disclosed the fact that the Government has been defrauded out of some millions of dollars through the unlawful entry of coal and iron lands under agricultural laws. Information of similar frauds committed in Colorado and elsewhere has been pressed upon my attention, but not investigated for want of means.

Complaints of frauds and appeals for the protection of bona fide settlers from the exactions and oppressions of those who commit or cause these frauds to be committed, are constantly coming up to this office. A flood-tide of illegal appropriations seems to be sweeping over the new States and Territories, threatening to engulf the entire public domain.

The time has arrived when, in my serious judgment, either a complete radical change in public land laws and administration, or some adequate means for enforcing the penalties of existing law, has become an alternative that can no longer be disregarded.

This office has never been furnished with facilities or means to secure a compliance with the requirements of the public-land laws.

I have been able to make investigations no further than to the extent of dem onstrating the necessity and utility of such service, but the little that has been done has produced such results as to satisfy me that it is within the administrative power of this Department to materially check these frauds, and that the cost of such service, however apparently large, is trifling in view of the pecuniary results alone that may be achieved, irrespective of larger considerations of the promotion of the general welfare.

There are now before this office claims in some initiative or progressive stage covering titles to more than 200,000,000 acres of land, of which some 50,000,000 acres are embraced in individual entries under general laws.

That a very considerable proportion of these claims are without validity or merit is indisputably true. Yet this office has been compelled for years past to treat doubtful claims as valid, and to pass over to claimants the title of the United States because it could not investigate the facts.

The same course must largely be continued unless a change in means and measures shall be effected.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND, Commissioner.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what a Republican President, Secretary, and Commissioner had to say on this subject. Now let us turn to the other side. President Cleveland, in his message to Congress at the beginning of the present session, has this to say:

The recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office looking to the better protection of public lands and of the public surveys, the preservation of national forests, the adjudication of grants to States and corporations and of private land claims, and the increased efficiency of the public land service, are commended to the attention of Congress. To secure the widest distribution of public lands in limited quantities among settlers for residence and cultivation and thus make the greatest number of individual homes, was the primary object of the public land legislation in the early days of the Republic. This system was a simple one. It commenced with an admirable scheme of public surveys, by which the humblest citizen could identify the tract upon which he wished to establish his home. The price of lands was placed within the reach of all the enterprising, industrious, and honest pioneer citizens of the country. It was soon, however, found that the object of the laws was perverted, under the system of cash sales, from a distribution of land among the people to an accumulation of land capital by wealthy and speculative persons.

To check this tendency a preference right of purchase was given to settlers on the land, a plan which culminated in the general pre-emption act of 1841. The foundation of this system was actual residence and cultivation. Twenty years later the homestead law was devised to more surely place actual homes in the possession of actual cultivators of the soil. The land was given without price, the sole conditions being residence, improvement, and cultivation. Other laws have followed, each designed to encourage the acquirement and use of land in limited individual quantities. But in later years these laws, through vicious administrative methods and under changed conditions of communication and transportation, have been so evaded and violated that their beneficent purpose is threatened with entire defeat. The methods of such evasions and violations are set forth in detail in the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office. The rapid appropriation of our public lands without bona fide settlements or cultivation, and not only without intention of residence, but for the purpose of their aggregation in large holdings, in many cases in the hands of foreigners, invites the serious and immediate attention of the Congress.

The energies of the land department have been devoted during the present administration to remedy defects and correct abuses in the public land service. The results of these efforts are so largely in the nature of reforms in the processes and methods of our land system as to prevent adequate estimate; but it appears by a compilation from the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the immediate effect in leading cases which have come to a final termination has been the restoration to the mass of public lands of 2,750,000 acres; that 2,370,000 acres are embraced in investigations now pending before the Department or the courts, and that the action of Congress has been asked to effect the restoration of 2,790,000 acres additional; besides which 4,000,000 acres have been withheld from reservation, and the rights of entry thereon maintained.

I recommend the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture acts, and that the homestead laws be so amended as to better secure compliance with their requirements of residence, improvement, and cultivation for the period of five years from date of entry, without commutation or provision for speculative relinquishment. I also recommend the repeal of the desert-land laws unless it shall be the pleasure of the Congress to so amend these laws as to render them less liable to abuses. As the chief motive for an evasion of the laws, and the principal cause of their result in land accumulation instead of land distribution, is the facility with which transfers are made of the right intended to be secured to settlers, it may be deemed advisable to provide by legislation some guards and checks upon the alienation of homestead rights and lands covered thereby until patents issue.

I thought I had the last annual report of the Secretary of the Interior, but I do not find it among my papers here. However, it is to the same general effect. It is corroborative of what the President and the Commissioner say.

I desire now to read from the reports of the present Commissioner of the Land Office. He says:

At the outset of my administration I was confronted with overwhelming evidences that the public domain was being made the prey of unscrupulous speculation and the worst forms of land monopoly through systematic frauds carried on and consummated under the public land laws. My predecessor had for three years called the attention of Congress to the extent and magnitude of fraudulent appropriations of public lands, and, as shown by his general and special reports, had found it necessary to suspend the issue of patents in several States and Territories, either wholly or in certain classes of entries and special districts of country. Reports of special agents, registers and receivers, and inspectors of surveyors-general, and local land officers, communications from United States attorneys and other officials, and letters from public men and private citizens throughout the country, were laid before me, all detailing one common story of widespread, persistent public land robbery committed under guise of the various forms of public land entry.

I desire especially to call attention to the fact that the predecessor of Commissioner Sparks, in view of the magnitude of the frauds committed on the public lands, had found it necessary "to suspend the issue of patents in several States and Territories, either wholly or in certain classes of entries and special districts of country." It would be well for gentlemen to remember that fact when they come to assail the present administration. Perhaps if gentlemen were more familiar with the facts or more attentive to the truth of history, they would be less personal if not more moderate in their denunciations.

Here, then, we have the concurring testimony of Republican and Democratic Presidents, Secretaries, and Commissioners, all breathing the same common story of spoliation and robbery. But let us go a little farther still. I read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 19, 1886.

SIR: During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, there were canceled or held for cancellation for fraud two hundred and eighty-five entries in Nebraska and one hundred and fourteen in Kansas, embracing about 63,000 acres of land. There are still a large number of cases not yet acted on for the want of sufficient force. A large majority of these entries were made in the interest of cattle companies or by individuals for cattle and sheep ranches.

Fifty-five entries of land lying within the Brighton and Finlin ranches in the North Platte district, Nebraska, have been canceled or held for cancellation upon report of agents or testimony taken at hearings, showing that all the entries were made by members of the companies or by their employés for the companies, and that the claimants neither improved nor resided upon their claims.

A number of other entries of land within said companies' ranches are awaiting action and are of the same character as those examined.

In the McCook and North Platte districts, Nebraska, one hundred and sixty-six entries were made by procurement of one Arnold in the interest of cattlemen. These entries have all been canceled or held for cancellation, and Arnold is now a fugitive from justice.

Alleged claimants have relinquished during the last year about nineteen hundred entries in the Wa Keeney office, Kansas; six hundred in the Larned office, Kansas; sixteen hundred in the McCook office, Nebraska, and eighteen hundred in the Valentine office, Nebraska, embracing in all about nine hundred thousand acres of land.

It is estimated that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, at least six thousand entries were relinquished in Nebraska.

The greater portion, if not all, of these entries were made solely for speculation and with no intention of complying with the law, and the relinquishments were undoubtedly caused by the investigations that were being made by special agents.

Very respectfully,

B. B. SIMMES,
Chief of Special Service Division.

Hon. WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Again, on the 3d day of November, 1884, which was prior to Mr. Cleveland's election, Inspector A. R. Greene, who is a reputable citizen of Kansas, and a Republican, made an exhaustive report to the Department, in which he says:

Generally speaking, I believe that fraudulent entries of the public lands include a large per cent. of the whole number, excepting possibly cash entries.

As to the proportion of land entered under the timber-culture act that is not improved as required by that act, I give it as my opinion that in Kansas, Nebraska, and Dakota the proportion is 90 per cent. to 10 per cent. of bona fide and possibly successful cultivation.

Special agent Webster Eaton, writing to the Department from Duluth, Minn., October 28, 1884, says:

I think I am fully warranted in saying that less than one-thirtieth of the claims taken in the Duluth United States land district are taken for actual settlement.

Special Agent Thomas W. Jaycox, writing officially from Aberdeen, Dak., October 25, 1884, says:

In my opinion, not more than 30 per cent. of the land in this district entered under the provisions of the pre-emption and homestead laws is occupied by actual settlers. The practice largely prevails of immediately abandoning the land when cash entry is made for the same. Fully 75 per cent. of the entries made under the provisions of the pre-emption laws are made for speculative purposes, and not for a home and for cultivation.

The register and receiver at Garden City, Kans., in a report dated November 20, 1884, have this to say:

We believe that in the territory situated between the Arkansas River and the Southern Kansas line there are many fraudulent or evasive entries of public lands, and through the medium of such entries title to Government lands passes into the hands of large cattle and land companies.

And this from the register and receiver at McCook, Nebr., November 26, 1884:

All or nearly all the lands bordering on streams have been taken under the homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture laws. Proofs are made, and we hear it reported that deeds are executed soon after to other parties, but to whom we have no means of knowing at this office.

And the following, from the report of Special Agent W. H. Goucher, dated San Francisco, November 17, 1884:

I would estimate that but 5 per cent. of the entries made under the timber-culture and desert-land laws are in good faith and with the intent of accomplishing the purposes contemplated in those acts. Ninety per cent. of all the entries under these laws made in this district were filed within the past two years.

I call especial attention to the fact that these reports, coming from every section of the West where there are public lands, are the reports of Republican officials made under a Republican administration. They show what Commissioner Sparks meant when he said:

At the outset of my administration I was confronted with overwhelming evidences that the public domain was being made the prey of unscrupulous speculation and the worst forms of land monopoly.

They are a complete answer to his traducers who charge that the allegations of fraud in the entry of public lands are given out by disreputable officials of his own creation, employed to prepare fictitious reports in justification of a wanton and wicked war inaugurated and waged by the Commissioner against the poor and honest settlers of the West, and they ought to close their lips if they have aught of shame.

Mr. Speaker, I could consume an hour in reading reports of like tenor from nearly every inspector, agent, register, receiver, and all other officials of the Government connected with this service throughout the country under this and previous administrations. But it would be a mere repetition of what I have read. I think I have read enough. It may be objected, however, that all this is rather an expression of opinion of these officers than specific evidence of the frauds alleged. That may be true, but it is the unanimous opinion of all the sworn officers of the law connected with this service, of both political parties, from the President down, based upon personal observation or upon overwhelming evidence in their possession. In the last report of Commissioner Sparks there are over twenty pages of printed matter detailing specific instances of fraudulent entries, which are illustrative of hundreds and thousands of others which have been or are now pending before the Department. Let me read a little of that:

Some time ago a prominent public man in the Northwest employed an agent to go to the Duluth district and hire men to pre-empt lands for his benefit. He placed the requisite amount of money in a bank to the agent's credit to enable him to pay each entryman a specified sum and his own expenses while engaged in the business. The agent, after selecting the lands, procured men to make entries, offering each person $125, a part to be paid when the entry was made and the balance at a subsequent date. Thirty-one men were induced to accept this offer, and they were taken to the lands, where they remained three days and then left, after having piled up a few logs on the land and covered them with brush. The parties shortly afterwards made their proofs and entries and were paid the sum agreed upon, and they then conveyed the lands, in accordance with the contract, to a company of which the principal in the transaction was a member. The proofs were false in every particular, and the entries were obtained by perjury and fraud.

The evidence recently furnished in these cases is particularly explicit as to all of the details, and was given by men who took a leading part in the commission of the crime. The agent testified to the agreement with his principal and to all the steps taken by him to carry it out. He furnished his employer's original letters, directing him to hire the men to pre-empt the lands, and the drafts on the bank by which each entryman was paid the first installment of the sum agreed upon, together with the account kept by him at the time, showing each payment. The entrymen themselves corroborate the agent in every particular, and give all the facts and circumstances of their being hired to make the entries, their utter failure to comply with the law in any respect, and the conveyance of the land in accordance with the agreement made prior to entry. These witnesses are unimpeached, and their evidence is in no way contradicted, although the parties in interest have had ample opportunity to do so if they desired. By this single exposure nearly 5,000 acres of pine timber land has been, or soon will be, restored to market.

Again:

In Dakota fraudulent entries are generally made for purposes of individual speculation by residents of towns, and by visitors, traveling persons, temporary sojourners, and others having actual residence in other States and Territories. Inhabitants of towns erect on their respective claims an unsubstantial house, which they designate a dwelling, make a pretense of breaking a few acres, visit the lands occasionally, and make their final proofs without ever having an actual residence on their claims, their places of business and homes being in town.

Again:

In the Garden City district, Kansas, and elsewhere, a number of land firms have been reported for disbarment on account of their illegitimate practices and unprofessional conduct. It seems that these men first procure parties, who have no expectation of going upon the public lands or complying with the law, to make homestead and timber-culture entries and pre-emption filings, or make the entries and filings themselves of the valuable lands. The entryman then relinquishes the entry to the United States and places the relinquishment in the hands of the land agent, who holds it until he can get a purchaser. If it is not sold before the entry becomes subject to forfeiture, a collusive contest is brought against it in the interest of the holder of the relinquishment for the purpose of retaining control over the land. The ultimate purchaser of the relinquishment procures the right of entry by filing the relinquishment and immediately presenting his application to enter the land. These firms all advertise relinquishments for sale, in many cases specifying the lands and the prices asked for the relinquishment, the prices varying from fifty to five hundred dollars and upward. They also employ "rustlers" to induce or force settlers to purchase relinquishments from their employers.

The settler, who is generally a stranger and unacquainted in the county, spends a few days in riding over the country and examining the vacant lands. He finds, as the "rustlers" had told him, that all the vacant Government lands are worthless, and that his only opportunity to get a home is to buy a relinquishment or to contest an entry. The latter course he soon learns is expensive and the result doubtful, as the land agents will throw every obstacle in his way to defeat him. One of these firms hire five or six "rustlers" and clerks. They have a cot or bed in front of the land office door for their men to sleep upon at night, so that when the hour arrives for opening the office they may be able to enter first and manipulate their relinquishments and contests and keep out legitimate claimants. It is shown that by this means they held possession of the land office door on one occasion for thirty days, and intimidated all actual settlers who attempted to make entries, and defeated them in every effort to do so. On one occasion the head "rustler" rushed into the office with his crowd of followers and presented, among other papers, a relinquishment executed before a notary public in the firm's office, together with an application of one of the parties to enter the tract. The register attempted to question the applicant, but he was warned by the "rustler" to answer no questions, and was immediately hurried away to prevent the Government agent, who was also present, from interviewing him. This firm appear as attorneys of record for two different contestants against the same entry, the same grounds of contest being alleged in both cases. These and similar contests are filed to enable the attorneys to retain control of the land.

I will call attention to but one other case:

A case in another section of Wyoming will be cited to further illustrate the abuses and manner of violating the provisions of the desert-land act.

Three brothers and two other parties associated themselves together for the purpose of taking up a cattle ranch upon the public lands. One of the brothers was a resident of Massachusetts, and another member of the association was a resident of Denver, Colo. The tracts selected lie along a stream, and are good agricultural lands, producing crops without irrigation. Each of the parties made a desert entry, with a view to a single or consolidated ranch, and in such manner as to control the water-rights and thereby render the adjacent lands valueless to any other person. Something over 2,000 acres were thus entered, and the control of the water-rights and a large ranch in the vicinity obtained.

After holding the lands less than a year the claims were concertedly sold to third parties for $48,000; and in the course of three or four months the grantees constructed a water ditch down the valley across a portion of the claims, and then had the final proofs made, showing the reclamation of each tract, without ever conducting or distributing water over the lands. The proofs were false in showing the lands to be desert in character, false in alleging that they had been reclaimed, and false in swearing that the entries were made in good faith for the benefit of entrymen, they having previously conveyed the lands. The two members of the firm who had charge of the ranch admitted to the agent that they had sold out prior to entry and had not reclaimed the lands.

Time will not allow me to multiply these instances, which can be done almost indefinitely; but this is sufficient. It ought to satisfy this House and the country that our public lands have been plundered, under the pretense and form of law, to an enormous extent. It was to escape these evils and to terminate these larcenies that your Committee on Public Lands brought in here a bill repealing the laws under cover of which these outrages were perpetrated. The remedy we proposed was plain, simple, immediate, and complete.

The House passed the bill under a suspension of the rules by a vote of nearly 5 to 1, and sent it over to the Senate. That body was not satisfied with the bill. It struck out all after the enacting clause and substituted a bill of its own. The House declined to accept the Senate substitute, and a committee of conference was appointed, and the Speaker did me the honor to name me as one of the conferees on the part of the House. We had various ineffectual conferences during the last session, and finally reported that we could not agree. An earnest effort was then made by several gentlemen upon this floor to induce the House to recede from its disagreement, but happily without success.

A new conference committee was appointed, of which I was also a member, and we have had repeated conferences during the present session, but have been wholly unable to agree. Our report is before you, and that the House may act with the most perfect intelligence I propose now to unfold the nature and results of our deliberations, so that the points of difference may be clearly disclosed.

The House bill did two important things. It repealed the pre-emption, timber-culture, homestead-commutation, and desert-land laws, and then provided that hereafter no public lands, with some very limited and special exceptions, should be sold at public sale or be subject to private cash entry, the idea being to preserve them for homesteads only, or in cases where they are not adapted to such uses to save them from unlawful appropriation until some new and better method of disposition can be devised.

The Senate substitute also repeals the pre-emption, timber-culture, and homestead-commutation laws. To that extent the bills agree. The Senate substitute does not repeal the desert-land law, but amends it, and amends it so as very greatly to improve the present law. Personally I should greatly prefer to repeal the desert-land act, but the judgment of many Senators and Representatives is so emphatic against such a course that your committee have felt disposed to yield this point and accept the Senate amendments of the desert law with some modifications, about which there would be, probably, no trouble in reaching an agreement. Now, in this view of the case, if the Senate had kept to the track we would have reached our destination long ago, and have accomplished in the main what we started out to do.

But the Senate did not keep to the track. The substitute embraces some additional propositions. In the first section of the Senate substitute this clause appears:

That all entries made under the pre-emption or homestead laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold prior to the 9th day of June, 1886, and after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the General Land Office of such sale.

To that the House conferees objected as simply amounting to a confirmation of all the fraudulent entries heretofore made under the pre-emption and homestead laws.

Mr. OATES. As I understand it the Senate amendment only requires proof of the naked fact of sale, and does not require proof as to the manner of acquiring title, whether in pursuance of the law, in good faith, or otherwise.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The law would presume it was a bona fide transaction in the absence of proof.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The amendment of the Senate says the sale must be to a bona fide purchaser for value, and the only thing that would be necessary to be shown by the claimant in order to receive his patent would be that such a sale was made.

Mr. OATES. The naked fact of sale!

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes; the naked fact of sale without going back of that—without inquiring beyond the bona fides of the sale.

However, Mr. Speaker, this is not now a matter of much practical importance, because in our more recent conferences during the present session, as I understand it, the Senate conferees have agreed that that provision might be eliminated. In the colloquy which took place on Saturday between my colleagues on the committee, Mr. COBB and Mr. STRAIT, the latter gentleman stated that the Senate managers had agreed that this provision might go out; and the gentleman from Indiana said that it was to go out on condition that the eighth section was agreed to. I am inclined to the opinion that the gentleman from Indiana was substantially correct. But it is immaterial——

Mr. COBB. That is just what I said, that it was immaterial.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. It is immaterial, because the eighth section reiterates substantially the same provision.

We got rid of the provision which I have read by the Senate conferees agreeing that it might be stricken out.

But the seventh section of the Senate substitute also contains a proposition to which the House conferees objected. I will read it:

SEC. 7. That any person entitled to enter a homestead under section 2289 of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes shall, by complying with all the provisions of said chapter relating to the entry of homesteads, be entitled to make one entry as a homestead of one-half section or less of unappropriated mountainous land, as defined by this section, and in a compact form. Any 40-acre tract of the surveyed public lands, exclusive of mineral lands, three-fourths of which is so mountainous and rough that it can not be plowed and cultivated, shall be deemed mountainous land within the meaning of this section, which fact shall be ascertained by proof of two or more credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the proper land office. The determination of what is mountainous land shall be subject to the decision and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, who may provide for cross-examination of witnesses and for the production of proof on behalf of the United States before the register and the receiver as to the character of the lands at the date of the application or of final entry: Provided, That all the provisions of the homestead law relating to final proof, fees, contests, citizenship, relinquishments, residence, death, and transfers of the homestead claim shall apply to entries under this section: And provided further, That this section shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, Colorado, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico.

This is a new departure. It proposes to establish an entirely new classification of the public lands. It is illy conceived and unsound in theory, and would be open to great abuses in practice. But disposed to compromise where we could, with the hope of reaching some agreement, the House conferees proposed to accept this section.

That left but two substantial points of disagreement or dispute between us, and they are predicated on the eighth and tenth sections of the Senate substitute.

The tenth section, as far as I need to read it, is as follows:

That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands, the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

The proposition embodied in the tenth section differs from the House proposition in this: Under the law as it now stands whenever any lands have been offered at public sale and not sold, they are thereafter subject to private cash entry. There are vast bodies of lands now in that condition, principally in the Southern States. If the House proposition should be accepted those lands would be withdrawn from private entry, and be held for homestead entries only. If the Senate proposition prevails their present status will not be affected.

It is claimed by those who favor the Senate bill that these Southern lands can not be used for agriculture, not being adapted to homestead purposes, and are valuable only for the timber growing upon them. It is argued that if we exclude the right of cash entry they will go to waste, the timber be stolen, and all that. This I can neither affirm nor deny.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him here?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. What I wish to say is in the line of his argument. I hold in my hand a letter from a receiver of public moneys in my own State in which he informs me that there are several syndicates formed that are taking up now daily all of the lands in that State by cash entry so that there will be, if they are permitted to go on, in a short time no public lands for homesteads.

Mr. COBB. That is the way things are all over the country.

Mr. STRAIT. That, I suppose, relates to the offered lands only.

Mr. OATES. All have been offered in the Southern States.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I know it to be a fact that large companies or syndicates, both from the North and South, within the last year have acquired hundreds of thousands of acres of these lands, and such operations are constantly going on and vast tracts being concentrated in single holdings. They may not be useful for the purposes of agriculture, but they have large timber value, and these gentlemen who are purchasing them will dispose of them by and by at a large profit, or else denude them of timber and amass great fortunes out of the beneficence and charity of the Government, and neither the General Government nor the States will realize any substantial benefit. Hence it is better in any view of the case to withdraw these lands from sale and put an end to the present abuses, and if it is necessary that they should be sold in order to utilize them we can in the future devise some method for their disposition more in harmony with the public interests.

Mr. OATES. If they can be held all will soon be taken up for homesteads.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman from Alabama says if they could be held they would nearly all be taken up for homesteads; and he is far more familiar with the facts than I am, and perhaps as familiar with the facts and the conditions surrounding these lands as any gentleman upon the floor.

This section, however, was not very fully discussed. We might have reached some agreement with regard to it, had it not been for the irreconcilible differences between us upon the provisions of the eighth section. That is the stumbling block which the Senate has put in the pathway of this important legislation. If this legislation fails it will be because of that section, whose monstrous provisions I, for one, will never consent to.

Let us examine this section a little in detail; let us analyze it and see whether the House ought to accept it. Perhaps, however, it is proper I should state that an agreement was substantially arrived at as to the first clause of the section. That clause, as it came from the Senate, is as follows:

SEC. 8. That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and under this act, all contests or protests on the part of the Government, or any individual, concerning the land entered, shall be instituted within nine months after final entry and issue of the duplicate receiver's receipt, and not afterwards.

The Senate conferees agreed to strike out the words "or protests," in the second line, and the words "the Government or," in the third line; so as to limit the application to individual contests alone, and the House conferees consented to reduce the time within which such contests might be instituted from nine months, as it appears in the text, to six months, so that the clause as thus modified would read:

That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and under this act, all contests * * * on the part of * * * any individual concerning the land entered shall be instituted within six months after final entry and issue of the duplicate receiver's receipt, and not afterwards.

Mr. STRAIT. Did not the Senate conferees agree to strike out all in section 8 down to the word "provided" in the sixth line?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. They agreed to amend it, as I have stated.

Mr. STRAIT. To strike it out down to line 6?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I did not so understand it.

Mr. STRAIT. I did.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. What the Senate conferees agreed to, what the understanding reached was, if any was reached, in conference in regard to that, I think I have correctly stated. The Senate conferees agreed to strike out the words "or protest," in the second line, and the words "the Government or," in the third line, and the House conferees agreed to reduce the time within which the contest might be entered from nine months to six months.

Mr. STRAIT. That was in the first conference. In the second they proposed to strike out all down to the word "provided."

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Whether we agreed to strike it out or amend it is not material. It is sufficient if we agreed. After we had conferred there was no disagreement between us with regard to the provision I have read.

I read further:

Provided, That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land office, until such error has been corrected.

We agreed to that provision, which merely contemplates the correction of clerical errors. So far no public or private interest is jeopardized by these provisions, with the amendments I have suggested in the second and third lines as having been agreed to in the conference.

But the remainder of the section, from the beginning of the second proviso to the end, is the part about which we have been wholly unable to reach any satisfactory conclusion. With all due respect to the Senate which proposes it, and to the estimable and distinguished gentlemen in both Houses who advocate it, it seems to me this section announces propositions and contemplates results which are wholly indefensible, and in open conflict with every correct principle of sound administration, and puts in imminent peril the most important public interests.

Unless we believe that all the Presidents, Secretaries, Commissioners, registers, receivers, and all other officials associated with the administration of our public-land laws for the last six years, are endeavoring deliberately to impose upon the Congress, or else are themselves the silly dupes of a most strange and inexplicable deception, we are forced to believe that individuals and corporations are to-day demanding patents for hundreds of thousands of acres of land, and using every artifice to secure them, whose claims are permeated with the grossest fraud and the rankest perjury. And now, with this knowledge and this conviction full and fresh upon us, how can we entertain a proposition which seeks to recognize and confirm, by legislative action, these fraudulent titles, and enable these rascals to triumph instead of sending them to the penitentiary for their crimes?

Sir, I will never consent to convert this Capitol into an arena where fraud may come with brazen and unblushing cheek and overthrow public right or private virtue and receive reward from the hand of power or applause from the public agents of the people. I state this strongly, but not too strongly; and I do so with the knowledge that some gentlemen at both ends of the Capitol, for whom I entertain the highest respect and who are in every way above reproach, have indicated a purpose to support this Senate bill rather than have this legislation fail; but I can not believe they have fully matured the force and effect of the section I am now discussing.

Can I be mistaken in my judgment as to the effect of this section? Will any gentleman seriously contend that I am? Let us see; let us examine it. I will read the objectionable part of the section:

Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead or pre-emption laws or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

Let me read the first clause again:

Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend, &c.

Now, what does that clause mean—unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration.

In the construction of statutes the intention of the legislature is the controlling principle. The general purpose contained in this proposition is to transfer entries contested after final proof, on account of fraud, from the Land Department to the Attorney-General and the courts. That general rule is to apply to all entries where the Commissioner is satisfied of the existence of fraud, except in cases where the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for value. What purpose can there be in making that exception, unless it be to confirm the title in such cases to the purchaser?

It could not be the intention to leave such cases still subject to the jurisdiction and present practice of the Land Department. The avowed purpose of transferring these contests to the Law Department is to obtain a judicial settlement of the disputes, and the burden of proof and of the whole controversy is thrown upon the Government. It is intended to confer some benefit and advantage upon the claimant; and it can not be the intention to confer any benefit or advantage upon the entryman which is denied to his purchaser. It can not be the intention to send the entryman to court and keep his purchaser in the Department.

The logical construction of this proposition leads inevitably to the conclusion that the intention is to confirm the title where the entered lands have been sold to an innocent purchaser for value. Now, I think it entirely safe and reasonable to say that in nearly every case of fraudulent entry the claimant who will appear to demand a patent will be "a bona fida purchaser for a valuable consideration;" and his papers and proofs will be as nearly perfect as human ingenuity can make them.

If "it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser," is the language. Of course it will always so appear; there will be no lack of tip-top prima facie cases. But suppose the Commissioner has facts in his possession which may make any given case appear otherwise to him. What is he to do? Issue the patent or send it over to the Attorney-General? If he is not bound by the prima facie case presented, but can sit as a sort of intermediate judge upon the bona fides of all these transactions, we can see at a glance the inextricable confusion into which all this great business would be thrown and the immense disadvantage to which the Government would be subjected. No, sir; the result of this clause will be to confirm and perfect the title in all cases where the original entryman has conveyed the land and the purchaser appears as the claimant.

Again, take the last proviso:

That after the lapse of two years from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead or pre-emption laws, or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him.

There can not be any dispute about that provision. It makes a receiver's receipt which is two years old conclusive; and in the absence of a contest or protest instituted before the expiration of two years from the date of the receipt, the Commissioner will have no discretion about issuing a patent when the claimant comes to demand it, either in the person of the entryman himself or his assignee. The section has a retrospective as well as a prospective operation.

That is to say, it refers to cases where the receiver's receipts have been already issued as well as to cases where they may be hereafter issued; and all outstanding receipts two years old would be conclusive and entitle the holders to patents. The proposed enactment would put such cases beyond the reach of investigation, unless it should happen that a contest or protest was now pending.

But, looking alone to the future, let us see what the practical operation of this provision would be should it become a law. A man may employ twenty or thirty men to go somewhere on the vast public domain in the Western States or Territories, at a point remote from the land office, and enter ten or fifteen thousand acres of land. In due time the witnesses go fifty or a hundred miles or more across the country to the land office, and some smart lawyer is employed to prepare their papers and proofs. Everything is made to appear in ship-shape. The receiver, without any means or opportunity of inquiry, hurried along by the press of business, completes the transaction, so far as he has authority to act, and issues his receipt. The entrymen thereupon convey the lands to their employer, who "lays low" for two years and then turns up to demand his patents. The Commissioner, when he comes to examine the papers, may discover a great deal to excite his suspicions. The location of all the tracts in the same vicinity, the similarity of the proofs, the simultaneous conveyance to the same purchaser of all the entries, the uniformity of method in the whole proceeding may convince him to a moral certainty that fraud has entered into the transaction. But he would be powerless.

He could not, as he now may, hold the entries for investigation. He would have no authority to dispatch an agent to see whether any improvements had been made on the lands, to examine the entrymen, or to take any steps to ascertain whether the law had been complied with. He could do nothing but shut his eyes, grit his teeth, and certify the lands for patent. The claimant would be master of the situation.

Mr. Speaker, this is an immense business over which the Commissioner of the Land Office presides. Our public lands cover a vast territory, and in the present overcrowded condition of business in the Land Office, with the small force at his command, it is simply impossible for the Commissioner, within the period of two years, to so investigate the thousands upon thousands of entries now pending in his Department as to act upon them with any sort of safety or satisfaction.

I know of no way by which the Commissioner can satisfactorily investigate suspicious entries except by employing the services of a special agent. Now there are only some fifteen or twenty of these special agents, and in view of the attacks made upon them here an appropriation for their support may be withheld at any time by one branch of Congress, and thus close the door to every avenue of investigation. But under the most favorable circumstances the work that could be done would be imperfect and incomplete, and every day would carry a greater or less number of entries beyond the range of investigation and under the protection of this last proviso of the eighth section.

No, sir. Enact this proposition into law, and the result will be to confirm practically all the entries heretofore made, except the comparatively few in which formal protests or contests have been already filed; and those few would be sent to the Attorney-General for his examination, and be either returned to the Commissioner for patent or transmitted to a district attorney for suit.

And now that brings me to the "court clause" of the eighth section, to which I ask your attention for a few moments, and then I shall conclude. The section provides that, whenever the Commissioner is satisfied that fraud has entered into the title acquired by any claimant, unless the claimant be one of those heavenly creatures known as an "innocent purchaser"—

The Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained.

According to the language of this provision, whenever the Commissioner suspends an entry and certifies it to the Attorney-General that officer will have but one thing to do, namely, to determine whether the facts laid before him make out a good case of fraud. If he decides that question affirmatively he is required "to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside the title" of the claimant, with a view to restoring the lands to the public. That provision is imperative, and imposes a duty on the Attorney-General which he is required to perform at once.

Now, the truth is, Mr. Speaker, that under the present departmental practice, which has been in force for years, less than 10 per cent. of the claimants whose claims have been held for cancellation ever appear to make any contest or show any cause why the suspension should be vacated and a patent issued, even after they have been given personal notice and ample opportunity to appear either at the local office or before the Commissioner, as they prefer, and establish their right.

The fact is that the Department acts with great deliberation and care, so as to protect the public interest and inflict as little injury upon innocent and honest claimants as possible. And the result is that very few mistakes are made. When mistakes do occur the honest claimant is not slow to bring it to the attention of the Department, and every opportunity is given him to do so; and, on the other hand, the Department always hastens to make all necessary and proper corrections.

Suspensions of this character are rarely made except in cases where the charge of fraud is well founded in fact. Hence it is the fraudulent claimant does not care to make a contest, and invite not only a prosecution for his fraud in the first instance, but incur the danger of an additional prosecution for perjury. He simply abandons the claim and lets the cancellation go by default. But if the proposition, as it now appears in the eighth section, should be enacted into law, these rascals who are detected in their frauds would not be permitted to sneak away and abandon their claims.

The Attorney-General would examine the facts submitted to him by the Commissioner, and, if he should deem those facts sufficient to establish fraud, he would transmit the papers to the proper district-attorney, and that officer would institute a proceeding of some kind, in chancery I presume, against the claimant, to set aside his "title." There may be no improvements whatever on the lands, no pretence of complying with the law, and the fraudulent claimant, alarmed at discovery, may have thrown up the sponge and abandoned the field. Still these suits must go on, the business of the courts be encumbered and delayed by them, and the Government mulcted in the costs.

This proposition would not let the poor villains quit if they wanted to. In one sense we ought not to let them quit. But we should send an officer after them with a capias in his hands, and not writs summoning them to civil contests before a chancellor.

It is fair and proper, however, that I should state that when attention was called to this defect it was suggested by some of the Senate conferees that the provision might be modified so as not to require certifications to the Attorney-General except in cases where the claimant should, within a limited time, request the Commissioner in writing to take that action. That might be an improvement on the text, though I doubt it. I am not sure but that it would be even worse than it now is. At all events we could not accept the proposition, and ought not to have done so. Why? Under the law as it now stands these claimants have no legal title to the lands they claim under the pre-emption and homestead laws as against the United States.

Mr. OATES. Is there any such thing known to the law as an innocent purchaser for value, in the absence of a patent, the Government never having parted with title? Would not the legislation which the gentleman is discussing, if passed, make a new creature in the law—an innocent purchaser standing in a category which has never been known in the law heretofore?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Not only so, but it would create a new title that does not now exist under the law. By the law as it now stands a man without a patent has not the legal title to the lands. He may have, and doubtless has, something more than a bare equity; but the legal title is not vested until the patent issues.

I know there are gentlemen with some pretensions to learning who assert the law to be otherwise. But I venture modestly to insist that the authorities and the reason of the thing are the other way. The conditions are somewhat anomalous, but pretty well defined. I know that in the courts of many States, in all individual contests, the certificate of final entry is evidence of title in the hands of the holder, and that such lands are subject to local taxation. All that is entirely proper and in no necessary sense inconsistent with the view I am maintaining. When any citizen who is entitled and eligible to make an entry does so, and complies in all respects with the law, he is entitled to the possession and use of the lands entered against all comers, including the United States.

Still, the strict legal title remains in the United States until the patent is issued and the right of the United States to inquire into the bona fides of the entry, and to vacate it if found fraudulent, is not destroyed or disturbed by the fact that a local land officer may have issued a certificate of final entry. If in point of fact the entryman has observed and complied with the law he is entitled to a patent on demand conveying to him the legal title, and if it be wrongfully denied him he can go into court and by a proper proceeding enforce his rights against the delinquent officers of the Government.

If an entryman sells or assigns his claim or right the purchaser stands in his shoes. The status is in no wise changed. The purchaser is in no better or worse condition than the entryman himself. The pre-emption act of September 4, 1841, now a part of the Revised Statutes, contained this provision: That "all assignments and transfers of the rights hereby secured prior to the issuing of the patent shall be null and void."

Mr, COBB. And that is the law to-day.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. When that provision was incorporated in the act of 1841, which was the culminating act perfecting and gathering together the attempts at pre-emption laws theretofore made, the supreme courts of many of the States in which public lands were located—notably in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Indiana, and Missouri—repeatedly held that an assignment of a pre-emption claim prior to patent passed no title or right to the purchaser, but was null and void.

But subsequently the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Myers vs. Croft, reported in 13 Wallace, construed the clause I have just quoted from the act of 1841 to mean that the assignment of the right to make an entry was the thing prohibited, and not the right to assign after entry and final proof. In other words, never having exercised my right of pre-emption, I could, if I chose, go out upon the public domain and make a pre-emption entry. My right to do that I can not assign. That right is purely personal, and must be exercised by me in person if exercised at all. But if I should go and make such and entry and prove it up, I could then transfer my right and interest in the land; that is, my right to the possession and use of the land and my right to receive a patent. My assignee, however, would simply stand in my shoes. An assignment confers no right, advantage, or benefit upon the assignee which the entryman does not himself enjoy.

Mr. OATES. Before his patent is issued.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. He simply takes the place of the entryman; and if the right exists in the Land Department to inquire into the good faith of the transaction in the hands of the original entryman, and to vacate it if fraudulent, that right is not disturbed by an assignment.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And ought not to be by this legislation.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. And ought not to be.

In the case to which I have referred the court said:

> The object of Congress was attained when the pre-emptor went with clean hands to the land office and proved up his right and paid the Government for his land.

And that the pre-emptor was—

> Free to sell his land after the entry, if at that time he was in good faith the owner of the land, and had done nothing inconsistent with the provisions of the law on the subject.

The authorities of the Interior Department have always held that the Commissioner has a right to review an entry at any time before the patent is issued, without regard to the question of assignment. In Chrisinger's case (4 L. D., 247) it was held that—

> The purchaser takes no better claim for title than the entryman has to confer, and whatever right is thus acquired is subject to the subsequent action of the Land Department.

And this right of the Land Department to review entries, to inquire if the law has been substantially complied with, to examine into the good faith of the transaction, and to vacate the entry in cases of actual fraud and gross irregularity, has been repeatedly upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, then, if I understand this eighth section as it now stands, it proposes to vest the legal title in the entryman before he receives his patent. In other words, it proposes to make the certificate of final entry the evidence of final title. A patent would not be necessary to pass the title from the United States, but would be simply an additional and more convenient evidence of a title already complete. The provision reads:

> That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained.

The jurisdiction of the Land Department to hear and determine questions of fact affecting the bona fides of an entry and to set it aside for any cause whatever, would be withdrawn. We would create and establish a title, and then put the machinery of the courts in motion to set it aside.

If the provision should be modified as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] says was suggested by one of the Senate conferees, it would read:

> That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receivers' receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, the Commissioner shall hold the entry for cancellation, which action shall become final unless within sixty days from notice thereof the claimant or other party in interest shall ask in writing for a judicial investigation of the case, and thereupon the Commissioner shall suspend action in the case of issuing the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained.

That at least would have the virtue of suggesting to the Commissioner that it is his duty to issue a patent to every claimant justly entitled to receive one, and, of course, to that extent would be unobjec-tionable. But that is the law now. A claimant who has made his entry and proved up his claim in compliance with the law, and is an honest, bona fide claimant, is entitled to a patent under existing law, and if it is denied him he is wronged, and he can enforce his rights in the courts. The Commissioner does not now—never has and never will—withhold a patent unless it is "proved to his satisfaction" that the entry is fraudulent or illegal.

The passage of the modified proposition which I have just read would in no wise change his relations to or authority over honest and lawful entries. If he should now deliberately withhold patents without cause he would be subject to impeachment. I can not see that this last suggestion would in any respect change the law with regard to that class of entries.

But with respect to fraudulent and illegal entries this last proposition of the Senate conferees, conveyed through the gentleman from Minnesota, provides that—

> The Commissioner shall hold such entries for cancellation, which action shall become final, unless within sixty days from notice thereof the claimant or other party in interest shall ask in writing for a judicial investigation of the case.

In which event the Commissioner shall certify the papers over to the Attorney-General, who shall institute a proceeding to set aside the title, if, in his judgment, such a proceeding can be maintained. To set aside his title! What title? What character or degree of title does this propose to recognize in the claimant? Does the claimant have a legal title before he gets his patent? Is the certificate of final proof and payment prima facie evidence of legal title? Have the United States nothing left to convey by patent? In the absence of fraud is the title complete without a patent, and does the patent serve no other purpose than merely to furnish evidence of a title already vested?

If that be true, then we already have laws for bringing suits to vacate patents and titles fraudulently acquired from the United States. But those laws are predicated on the notion that the whole title has departed from the Government. Are you ready now to make that sort of concession? Are you ready now to overturn the well-settled law of the past, and create and recognize a full, complete legal title in every entryman who has made his final proof? That is the import of the proposition.

It proposes to recognize title—a good, prima facie legal title—in the entryman who has made final proof, and directs the Attorney-General to proceed in court to set it aside when the Commissioner thinks there is fraud behind it and the entryman graciously requests the United States to proceed against him. Or is it proposed to regard and treat his title as a conditional title, or title on condition? What condition? That he has complied with all the antecedent requirements of the law? But those are conditions-precedent. They must be complied with before title passes at all.

It is too abstruse for me. I can not exactly understand it. You create and vest a title; you recognize the certificate of final proof as prima facie evidence of full compliance with all the precedent conditions of the law, and then these gentlemen, who are so valiant and vehement in their assaults upon the Commissioner, propose to clothe him with the arbitrary power of canceling the entry and overthrowing the title on ex parte evidence, or no evidence at all, and without due process of law or the chance of defense, and to make his action final unless the claimant shall within sixty days request the United States to appeal from the favorable decision of the Commissioner to the courts. That is rather a novel proceeding which requires an appeal to be taken by the successful party. I may be altogether in error, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that the very moment we go off into that line of legislation we will be led into all sorts of absurdities.

Again, after the issuance of the receiver's receipt the entryman either has the title or he has not. If the title is still in the United States I do not see how or why they should move to set it aside. If you propose to change the law and confess and recognize title in the entryman, how can the Commissioner—whether you regard him in the light of a ministerial or quasi-judicial officer—arbitrarily divest a man of his title without process or hearing?

Would the courts sustain any such proceeding? Could not a claimant whose entry should be held for cancellation because of fraud or illegality ignore the action of the Commissioner, prefer no requests for an invitation to court, remain in possession, use, and enjoyment of the disputed lands, and defy the United States? And what could the United States do in response to such a defiance in the way of ejecting him from the land and opening it again to honest settlement? I do not know; I can not answer.

These are some of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why I cannot agree to the eighth section. It is a novel and dangerous departure. It revolutionizes our entire public land system. It overturns the established law and the long-established and well-understood practice of the Department. It will embarrass the administration of the law and imperil the public interests. It should not be agreed to. I do not believe the honest, actual, bona fide settlers—the men for whose benefit these homestead and pre-emption laws were enacted—desire any such departure. Self-preservation and self-interest, if nothing else, would array them against it.

As I have already said, the law as it now exists is amply sufficient. If any claimant's patent is wrongfully withheld he can go into court and by mandamus, or some similar proceeding, enforce his rights. I would be perfectly willing to give him every facility and opportunity to get into court and prosecute his own proceeding against the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the Land Office, and I so stated in the conference. If the existing law needs any amendment in that direction, I am willing to see every proper amendment made. But I am unwilling to face about and go the other way, in the direction indicated by the eighth section of the Senate bill.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office and his administration have been outrageously maligned and misrepresented, and a great effort made to array public sentiment against him and break him down. Only a few days ago it was gravely stated in the Senate, and the statement telegraphed over the country, that the Commissioner had absolutely suspended the issuing of all patents and that the whole Western country was going headlong to the "demnition bow-wows" in consequence.

The statement is utterly without foundation in fact. The truth is, the Commissioner is constantly certifying entries for patents at the rate of about three thousand per month, which is in advance of the average work of previous administrations. I can not understand how any gentleman who favors correct methods of administration can object to the present practice of the department.

I confidently assert the fact to be that no eligible entryman, who goes upon 160 acres of land and homesteads or pre-empts the tract in conformity to law, lives upon, improves, and cultivates it, with a view to making it his home or reducing it to the actual uses of agriculture, is ever wronged or interfered with, but on the contrary is treated with the greatest fairness and liberality. And the same is true of a bona fide assignee of such an entryman.

I have looked pretty thoroughly into this matter, and did so with the greatest candor and impartiality, and I seriously doubt whether a single well-authenticated case can be found among all the thousands in the Department, in which such an entryman has any just ground for reasonable complaint. I do not mean to say that such people are not sometimes temporarily inconvenienced by delay; but the delay is either unavoidable or some good reason exists for it.

When the Commissioner becomes satisfied that any entry is fraudulent or illegal he holds it for cancellation and gives the claimant, whoever he may be, original entryman or assignee, sixty days after notice within which to appear before the local register and receiver or before the Department here in Washington, and show cause why the entry should be sustained, with the right of appeal all the way up to the Secretary. Let me read a brief extract from the rules of the Department, showing how ample is the provision for the service of notice upon the claimants:

> Notice of hearings will be given by the register and receiver by registered letter addressed to the last known place of residence of the party to be notified; and, where his residence is unknown, to the post-office within the delivery of which the land is situated. The register and receiver will post a copy of the notice in their office for not less than thirty days prior to date of hearing. Personal service of notice (which may be given by the special agent) will also be made within the time fixed for hearing if the residence of claimant is known or can be ascertained. If the party can not be found the notice will be advertised once a week for four weeks in a paper of general circulation in the vicinity of the land.
> Proof of mailing, posting, and service of notice (or publication) must be filed with the papers in the case. When personal service is not made, a statement by the register and receiver, or a certificate from the special agent, or the affidavit of an officer or other person, must be filed, showing due diligence has been used and that the party could not be found.

Besides this the claimant is put in full possession of all the facts upon which his entry is held for cancellation, so that he can act with thorough information.

And the notice is certainly broad enough. There is not a statute in any State more ample in its provisions for the service of notice in civil suits. And when a claimant appears in response to this notice the rules prescribe the most liberal opportunities for a full and complete hearing, and if he is not satisfied with the ruling of any subordiate the claimant can appeal in successive stages to the Secretary; and if he is still dissatisfied with the final ruling of the Secretary he can go into court and proceed against the Secretary or Commissioner by mandamus or otherwise.

What more could any honest man demand or desire? Is not this ample protection for every private right? I grant you that private right should be protected at any cost, but I think the facilities here afforded for that purpose are sufficient to meet every honest demand. And that being true, I can discover no reason for going farther in that direction. The public interests are entitled to some consideration also. Private right is already abundantly protected by the existing conditions, and we shall discharge our duty, both to the individual and the public, by simply repealing the several statutes whose generous and well-intended provisions have been so grossly abused; and I fear we shall not perform our duty fully if we do either more or less.

Mr. STRAIT. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be a misunderstanding on the part of the House conferees as to what was proposed by the Senate conferees, I desire, for the information of the House, to have read section 8 as was proposed to be amended by the Senate conferees. My understanding is that the only difference in fact between the conferees is whether an entryman shall be allowed to go to the courts after the cancellation of his final certificate by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows, from House bill 7887 as passed by the Senate:

SEC. 8. That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and under this act, all contests or protests on the part of the Government, or any individual, concerning the land entered, shall be instituted within nine months after final entry and issue of the duplicate receiver's receipt, and not afterwards: Provided, That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land office, until such error has been corrected: Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead or pre-emption laws or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

Mr. STRAIT. Now I propose to have it read as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. Provided, That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land-office, until such error has been corrected: Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, the Commissioner shall hold the entry for cancellation, which action shall become final unless within sixty days from notice thereof the claimant or other party in interest shall ask in writing for a judicial investigation of the case, and thereupon the Commissioner shall suspend further action in the case and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held or construed to impair the rights of any bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of any such land under existing laws, and all purchasers and morgagees of record, and all other persons claiming an interest in any such lands under the original claimant, shall be made parties to such proceedings and may defend in their own right. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert land and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years after the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead, timber-culture, and desert land or pre-emption laws, or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

Mr. STRAIT. That amendment as read proposed on the part of the Senate conferees to allow an entryman after the cancellation of his entry by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to go to the courts and there have his rights adjusted. That was what was proposed on the part of the Senate and which the House conferees refused to accept. I for one think the Senate conferees offered a very fair and just proposition, and it is one, so far as I am concerned, which I am willing this House should accept.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota to yield to me for one moment to submit a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STRAIT. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN by unanimous consent submitted from the Committee on Appropriations an additional report on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

CONFEREES ON PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, Mr. TOWNSHEND, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. LONG.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The SPEAKER also appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, Mr. TRIGG, Mr. DOUGHERTY, and Mr. GALLINGER.

ALPHEUS R. FRENCH.

The SPEAKER also appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French, Mr. ELDREDGE, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. STRUBLE.

REPEAL OF PRE-EMPTION AND TIMBER-CULTURE LAWS, ETC.

Mr. STRAIT. I now yield for thirty minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws seems to have been decided on by a majority of the members of the Senate and House. So far as the pre-emption law is concerned, I have not in the past and do not now agree with that decision. The pre-emption law has been beneficent in its results, and it has supplied a deficiency wherein the homestead law was inapplicable. Much of the public domain remaining and subject to be taken under the pre-emption and homestead laws could not and would not be taken if the pre-emption law should be repealed.

But I will not discuss the merits of the pre-emption law, only so far as it is necessary to do so incidentally in discussing the difference between the conferees on the part of the House and Senate.

The first material difference between the House conferees and the conferees on the part of the Senate arises on the question of the protection of innocent purchasers. The position of the Senate is that persons who have purchased from pre-emptors in good faith and for a valuable consideration should be protected in the rights they have acquired by such purchases. The position of the House conferees is virtually to punish the innocent that the guilty may not escape or may not go unpunished. It does not propose one innocent man shall be punished that ninety-nine guilty persons shall not go unpunished, but it proposes to reverse the rule of morality and fundamental justice and to punish ninety-nine innocent persons in order that one rogue may not go unwhipped by justice.

By some remarks made in the discussion of the question in the House and in the Senate, I am led to believe the difference, so far as this point is concerned, might be reconciled, but in my judgment it is dishonorable to repeal the pre-emption law and not provide for the protection of innocent purchasers.

It would be dishonorable, because the Government is responsible for the fraud, if any fraud has been committed upon it, under the pre-emption laws. I am willing to concede that some frauds have been committed under this law. I am willing to concede that title to some portions of the public domain has been acquired by perjury, if you please, placing it in the strongest light you can. But I say that under a just and proper administration of the law there could not have been more fraud committed under the pre-emption than under the homestead law, and that the reason for the commission of fraud is, not because of a fault in the law, but in the administration of the law.

Now one cause of these frauds is to be found in the penurious appropriations made under the pretense of what is in fact a dishonest economy. The clerical force of the local land offices is entirely inadequate to do the legitimate business of the Government, to do that business which properly belongs to the Government to do, and what is the result? The registers and the receivers, who should be the judges who are to try the cases, have not the time to devote to examining the proof or evidence in any case brought before them.

The intent of the law was, and is, that one of the local land officers should personally supervise and personally hear the evidence that was to be adduced by the homesteader or pre-emptor in favor and support of his claim to a portion of the public domain. Yet the fact is, that neither the register nor the receiver can devote a single moment of time to hearing or examining the proofs, and they are taken outside of the office and before some other party—before the clerk of the district court, where neither one of these land officers of the Government can see or examine the witnesses face to face, to determine by their appearance, their utterances, their candor, their demeanor, whether they are testifying to the truth or not. It is beyond the power of the governmental officer charged with that duty and made responsible for the discharge of that duty, if you please. It is placed beyond his power because of a lack of sufficient clerical force to perform the duty, because of the penurious appropriations made and which are being made for help in the large land offices of the country.

But you say this would cost something. It would require additional room, and additional clerks and land offices. Ah! and there is the miserable, miserly secret of the whole matter. The Government has been speculating in its own public domain, and there is just where the fault rests.

The primal intent and object of these laws was to settle the public domain and furnish homes for the homeless. That was the primal intent of the homestead law as well as the pre-emption law.

The public domain was to be a safety-valve to relieve the overcrowded localities of the Eastern section. The man out of employment and out of capital in the East often becomes a criminal rather than starve. Hunger and want dethrone reason and reverence for law, and make anarchists and communists. The public domain was intended to be the magnet to draw these men, who are out of employment, to the Western prairies upon the public domain, in order that our civilization might be enlarged, our interests diversified, and the happiness of the greatest number of people in this country assured.

It was never intended that the public domain should put millions of money into the coffers of the Government. It was never intended that the public treasury of the United States should be filled to repletion by money made out of the public domain of the United States. The receipts at the Garden City land office, in my district in Kansas, are over $100,000 a month, or more than a million dollars a year; and yet the clerical force of that office is so insufficient that neither the register nor receiver can devote a moment's attention to the taking of proofs. The officers of the Government can not take the proof for the want of time. The homesteader and pre-emptor must get somebody to do the Government's work—the legitimate work of the Government—and the homesteader and pre-emptor must pay for the doing of this work which the Government properly and justly ought to do. The Government not only compels the homesteader and pre-emptor to pay for doing its own work, but even then, if the work is not done right, of which the Government must be the judge, it robs him, not only of the money he pays for doing the work, but also of his home and his land. It takes the land for which he has paid and sells it to another and then to another, and so on, until its insatiate greed is partly mollified, but, apparently, never satisfied.

That is not all. Not only are the forces of the local land offices entirely inadequate to do the business of the Government, but the appropriations for the Land Department in Washington are either totally inadequate, or they are not properly expended. After final proofs have been made, final receipts given, and the papers sent in to the General Land Office, they do not receive immediate attention. They are there pigeon-holed instead of receiving the immediate attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The claimant must wait a year, sometimes two years, before any consideration is given to his proofs; and why? It is stated at the General Land Office that this is because the appropriations for the clerical force in that office are not sufficient. The pre-emptor can not ascertain whether anything is wrong with his proof, or whether he has failed to comply with the law, until one or two years after his papers have been sent from the local land office.

He can not learn what, if anything, is lacking often for two years after the local land officers have accepted his proof. Now if the Government had done its duty in seeing that proper improvements had been made; if the Government had done its duty by making it possible for one of its land officers to have acted as a judge upon the trial of the cause, so that he could have examined the witnesses in person, then if the pre-emptor had failed to comply with the law either in substance or in some technicality, he could have been notified of it at the time and saved much time and expense; because if there was a technical defect, he could have corrected it there at once; if there was a defect in substance, then he could have been notified and could have increased the amount of his improvements, or extended the length of his residence.

But what is the system now in practice? The papers are sent to Washington. Then they are pigeon-holed for a year or more until in the slow routine of the office the case is reached in its turn for examination. In the mean time this grand and good Government sends out its company of spies and detectives to stir up strife and envy and discord among the neighbors of the homesteader and pre-emptor. Some anonymous scrawler, who does not sign his name, writes to the Commissioner and charges that a fraud has been committed; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office influenced by an unworthy and ill-begotten prejudice suspends the entry. Then for the first time does this homesteader or pre-emptor learn that his proof had been suspicioned; that the examination of his proof at the local land office was a farce. Then for the first time he learns that though the local land officers are the agents of the Government to look after its interest, to see he has complied with the law, still their acts are not binding and will be repudiated on the merest pretense.

Then for the first time he learns that he must gather his witnesses together again and hie away some 50 miles, perhaps, to the special agent, and there await the nod and beck of that official until he shall see fit to conduct an ex parte inquisition. The verdict in these cases is often made up in advance, because these special agents are appointed to convict under the present administration. If the harvest of fraud which they are expected to reap when they get into the field is not ripened they are expected to ripen it. If the seed has not been sown they are expected to plant it and nurture it, and finally garner it into the Department at Washington, in proof of the assertion that 90 per cent. of the entries under this public land law have been fraudulent.

The wrongs of the Irish tenants are as nothing compared with the wrongs and outrages that have been perpetrated on the homesteader and pre-emptor on the prairies of the West. But the claim for the repeal of this law has been put forth, apparently, in the interest of the poor man and the homesteader. The repeal of this law is in fact in the interest of the cattle syndicates and the cattle kings. Why, sir, a brief recital of the facts will illustrate and support this allegation. Years ago a man or company desiring to engage in the cattle industry on the Western prairies, located a ranch upon some stream; in most cases not even an attempt was made to get title to the land upon which the ranch or headquarters was located. These cattle-men were mere squatters. As they increased in numbers they apportioned out the public domain among themselves and adopted a code of rules for their own government.

In all this cattle domain the rainfall was either insufficient for agricultural purposes or it was not seasonable for crops. These cattle-men knew that no man would or could go upon this land if compelled to reside upon it and cultivate it for five years under the homestead law. Some attempts were made to homestead in Western Kansas in 1878 and 1879, but on account of the drought failures resulted. The cattle-men held possession, almost undisputed, in the country referred to until 1883. Meanwhile climatic changes, brought about by irrigation and the construction of railroads, affected the rainfall, and the home-seeker, eager to acquire a home, again began to venture, not under the homestead law but under the pre-emption law. If he failed it was only a loss of six months' time and a couple of hundred dollars' worth of improvements, most of it accomplished by his own labor. He never would have made the venture under the homestead law. The experience of the preceding years made a second attempt under that law supreme folly. If the efforts to repeal this pre-emption law in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress had been successful the rule of the cattle-man in that vast area of the public domain would have been supreme.

Nothing that could have taken place would have brought such joy to the camp of the cattle syndicates as the repeal of the pre-emption law in the first or even in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress. The shrewd and far-seeing ones among the cattle-men favored its repeal. They even visited Washington and lobbied in favor of its repeal. They cheered to the echo, in their quiet, discrete way, the speeches made in favor of its repeal. They secretly encouraged the efforts that were made to render the pre-emption law odious. When the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] sought to increase the army of spies and detectives in the Land Department these cattle-men, knowing that this would make the pre-emption law more odious, indorsed and approved his action and wished him success.

Persistent opposition by the Western members, which at times, both in the Forty-eighth Congress and in the first session of the Forty-ninth, was denounced as "filibustering," prevented the passage of the bill. What has been the result? More than fifty thousand farms have been opened in Kansas alone during the past three years, which land, if the pre-emption law had been repealed, would to-day be in possession of the cattle-men. In Southwestern Kansas more than a dozen counties have been organized in the last three years, having now populations varying from 5,000 to 20,000, which counties would not have been settle dif the pre-emption law had been repealed, and cattle-men and cattle syndicates would still have had complete control over the miles of prairie which now constitute the area of those counties.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PETERS. My time is pretty nearly up, but I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If the pre-emption law had been repealed and the homestead law left intact, could not those same men have gone upon the land and taken up homesteads, and had their money left with which to improve their farms?

Mr. PETERS. No, sir, they could not; because, as I have already stated, they tried it under the homestead law in 1878, and had to abandon it because of the drought. They would not have taken the risk again under the homestead law.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. What is the difference between the pre-emption law and the homestead law with the commutation feature in it? There is not a particle of difference.

Mr. PETERS. I am speaking of the difference between the homestead law itself and the pre-emption law. The commutation law is an entirely different thing. I will say, in further answer to the gentleman's question, that at that time a great many of the people out upon the prairies knew nothing of the commutation feature. Knowledge of that was generally acquired out in that country a long time after the attempt was made in 1878 to settle up the Western domain under the homestead law.

Mr. LAIRD. I do not think the commutation feature existed in 1878.

Mr. PETERS. No, sir, it did not, because it was enacted June 15, 1880.

Mr. Speaker, the growth and development of Kansas, especially of the southwestern portion of the State, in the last three years, has been the wonder of the century. Ask the careful observer what one cause has done more to work this miracle than all others, and he will answer: "The pre-emption law." Ask the cattle-men what it was that destroyed his range, scattered his herds, and ignored his wire fences, and he will answer: "It was the pre-emption law." Write to your old constituent who left Illinois or Iowa and went out upon the Western domain and ask him what it was that induced him to go out there, and he will answer you from a Kansas farm: "It was the pre-emption law." I have no doubt that some gentlemen here would like well enough to cut off that emigration to Kansas and retain these emigrants in their own districts, and therefore there may be some consistency in their efforts to repeal the pre-emption law. But, Mr. Speaker, let us hear no more declamation against the pre-emption law upon the ground that it has been favorable to these cattle-men and cattle syndicates and opposed to the interests of the poor men seeking homes in the West.

A word now in regard to "innocent purchasers." In nine cases out of ten the innocent purchaser is a home-seeker, who has some money, and who does not desire, and does not find it necessary, to go out upon vacant land and improve it. He is not compelled to be the advance-guard of civilization; he is not compelled to make the first tracks upon the almost boundless prairies. He is able to purchase from some frontiersman who has been less fortunate. The final receipt of the Government officer is to him conclusive. He knows that under the law some improvements must be made, and the Government says to him, by its receipt, those improvements have been made. It says to him through that final receipt there is a house upon that land, and there is a certain amount of cultivation upon that land. It is out upon the open prairie, where hundreds of quarter-sections are alike in their general surface and in the character of the soil.

It is not necessary for him to go out there and examine it. He knows, perhaps, that his neighbor from the State where he now lives has gone out there, and his neighbor writes back to him and gives a description of the general character of the soil. Upon this information many times the citizen purchases a quarter section of land and then prepares to move out there and occupy it. He goes there with his family; he journeys westward and takes possession. He may be a hundred miles or more from the land office. Then some anonymous scribbler sends in a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office stating that the pre-emptor from whom this man purchased had committed a fraud against the Government. The entry of the land which this man purchased is suspended. But the innocent purchaser all this while knows nothing about the action of this great and good Government for which possibly he fought.

The original pre-emptor has sold out, obtained his money, and perhaps moved farther on toward the frontier; and he alone receives notice of the suspension of this entry. The innocent purchaser gets no notice. He awaits the slow routine of the General Land Office at Washington. He knows the patent can not be issued for a year or two years, but in the mean time he works; he turns over the sod, improves his house, plants his orchard, sets out his hedge; and all in blissful ignorance of the, to him, secret proceeding on the part of his Government to rob him of his money and his home. One day there comes to him a man, who, living near the land office, has been apprised of the proceeding, and who, after the cancellation of the entry of the original pre-emptor, placed his own filing upon the land, and now demands possession. Then this innocent purchaser awakens to the fact that he must buy his home over again or abandon it and his improvements.

This is no fancy sketch. There are thousands of just such cases in Kansas to-day; thousands of men who have been living in that State for ten years are to-day in this situation.

But I hear reiterated that stale assertion that 90 per cent. of the entries under that law are fraudulent. I stand here to say in the light of the past and the present that that declaration, by whomsoever made, is false. But suppose it is true, can the Government afford to take advantage of its own wrong?

Mr. COBB. The gentleman will permit me to say that the assertion which he has just pronounced false was made by the Secretary of the Interior under Republican administration, and was reiterated time and again by the late Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. McFarland.

Mr. PETERS. I am not making any political or partisan speech.

Mr. COBB. And I am not; I am simply referring to the fact.

Mr. PETERS. Well, I say distinctly that the declaration, by whomsoever reiterated, is false.

Mr. COBB. The proof is overwhelming against you.

Mr. PETERS. I say it is not.

Mr. COBB. I say it is, and I refer the gentleman to the records of the Department.

Mr. PETERS. I say an examination of the records in the General Land Office shows that the statement is not true.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I do not believe that 25 per cent. of the entries are fraudulent.

Mr. COBB. It does not make any difference what you believe; there are thousands of affidavits to the contrary.

Mr. PETERS. They are ex parte affidavits. Now, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that thousands of entries were suspended last summer and a committee was appointed of subordinates in the General Land Office, for the purpose of investigating those entries and fixing upon those which were supposed to be suspicious. After this committee had gone over about twenty thousand entries, only about 10 per cent. were regarded as suspicious and were held for cancellation. I say this is conclusive evidence that 90 per cent. of those entries were not fraudulent. I am informed that even of the 10 per cent. of those entries which were held for cancellation as being suspicious, not more than 7 per cent. would be canceled upon final investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX, of North Carolina). The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PETERS. I would like about five minutes more.

Mr. STRAIT. I yield that much additional time to the gentleman.

Mr. PETERS. But suppose that 10 per cent. of these entries are fraudulent, what a magnificent act of a great and good Government to punish 90 per cent. of innocent persons in order that 10 per cent., constituting the evil-doers, shall not escape. How much more grand and magnificent the act appears when you consider that the Government itself is responsible for the wrong. If I were one of the conferees on this bill, so long as reason remained in me and my right hand retained its cunning, I should never attach my name to a report which directly or indirectly countenanced or recognized the perpetration of such an outrage upon the innocent purchaser of the public domain.

The second and only further point of difference to which I shall call attention is the first amendment to the eighth section of the House bill, which provides for a trial of the cause in the United States court, provided the claimant or either party in interest shall ask in writing for a judicial investigation. The whole question is, shall the authorities in the Land Department have the absolute power to deprive the pre-emptor or homesteader of his land, or shall he have the right to be heard in the courts of the country if he so desires?

Mr. COBB. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, I want to ask him this question, whether that amendment does not require the Government to bring suit for its own property; whether it does not throw upon the Government the burden of proving the fraud?

Mr. PETERS. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. COBB. Certainly that amendment does so, as the gentleman will find if he will read it.

Mr. PETERS. I have only five minutes and can not yield for further interruption.

Mr. PETERS. I am opposed to making the Commissioner of the General Land Office a dictator; and that the House bill does, while, on the contrary, the Senate bill proposes that the homesteader and pre-emptor who has been deprived of his land by the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall have the right to a trial before the courts of his own State.

Aside from this, Mr. Speaker, there is another question which I desire to discuss. You know, and every man here knows, who is at all familiar with the General Land Office in this city, that the Commissioner can not devote personal attention to the examination of every claim pending in his department. You know, and we all know, the party who does devote attention to the examination of these cases is some subordinate clerk in the General Land Office, and the most that the Commissioner does, or can do, is to give a cursory reading and sign his name to the decision made up by the subordinate.

Now what is proposed by the House bill? It is proposed to take away the land of the pre-emptor on the the decision of a clerk and refuse any appeal.

Mr. COBB. The House bill leaves the law where it has been for fifty years?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB. And you want to change it?

Mr. PETERS. I want the law changed.

Mr. COBB. From what it has been for fifty years?

Mr. PETERS. Because I say the Government is not blameless, and I want the law changed so as to protect these people in their rights.

Mr. COBB. I think I agree with you.

Mr. PETERS. And that is the reason I am in favor of the conference report being sent back, to see whether, on further conference, we can not reach just such a proposition as will be satisfactory. I want to see whether it is not possible to reach a result without perpetrating wrongs upon these people who hold pre-emption rights.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that has been the statute in force for fifty years under which these wrongs have been done?

Mr. COBB. The law under which most of the frauds have been perpetrated has been upon the statute-book.

Mr. PAYSON. Since 1841.

Mr. PETERS. I can not yield further.

Mr. COBB. It can not be gainsaid.

Mr. REED. Did not the Commissioner establish a different system for a period of about forty days?

Mr. COBB. No, he has not changed the practice of the Land Office in the slightest degree.

Mr. REED. Why then did the Secretary of the Interior overrule his opinion?

Mr. COBB. He did not overrule the Commissioner of the General Land Office except as to the withdrawal of entries on the ground of fraud.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PETERS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few minutes longer.

Mr. STRAIT. I will yield to the gentleman for four minutes longer.

Mr. PETERS. I have only four minutes more and do not want to be interrupted. I want to say in those four minutes, Mr. Speaker, that the dearest spot on earth is home, but it is especially dear to the homesteader and pre-emptor.

To secure it, he has faced danger, suffered want, and endured privation. To secure it, he has severed the associations of childhood and manhood, battled with hunger and cold; toiled early and late, in sunshine and in storm; and yet, it is proposed to try his title to the proceeds of this toil, and labor, and suffering, and privation, upon written statements, largely ex parte in their nature, before some clerk in the Land Department in Washington, a thousand or more miles away from the land, and make this trial a finality.

And is this the justice that is to be meted out to the free American citizen?

Is this the kind of a Government he fought to maintain?

I will not yet believe that even a Democratic House of Representatives will commit such an outrage as this.

Give the homesteader and pre-emptor a chance to go into the United States courts in his State. Let him have a jury of his countrymen to decide upon the facts and a judge to declare the law, and then if his home is taken from him he can at least have the consolation of seeing how it is done. [Laughter.]

Give him a chance to present his witnesses and to face his accusers, and if then he be found to have committed a fraud against the Government he will have had a fair trial and must be content.

If he is proven guilty the facts will be known and his fate will deter others from the commission of like offenses.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, it will be dealing honorably with our fellow man. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly in the closing days of the session we are brought to the consideration of this important matter when other bills of importance are being pressed for consideration and are demanding the attention of members of the House. This to the people of the West is an important matter indeed, and deserves at the hands of the House the most careful investigation. In the little time I shall trespass on the attention of the House I shall endeavor, if possible, clearly to indicate to the members the difference which exists between the conferees of the House and the conferees of the Senate.

The conferees of the Senate and the House, as I understand it, have agreed upon the most of the amendments put upon the House bill by the Senate.

They agree that the pre-emption and timber-culture acts shall be repealed.

They agree that the homestead law shall remain upon the statute-books of the country, and they virtually agree that the desert-land act shall remain upon the statute-books, with an amendment protecting the Government of the United States from fraud. Under these circumstances the only difference and controversy between the two Houses is whether or not the honest settler upon the public domain shall be protected against the arbitrary decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and shall be given an opportunity of having his rights investigated in the courts of the country. In other words, the difference is as to whether or not he shall be given a chance, an opportunity, of speaking in his own defense, and an opportunity of a hearing in the courts of the land before his property is taken from him and he stricken down a bankrupt and a pauper. That is the whole question, and I want to address myself to the House for a few moments in the discussion of this proposition which at this time divides the two bodies of Congress.

The conferees representing the House say that the settler upon the public lands shall be stricken down at the arbitrary discretion and by the arbitrary rulings of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and shall be given no hearing in support of his rights in the courts of the country. No matter how long he resided there, no matter how many dollars have been invested by him in his home, how many may be dependent upon him in his daily toil and efforts, or the character or extent of his improvements, he shall be stricken down by an arbitrary decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on ex parte testimony and his property forfeited without giving him the right to go into the courts and defend the bona fides of his settlement.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that such a proposition is wrong. Its mere statement here shows it to be wrong. But it has been suggested here, in answer, that such has been the law for forty-five years. Conceded. But when did this practice of sending out spies, of sending out informers, and of sending out the paid employés of the Department, who are dependent, as suggested by my colleague, for the retention of their places upon the favorable reports which they may make and send to the Commissioner—when did it come into being? When was it inaugurated, and when pressed with such vigor and cruel pertinacity as at the present time? The Senate amend the House bill in some important respects. In the first section, which it passed as a substitute for the House bill, it is provided that where the settler had sold in good faith to an honest bona fide purchaser his claim, that title, passing to the bona fide purchaser, should be confirmed. In other words, a man from the State of Iowa, or from the State of Indiana, or a man from the State of Illinois or any other State, goes to a community in Kansas and finds a pre-emption settler who is willing to sell, and on an investigation of the records of the land office ascertains that the settler has been to the office and has made his filings and his proofs, satisfying all of his compliance with the conditions of the law, and that his settlement is honest and bona fide, and the inquirer finds that the settler paid his money, and has secured from the officers of the land office a receipt certifying to all this.

When this inquiry has been made and the settler on pre-emption is found in the condition suggested with this evidence and title in his possession and favor, and the man from Illinois or the man from Iowa or from Indiana, upon these facts, not having it suggested to him that the pre-emptor is in any manner in the wrong, or that he has defrauded the Government of the United States by violating the land laws of the country, purchases from him his land, pays him his money, and moves there with his family and remains in occupancy of the land for years, improving it, cultivating the fields, building houses and barns, and in other ways doing all he can to contribute to the growth and development of the country and the maintenance of his rights as a citizen—under all of these circumstances these gentlemen representing the House say that, notwithstanding all this, that man should be stricken down and his home despoiled because the original occupant did not in some particular conform to the land laws.

The Senate said in the first instance that this honest purchaser, going in under such circumstances, should be protected and his title confirmed; but they are willing to recede at the suggestion and demand of the House conferees, and, as I understand it will, abandon the amendment if an argument can be had upon the bill, notwithstanding the fact they believe the innocent purchaser should be protected. But they will consent that he, too, shall be stricken down, if needs be, and they only ask, and that is the variance between the two bodies, that before the honest purchaser shall be finally stricken down, or the honest pre-emptor irrevocably destroyed, he shall be permitted to go to court and demonstrate, if he can, the bona fides and the honesty of his settlement. That is all. Shall it be said by a Democratic Congress, by a body representing the intelligence and decency of this nation, that this man shall not be given such an opportunity to defend his rights? It is for this and this only that we now contend; and I protest against the practices of this wrecker who now controls the business of the General Land Office, as I protest against the demands of all who would violate and destroy the home of the pioneer on the prairies of the West without judicial inquiry or investigation.

Mr. LONG. Will my friend yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. That position seems so eminently fair that I asked my seat-mate from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] why there was a refusal to allow these parties to go into court; and he assured me that such power existed now.

Mr. PERKINS. That is a mistake.

Mr. LONG. And I wish the gentleman would meet that question and explain this difference more fully. The gentleman from Illinois informs me that the pre-emptor can go to court and ask a writ of mandamus and demand a hearing on the facts.

Mr. PERKINS. A mandamus on whom?

Mr. PAYSON. A mandamus against the local land officer, against the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and also against the Secretary of the Interior, as he may happen to see proper to secure the issuance of his patent.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Illinois knows that the local land officers have no power to issue patents. He knows that they have no power to confirm an entry, and that no mandamus could lie against them under any circumstances to compel the performance of such a function. He knows that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or the Secretary of the Interior can not be controlled in their judicial discretion by a mandamus, and the gentleman from Illinois is too good a lawyer not to know that judicial discretion can not be controlled by the courts. He knows very well that when the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior has investigated one of these entries through their special agents, and have considered the case, they have exercised their judicial discretion, and if they decide against the settler or occupant they can not be controlled by mandamus, nor can their decision be reviewed in the courts by mandamus.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] can not point to an instance where a settler ever got a remedy or redress from the court under such circumstances.

Mr. REED. And to come to Washington to get a mandamus in a case involving 160 acres of land would be rather expensive, especially considering the way in which the deserving profession here charge for their services.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The conferees on the part of the House could settle that beyond all question. They proposed to the Senate conferees to so amend the law that needed amendment in their judgment as to give the local land officers jurisdiction of any proceeding that any claimant might desire to institute to enforce his rights.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Missouri. In a mandamus proceeding would a settler have an opportunity to face his accusers and put them on the rack of cross-examination as in a suit at common law? In a mandamus proceeding parties have not the same rights of cross-examination and testing the character and veracity of a witness as in an action at common law.

Mr. PERKINS. I think I shall be compelled to proceed without yielding further to interruptions.

Of course, I can not say what propositions were made by the House conferees or what propositions were made by the Senate conferees. But, as I understood on Saturday, the gentleman from Indiana who presented this report argued the right should not be given to the settlers to go into court because, he said, it would result in perpetuating fraud and in ratifying fraud. Why should it result in that? Are the courts of the country not to be trusted? Is this Democratic House afraid to give to the settlers an opportunity of going into the courts of the country and vindicating their rights to their homes, and answering the slanders of this administration? Who are the prosecuting officers now throughout the land representing the Government of the United States? I question whether there is a Republican officer retained anywhere. They are all in sympathy with the majority of this House politically, and in sympathy with the administration.

Mr. PAYSON. May I correct the gentleman, who I am sure desires always to be accurate?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the oldest inspector in the fraud service, Mr. Hobbs, appointed by Secretary Teller, holds that position still, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have stated he shall not be interfered with except for cause. And does not the gentlemen know that five others out of eighteen are in the same position?

Mr. PERKINS. I was not suggesting that there was not a Republican inspector in the service. That was not my statement.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I misunderstood you.

Mr. PERKINS. My statement was that the prosecuting officers representing the Government of the United States are in sympathy with the majority of this House and with the administration, and the Senate amendment proposes to confer upon them the duty, as well as the right, to go into court and vacate and set aside these entries upon competent evidence if they are wrongful or fraudulent. That is all there is of it. Is it to be the decision of this Democratic House that these Democratic officers can not be trusted?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Senate and we who speak for these people of the West, say that this man who has brought such consternation to the doors of the humble cottagers of the great prairies should not be permitted to continue that work. He deprives himself of sleep that he may strike down some poor settler on the public lands; he deprives himself of food that he may devote himself to this to him pleasant duty, and if a man goes to his office to speak in behalf of these outraged settlers he is met with insult and indignity, as men on both sides of this House can testify. Personally I have no complaint to make of him. The Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office is a gentleman, and I do my business with him. [Laughter.] I never went to intrude on the presence of his majesty the Commissioner but once and then I found him engaged in marking and sending out a cheap Washington publication that had given a fulsome notice of him with a portrait; and I thought the work he was then engaged in was less harmful to the country than anything else he was likely to do, and I withdrew without disturbing him. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, in this debate I will be glad to have some gentleman tell me why in decency, why in good morals, why in law, the man who has gone to the prairies of the West and purchased land from the preemptor he found there, under the circumstances I suggested a few minutes ago, should not be protected. Yet this House says he should not be, and, as I suggested, the Senate is willing to recede from its proposition. But it does insist that the man who has purchased under the circumstances I have suggested, that the settler who has gone upon the land in good faith, shall be given an opportunity of confronting his accusers and their witnesses, and shall be given an opportunity of meeting the charges that are made against him, and given an opportunity of vindicating his rights in the courts of his country, to his home and to his possessions. If he has been guilty of perjury or of violating the law in any way, if he is the wrong-doer that has been described upon this floor, is it to be presumed that he will invite the interposition of the courts in his behalf? And the House will remember that it is only for such claimants as do invite the interposition of the courts that the Senate bill provides.

The conditions prescribed are these, that when the Commissioner of the General Land Office, after an investigation, is satisfied that fraud has been committed, he shall suspend further action and inform the settler of the fact, and then, if within sixty days the settler says to him, "I invite an investigation in the courts of my country"—then, and only in that case, the Senate bill provides that the Commissioner shall certify the fact to the Attorney-General of the United States, who, through his subordinates, shall direct proceedings to be instituted to set aside the entry. That is all there is of it. Is that wrong? Will any man here, speaking for this House, tell me in what that is wrong?

Gentlemen say it will flood the courts with business. Well, what are courts organized for, what are judges appointed for, what are attorneys employed and compensated for, except to investigate wrongs and to have charges of violations of law judicially investigated and determined? And is an exception to be made against these settlers? Is everything that they have to be taken from them upon the arbitrary dictum of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, while to the man who has merely a claim to a few dollars involved in a controversy with a neighbor is given the right to go into court and have the question at issue investigated and judicially determined? This bill does not propose that these questions shall be brought into the State courts. It does not change the law in that respect. It simply proposes that the representatives of the Government of the United States shall go into courts of the United States and there confront with their accusations and their witnesses the parties who are accused of wrong, and establish, if they can, the fraud or the wrong which they allege has been committed.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state to him what I think is one difficulty in this matter. I think one difficulty is that this great mogul up in the General Land Office thinks that every citizen of the United States who applies for a piece of Government land——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Must be a scoundrel.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Yes; that every citizen who applies for a piece of Government land must be a scoundrel and a thief trying to steal something from the Government; and furthermore, this man, not upon evidence, but upon mere statements of irresponsible parties, not backed up even by affidavits, will stop the patenting to a State of lands which belong to her under acts of Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that what the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] states is one great difficulty in the case, and it is in part for that reason that we ask this legislation, and that this legislation becomes so important. The presumptions of the common law are all reversed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Perhaps that is the case because he does not know what they are. [Laughter.] He may be excused upon that ground, but I say the presumptions of the common law are all reversed by this man. The presumption of the common law is that a man does right; the presumption of the common law is that officers of the Government respect the law; the presumption of the common law is that when a man testifies he tells the truth. But instead of these presumptions being respected in the Land Office this man proceeds upon the presumption that every man who gives testimony testifies falsely, that every man who makes a location upon the public land makes it for the purpose of defrauding the Government, that every man who goes out to the West to make a home for himself and his family goes there for the purpose of perpetrating some wrong or outrage, and these presumptions are assumed to be true until the contrary is established.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Did you ever know an honest man to put all the presumptions in that way?

Mr. PERKINS. I hope I have never been charged with ascribing that characteristic to this Commissioner. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, to show the House something of the character of these men who are influenced by cupidity, who are moved by malice and by the desire of pecuniary gain to institute these vexatious proceedings against settlers, I will ask the Clerk to read a brief statement of testimony given not long since in a hearing in a Western Territory. It is a matter to which Senator PLUMB recently called attention in the Senate, and I ask the House to listen to its reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

I will state what recently occurred in a public hearing in a Western Territory to illustrate the character of the proceedings that are being carried on under the sanction of the Land Department's present construction of the law, when I say that the witness on the stand, who was the contestant in the pending case for a piece of land which had been valuably improved and was then in the honest bona fide occupation of the claimant, admitted that he kept a bawdy-house near there and that the special agent at whose instance he had made the contest had solicited him to make such contest, and had promised him that if he would make it he should have the land under consideration, and which had been made valuable by the labor of another, as the reward for instituting the contest. That is not one case alone; it is one of hundreds of cases that are taking place all over the frontier.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is against those practices that we are protesting; it is to correct such injuries and such injustice that we are pleading; and it is to perpetuate them that the gentleman representing the majority of this conference committee is asking further indulgence of this House.

Mr. Speaker, as I have already briefly indicated, all that those who protest against the action of the House are asking is that when, by these investigations which are made, fraud is, in the judgment of the Commissioner, established, the occupant of the land shall be advised of the fact, and if he signifies in writing to the Commissioner in sixty days that such is his desire, he shall have an opportunity of defending himself in the courts against these accusations made by paid employés of the Department upon ex parte testimony, obtained without his knowledge and without any opportunity on his part for cross-examination.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I have here a statement taken from the last report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the effect that there were last year 61,638 homestead entries, 34,996 timber-culture entries, 15,712 pre-emption entries, 2,500 desert-land entries, and 429 entries under the timber and stone act, making in the aggregate 115,275 entries last year. As has been suggested by my colleague [Mr. PETERS] the Commissioner in his report made to the Secretary of the Interior in December, 1885, charged that 90 per cent. of these entries in the West have been fraudulent. Supposing for the sake of argument that this suggestion is true, and taking into consideration the fact that there were last year 115,275 entries of the kinds I have suggested, when under existing law and existing practices is this question as to the fraudulent character of these entries to be determined and ascertained?

How long must these people be kept in suspense? How long must they be deprived of the evidences of their title and of the opportunity of transferring their homes, if they so desire, to honest bona fide purchasers? The Commissioner, in his report made last December, says that last year only 2,606 cases were investigated through the special investigating agency of his Department, and that the office acted upon 2,591 cases. This is the work of one year in the way of investigation. During the same period there are more than 115,000 entries of the public lands. If only 2,606 entries can be investigated in one year, when is all this accumulated business to be disposed of, and when are the men who are making their entries now, each day and each month, to have a hearing? In the despotism created and organized by this Commissioner when are their improvements to be taken from them; when are they to be pauperized and dethroned without a hearing and without an opportunity of defending their rights?

I want to call attention to one other point. A man settles upon 160 acres in the West and establishes his right to that land in the local land office. He pays his money; he gets his certificate; he prosecutes his efforts to make a home; he adds to his improvements; and when such a man as I spoke of a few minutes ago from Illinois, or Indiana, or Iowa, comes and finds these facts, buys from him his right, enters upon the possession, and continues the improvements, an agent who has been sent out by the Commissioner reports on ex parte testimony that the original occupant was a fraudulent one and did not conform to the law, and this bona fide purchaser, who, under existing law and existing practices, has gone there and invested everything he has in the world, is allowed no opportunity of defending his property, no opportunity of making an entry upon that quarter section of land as an original occupant.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman make that assertion upon newspaper reports or upon inquiry at the Department as to the practice? I wish to correct the gentleman because I know he desires to be accurate in his statement of facts.

Mr. PERKINS. I do, indeed.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to say that there is not in the practice of the Interior Department a shadow of foundation for the statement the gentleman has just made, as I will proceed to demonstrate, when my time shall come, from official documents now in my hand. I interpose now simply for the purpose of correcting the gentleman from Kansas, who, I know, desires always to be accurate in his statement of facts.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman may attempt to demonstrate his position by the assertions or statements of the Commissioner——

Mr. PAYSON. I will show it by official documents.

Mr. PERKINS. But, notwithstanding the demonstration which the gentleman promises, I know that people living on these public lands are complaining by the hundred of just such outrages. I know they do not make these complaints without foundation. All that we ask for is honesty and decency in the proceedings on the part of the Government. All that we ask for is that these honest settlers and honest purchasers shall be protected.

As has been suggested, whenever we speak in behalf of these settlers we are met by the cry of "fraud." Whenever we utter a protest against these practices we are charged with being in the interest of fraudulent pre-emptors. This suggestion is brought before the House as a specter with which to frighten members. It is the stock in trade of gentlemen who are attempting to perpetrate this wrong against the settlers, and is presented in the hope that we may be deterred from doing our duty conscientiously. But I am not to be intimidated in that way. We have here simply a repetition of the old device—the thief crying "Stop thief!" I am not impugning the honesty of these gentlemen here; but I know what are the effects of the practice now pursued.

I wish to call the attention of my friend from Illinois to this proposition: When an original entry is found by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be fraudulent, he vacates and sets it aside; and the man who, before that decision was made, before the entry was canceled or set aside, or frauds suggested by any one, bought from the original entryman—the man who in innocence and good faith has paid his money in this way—is not permitted, if there is an adverse claimant, to establish his right as a pre-emptor or as original settler to that quarter-section of land, notwithstanding he may have invested there everything he has in the world.

As was shown by the evidence read from the Clerk's desk, these informers and agents go and they find some evidence upon which they can base a charge of fraud.

Mr. FELTON. And which they live upon.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; and then they advise some friend of the fact, advise some friend in sympathy with them, or in league with them in the business—they advise them of the fact that they are going to make an adverse report against this entry. When they advise their pal, so to speak, of that fact, he moves on the land—he takes possession as an original settler. Then the report is sent in to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Commissioner strikes down the original pre-emption. He cancels and sets aside the entry. Then when the man who purchased in good faith, who has lived there for years, who has invested everything he possesses in it, comes forward as an original pre-emptor and wants to be recognized as such, he is informed this man who went into partnership with the agent who investigated it and made the adverse report on it—this pal in this infamous work—he is informed that such man has a prior right and must be respected. And the gentleman from Illinois knows that the practice in the Land Office as now administered protects the man who went on the land under these circumstances and as a paid informer, and strikes down the man who lived there as an honest settler for years and helped to contribute to the growth and development of the country and to the making of a home for himself and family.

Mr. Speaker, it is against such wrongs that we protest. Is there anything unjust in what the Senate proposes? Is there anything unreasonable? Is there anything which should not meet the approval of the House? I think not.

Mr. Speaker, there is much we would like to say in speaking of the situation there so as to impress upon the attention of this House the wrongs perpetrated upon the settlers which we by this legislation propose to remedy and correct.

I, like my colleague [Mr. PETERS], was not in favor of the repeal of the pre-emption law. I thought it was that law which gave to these great Western communities their thrift, their prosperity, their wonderful development. I knew there were thousands of acres which never would be taken under the homestead law. I knew the man who went there to make his home preferred, generally speaking, to secure title to his land in six months, in order that he might have some credit at the country stores and with his neighbors, and in order that he might have his land taxed and contribute to the growth of the community, and especially that he might, if misfortune befell him, be able to sell his home for something, and save something from his misfortunes. I knew they were anxious to have that pre-emption law retained, but the House and Senate have virtually decided it shall be repealed.

And we only ask in connection with the repeal of these laws this manifestly just and reasonable legislation we are now contending for.

Not one cattle syndicate, as suggested, is here protesting against the General Land Office. They are not disturbed, so far as I know. For them a special immunity seems to be given. It is the honest settler, the man who claims merely 160 acres of land, who is poor and unable to reach the court personally, that is crying against these decisions and arbitrary practices, and praying that some legislation shall be passed which will give him some immunity and some security to his home. These cattle syndicates, of which so much is said, did not obtain their land under the pre-emption or timber-culture laws, but generally in direct violation of all statutes. They made their selections and then surrounded their inclosures with wire fences, and bid defiance to settlers and Government. They did this in violation of the law and in defiance of the rulings of the General Land Office; and if they are not removed it is because this administration refuses to carry out the law of Congress, which directs that these inclosures and wire fences shall be stricken down, and the lands so wrongfully occupied restored to the public domain and opened to the honest settlers of the country. It is not for these cattle syndicates we speak, but for the pioneer, the honest pre-emptor and homesteader, the bona fide purchaser, the home, and the family that we are pleading and speaking to-day.

As I was observing, there is much we would like to say on this subject, but in doing so we would take more time than can be given to us at this late day of the session.

Now some of these land-grant railroad companies really want this legislation. I do not mean the legislation protecting the innocent purchaser and settler, but the legislation advocated by the majority here, because it will be just what they want. Where there is no law by which settlers on the public lands can enter or obtain title except under the homestead law, hundreds and thousands will go to these land-grant railroad companies, who have land to sell, and buy lands from them, because by so doing they can pay cash, and obtain in a brief time a title to their homes.

One word more. The Senate bill also provides that where there is no suggestion of fraud for two years after final proof, where no accusation is made within such time by the Government or others that the settler violated the law in making his proof and establishing his claim, the same shall be confirmed to him or to his heirs by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and shall not thereafter be disturbed.

Is that wrong? Would you have the homesteader live there more than seven years, conforming to the laws of the country, making his improvements, doing all he could for the development of the country, before the land shall be confirmed to him? I appeal only for this as against the arbitrary decisions of the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, and ask only for reason and justice.

How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-two minutes of the gentleman's time remain.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. I reserve that time, and I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] if he desires to proceed in his own right.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not entertain any doubt that the House of Representatives intends always to do the proper thing. Never since I have been a member of this body have I entertained a suspicion that a majority of the House did not intend to reflect public sentiment in its action upon any matter with which it had to deal. In the question which we shall soon be called upon to vote I trust that the action of this House will be based on the recognition of what the existing condition of things really is, without regard to any feeling of personal hostility or manufactured sentiment which may be manifested on the part of any gentleman claiming the attention of this body as against any one occupying a subordinate position in either of the Executive Departments of this Government.

With the gentleman who now occupies the position of Commissioner of the General Land Office I have never been politically in sympathy. He and I have been as diverse in our views as men could well be upon party questions as such. I submit that the question of politics ought not to enter into this discussion in the most remote degree. And I regret to observe, Mr. Speaker, that all the gentlemen who oppose the adoption of the report of the conference committee seem to regard as their highest duty and their strongest point the denunciation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and his administration of the affairs committed to his trust.

I protest, sir, that the matters involved in this report are too weighty to be associated with any question of either criticism or justification of the performance of duty by a subordinate officer of a department. But since it has been made to appear prominent I take a single moment to reply to what has been said upon this point.

I do know, from my committee assignment, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Sparks, has been endeavoring, to the best of his ability, to perform his duty as an executive officer under the law. It is due to him that I should say this, because I believe it. Nor has my attention ever been called to any fact in his administration of the duties pertaining to his office in a single instance which could be attributed to a sentiment on his part other than that which I have indicated. I am at a loss, Mr. Speaker, to understand what is meant by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] when he says that this cry of fraud which comes up from the Interior Department, and is re-echoed from the room of the Committee on Public Lands is but a repetition of the old fable of "stop thief." Who is it that is being benefited by the stopping of the frauds which are being perpetrated under the public land system? Who is it that would be benefited by the carrying out of the ideas of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, assuming that he bases his action upon the law and the official reports made to him, except the people of this country? What private interest has he to subserve by administering the law as he finds it upon the statute-book? Is any money put in his pocket by deciding that entries are or are not fraudulent? And bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that none of the critics of this bill find any fault with the sustaining of entries in the Land Office. It is only when entries are canceled that any criticism is made; when the land is restored to the people.

Mr. Speaker, I confess to a feeling of weariness at the repeated attempts of a few gentlemen in the House to make the Commissioner of the Land Office the central figure of discussion whenever any matter of land reform is presented here; they talk about "his policy" and "his methods" in generalities and in fierce personal denunciation.

Let us be candid about this. Every one knows, who has any information on the subject, that the Commissioner can have no policy. The policy of his bureau is fixed by the Secretary; the Commissioner is only a subordinate officer, and all policies, all methods of administration, all general rules as to bureau operations must be approved fully by the Secretary before being executed; and I assert here emphatically that this is the case in the Land Office to-day.

In individual cases the Commissioner decides, but there is always a right of appeal, speedy and inexpensive, to the Secretary, so that every act of the Commissioner must, before it becomes operative, have the approval of the Secretary.

And you have not failed to notice, Mr. Speaker, that not a specific charge of criticism has been made in all this storm against the Commissioner except that he issued an order suspending the right of entry in certain localities for a limited time, for reasons stated. This I will notice later.

He simply administers the law as he finds it; more he could not do; less he would not; and he deserves credit and honor for it.

Would gentlemen have him do less?

Do they desire a weak, lax, inefficient enforcement of the law, such as has resulted in all this great loss to the Government—losses of lands conceded by all?

The statute requires bona fide settlement on public lands that they may be secured under the pre-emption and homestead laws; settlement, and not speculation; and he enforces it.

The law is the same precisely as it was when he came into office; and, mark you, Mr. Speaker, the only cause for complaint against General Sparks is his impartial, earnest, conscientious enforcement of the law as he finds it.

Do gentlemen know any middle ground that would be safe for the people, or permitted by Congress if known? Do they think the power could be safely confided to any Commissioner to wink at evasions of the plain requirements of the statute?

Can he do aught but follow the statute and the decisions of the Supreme Court, and merit approval? And I emphatically assert that that is precisely what he has done, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

He knew and saw, as we in Congress all have seen, the necessity for a reform of existing abuses; and he had the stalwart courage to attempt to execute it; his fault is a vigorous, possibly impetuous, honesty in enforcing proper, because existing, law; and he is succeeding, where a weaker, less courageous man would fail.

I repeat, sir, and I challenge denial, that the same rules are in force in the bureau under this administration that were in force under the last, with only two exceptions, and these unimportant; but the difference is they are now enforced, and with characteristic vigor and earnestness, as they should be.

I challenge, in justice to the Commissioner, these gentlemen who attack him to assert, to place on the record of this debate, some specific act of bad administration of his, except the suspension to which I have alluded and which I will justify by the precedents.

They will not, Mr. Speaker, because they can not; mark the prediction.

I do not mean the alleged inefficiency of a subordinate, to which his attention has not been called, but I mean a case where he is responsible.

I repeat, sir, that I have not an iota of sympathy with the political views of General Sparks. There is nothing between us except such relations as should exist between gentlemen and public servants desiring the public good. That he is a Democrat, ardent and partisan, and I a Republican makes no difference with me, however, in the matter here involved. I do not stop to consider whether the few words I say here in his defense against unwarranted sneers and innuendos are good politics. I know what I do is just, and only just to him as an officer and a citizen, and I am glad to have the opportunity and content with the exercise of it to treat him as I would expect to be treated by honorable gentlemen if I were in his place.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I would notice the criticism of the act of suspension of entries in certain localities under the order of June 2, 1886.

I shall take only a moment. That order was based on what was believed to be an urgent necessity and was issued only after full conference, formal and full, with the Secretary of the Interior, and duly became operative by his formal approval, the signing of his name to it and ordering its promulgation. And more, this was not done till after the President and the Attorney-General had been consulted about it, and it was not disapproved by them.

It was in the line of precedent of almost sixty years, numerous and important, but with this difference: In all the earlier cases the withdrawals and suspensions were all for the benefit of railroad, canal, wagon-road, or other corporations, and had the support, indeed were generally made on the request of eminent men in public life, for the benefit always of the corporations, and covering millions of acres of lands taken out of the operation of law.

I have one list here under my hand of withdrawals of 54,000,000 of acres for sixty-seven railroads not authorized by law, and made in the discretion of the executive officer, all before this administration.

The history of this practice is found in Senate Executive Document No. 170, first session Forty-ninth Congress, to which I call the attention of the House.

But this is the point I make: So long as the corporations of the country were the beneficiaries of this action not a voice was ever raised against it, nor have any of these gentlemen since even criticised these earlier acts so far as I know.

But so soon as a suspension is made to stop thieving and robbery and protect the public domain for the people Rome howls.

I undertake to say that no gentleman who has addressed this House will undertake to deny upon his knowledge of the situation that the reports made by the officials of the Interior Department are substantially true. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], in his eager, earnest, and somewhat florid denunciation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, asks, "When was it that this infamous spy system was inaugurated in the Interior Department, and who are the men who are engineering it?"

He asks, "When did this practice of sending out spies, of sending out informers, of sending out paid employés of the Department who are dependent, as suggested by my colleague, for the retention of their positions upon favorable reports which they make and send to the Commissioners?" When did it come into being? When was it inaugurated, and when pressed with such vigor and cruel pertinacity as at the present time?"

This inquiry, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] made with vehement earnestness, and assuming that it covered a criticism on the Commissioner, I noticed it was applauded by a few gentlemen sitting near.

The "spy system" referred to is the appointment of agents, eighteen in number, I believe, whose duty it is to report on all frauds they may discover to the Commissioner, and two inspectors, with like duty, to report to the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, sir, I answer the gentleman; and I speak by the card when I say that the "spy system" was introduced by a Republican Congress. The first provision of law for the allowance of special agents to the Interior Department was passed in the Forty-seventh Congress on an appropriation bill, and under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], recently elected to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman will permit me to say that when it was inquired how long these practices had existed I understood the gentleman from Illinois or some other gentleman to say, "Ever since 1841."

Mr. PAYSON. That is another proposition; the language of the gentleman's inquiry will speak for itself.

Mr. PERKINS. What I said in reply to that suggestion was that this practice of investigating by sending out spies, &c., was a recent one. It is true it was inaugurated four or six years ago; but still it is recent.

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely; and what was the necessity for it? That is the question with which this House is confronted. Is it new in the history of this Government for special agents to be sent out to ascertain and report upon any despoiling of the public substance? When was the time in the history of the Treasury Department when special agents were not traveling over this whole land for the purpose of detecting frauds upon the public revenue? And who ever criticised that practice? There is not a gentleman here whose memory runs back to the time when special agents of the Treasury Department were not appointed for such purposes. How is it in the Interior Department—in the Pension Bureau? Special agents are sent all over the country under the general pension laws to detect frauds upon the pension service. Let some crippled soldier undertake to get an increase of his pension by an affidavit from a neighbor, which is perhaps a little colored, and the man is arrested, prosecuted for perjury, and convicted; and nobody disapproves it.

Mr. GILFILLAN. But they allow the accused his day in court, do they not?

Mr. PAYSON. I am coming to that; and I beg gentlemen not to anticipate me. I will answer in my own way and in a manner which I believe to be candid and truthful every criticism made upon the bill now in conference. I desire to do this to the satisfaction of every gentleman who listens to me, and I hope I may be permitted to do so in my own way. At the same time, if on any point connected with this legislation I should fail to make my views clearly understood, I will regard it as a favor rather than an interruption if any gentleman will interrogate me.

As I was about to say, what was the necessity for the introduction of this system into the Interior Department? It was because during the administration of President Hayes, when Mr. Teller was Secretary of the Interior, it was found that the public lands were being rapidly reduced, so that men going out to settle upon them found that great areas of those lands were being grasped by syndicates of capitalists who had obtained a foothold, in consequence of which those who desired to settle upon the lands were compelled to get them by purchase from somebody who, without proper warrant, asserted a claim to them. When this matter was brought to the attention of the Interior Department a recommendation came to this House signed by Mr. Teller as Secretary, asking an appropriation for the payment of fifteen agents to investigate this character of land transactions. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] was then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. An appropriation was made in a general appropriation bill for the pay of these agents, and they were sent into the field.

Did this cry of "fraud" originate for a political purpose and on the part of somebody who desired to perpetuate himself in office? I answer no, emphatically, no; and I have personal knowledge of the facts, having been a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and having had the matter brought to my attention.

Sir, the system began because there was a necessity for it, because it was plainly apparent, and which has since been demonstrated, that a system of public plunder, never equalled in the history of crime against the Government, was being carried on, and to detect the details of it agents were necessary.

It was inaugurated by a Republican Congress to correct palpable abuses, not as a party matter, but a measure of administrative reform, and in which there was practical unanimity of action on both sides of the Chamber.

At the last session I had the honor, in a speech which I then made, to call the attention of the House to an interview which had been had with Mr. McFarland, then Commissioner of the General Land Office, as to how this system of special agents was working, whether or not it was satisfactory to the Department, the amount of land that was discovered to have been fraudulently acquired, and various matters of that sort. I do not now propose to take up the time of the House by going over that interview again, as it is enough for me to say, Mr. Speaker, that the then Commissioner of the General Land Office was in favor of its continuance, and he, in the criticism made, said there were not enough of them provided by the law to accomplish the results which he knew could be achieved if a sufficient force was placed at his disposal for that purpose.

Now, as to the extent to which this has gone, I will enter into no dispute with gentlemen who say they know that not 25 per cent. of the entries are fraudulent. I do not care what the percentage is, Mr. Speaker; I do not care whether it is 10, 20, 40, or 90 per cent. of fraudulent entries, it is enough for me to know with certainty which amounts to absolute conviction that frauds exist; that frauds on the public-land system to an enormous extent are being daily perpetrated. Gentlemen concede that to some degree.

Let me ask you, Mr. Speaker, conceding that these things are done, conceding that to some extent the public domain is being despoiled by thieves, how else is that fact to be determined except by special agents of the General Government? That is the question I ask.

What other method can be adopted? Certainly none other has been suggested.

In the criticism of the Interior Department and of its methods in unearthing the frauds which are practiced against the public land system there has come no suggestion of remedy by the gentlemen who oppose this bill; no such suggestion has been made in reference to it. But it is said there is favoritism in it, that these special agents are corrupt men, that they use the power of their office for their own purposes—that some are guilty of bribery and corruption, and others of favoritism; indeed, so far as the criticism has gone in another place, at the other end of this Capitol, the charges made that the attempt on the part of the special agents to unearth the frauds against the public land system are only leveled against the poor men, the occupants of 80 acres and quarter sections, and that the great thieves of the country, the cattle syndicates and associations of capitalists, are allowed to go, and are never investigated.

I see in the RECORD that it is said at the other end of the Capitol, in the same line of statement as that indulged in here by the opponents of this bill, "Every agency which cupidity, which hate, which malice, self-seeking and private revenge can suggest has been exerted against the honest settler on the frontier, not, mind you, against the cattle-man, but against the individual entry-man," &c.

And in the same line the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] assents:

> Not one cattle syndicate, as suggested, is here protesting against the General Land Office. They are not disturbed so far as I know. For them a special immunity seems to be given.

Mr. Speaker, I was greatly astonished when I read the first abstract just given, and I am utterly amazed that it should be repeated now and here.

The gentleman should know, for he can ascertain the fact on the merest inquiry at the Department, that exactly the reverse is the truth, that the cattle-men and their methods are the principal objects of inquiry by the Department (for the frauds there are greater as to area of land than elsewhere), and more results are attained as to them than as to any others.

"No cattle syndicate is protesting against the Land Office," says the gentleman.

"No effort is made, mind you, against him," comes from the Senate—and doubtless very many gentlemen sitting here believe this.

I have here, sir, a set of resolutions adopted by the "Consolidated Association of the Cattle-Growers of the United States," held at Chicago, in my State, in November last:

> Resolved, That this convention, composed of men from more than thirty of the States and Territories of the Union, representing the farming and stock-growing interests of the entire country, and especially of the Western States and Territories, hereby declare:
> That they cordially indorse the statements made by Governor Hauser, of Montana, Governor Warren, of Wyoming, and Governor Stevenson, of Idaho, in their recent official reports to the Secretary of the Interior upon the question of the use and disposition of the Government lands in the West.
> That they pronounce the policy of Hon. W. A. J. Sparks, Commissioner of the General Land Office, to have been detrimental to the true interests of farmings settlers throughout that section; that his action has been productive of great injury, injustice, and suffering to the men who are endeavoring to create homes and support their families under the privations and trials of frontier life.
> That the broad charges of fraud made by the Commissioner against these men are not founded in fact.

That the isolated instances of fraud present no ground for the universal proscription that he has declared against these men; and, lastly,

That, under the cover of an intention to preserve the lands for the actual settlers, he is in reality and in fact instigating and conducting through his special agents a system of espionage foreign to our institutions, unworthy of American citizenship, and by suspicion of illegality thus cast upon the entries and titles of the farming class as a whole, a vast injustice is done them by which no public good is subserved or obtained.

The newspaper report of the meeting shows that the passage of the resolution was urged by two gentlemen, their names given, and that at a subsequent stage of the proceedings, on motion of one of these gentlemen, this action was had:

The Chair was authorized to name a committee of five to attend the next Congress and lobby in the interest of legislation for the cattle interests.

The association then adjourned.

And on this committee of five the same gentleman was appointed, and I have seen him here in the Capitol during this session, I assume "lobbying in the interest of legislation for the cattle interests."

I have taken occasion to look up the record of this gentleman at the Land Office, for it is a singular fact, which can be demonstrated by any gentleman here, that in almost every instance—understand me, in almost every instance—where a party rushes into the press to denounce the Land Office, or the Department, that party has a record in the Department as a land grabber, and on a large scale!

So I looked him up, and I find that he is one of a corporation formed out of two partnerships in which he was named and largely interested, which corporation is engaged in acquiring vast areas of land in one of the Territories, and that quite recently at one land office final proofs were offered on thirty-nine entries, aggregating 24,960 acres—all the proofs of compliance with the law made by only four men in the whole thirty-nine cases; these were employés of the corporation and made the entries before a notary public who is also its employé, nearly all the alleged entrymen being non-resident of the Territory and residing in the city of Boston, and have never been nearer the land than that city!

The register rejected the entries because they were palpably in the interest of the cattle company.

Thousands and thousands of acres of public land—I think over 45,000 acres—are in like condition as to fraudulent attempt to secure title by this same corporation, the record as to which may be referred to by any member of this House.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is with the best of grace and from the purest and most disinterested of motive that this man prepares and urges the passage in a convention of cattle-men of a resolution denouncing the methods of Mr. Commissioner Sparks, and that his policy is detrimental to the true interests of the farmers of that section!

"Let us see, Mr. Speaker, as to the farmers of that section." I have in my mind the holding of land of another great corporation in that part of the Union.

A section of the country nearly 50 miles in width and nearly 100 in length, an area larger than the area of each of several of the States in the Union, is under the control of this company, a portion of which largely less than one-half being railroad land and procured from it by this company; but upon all this vast area of land there is not to-day a single free holder, not a man upon it except at the will and pleasure of this company as a visitor or an employé!

Think of it, an area larger than Rhode Island or Delaware, a large portion of it secured, as I have good reason to believe, by fraud, ay, crime, and not a free holder there! Not a spot on which an American foot can rest without permission of this corporation! A large part of its capital owned by aliens, too.

I am told that the man who is at the head of this enterprise, who has been in this city for some time during this session, doubtless "lobbying in the interest of the cattle-growers," and cursing Sparks, is now in the gallery listening to my remarks [laughter and applause], and he doubtless voted in the convention that the policy of the Department is prejudicial to the best interests of the "farming community" in his section of the Union!

Let it be so. But, sir, knowing the methods of these men, an attack from them is one of the most satisfactory testimonials that the commissioners can have.

Mr. PERKINS. Why was this case not investigated?

Mr. PAYSON. It is being investigated. The Interior Department is now investigating the matter; and the reason why more of these frauds have not been discovered is because of the parsimony of the House of Representatives, which demands of the Interior Department the scouring of an area of country as large as the whole of Europe with only eighteen men.

We stand here, Mr. Speaker, and when an appropriation bill comes up we quibble and haggle as to whether or not we will give fifteen or sixteen men to aid in this work in the Interior Department to determine such questions and to discover by actual observation such frauds as are being perpetrated. That is the reason why more are not discovered; the Department has not the force and the House refuses to furnish it.

Why, it needs only the sending out of a man of ordinary intelligence anywhere upon the public lands, the occupancy of which has been desirable within the past four years, and start him in any direction on horseback or on a buck board and he can stretch out his hands in this manner, and every one of his fingers will point in the direction of a fraudulent entry.

But, resuming, I have another case in mind in that part of the Union. One company has procured in a very few years over 30 miles of continuous water front on the North Platte River and sufficient land behind this to control hundreds of thousands of acres there.

Now, sir, in all seriousness I ask any of the gentlemen from the Territories here how it is possible for any one, individual or corporation, under a proper administration of the public land laws, which require as to that country either settlement or reclamation these vast areas of land?

There is but one answer, sir; nor are these isolated cases.

Believing that some such statement might be made that the rich were not being interferred with, I have collected a few cases of that character of land entries which are being investigated by the Land Office, from which the House can see whether these statements are sustained by the facts, and I only cite such cases as are of record in the Department of the Interior.

Twenty-seven entries in Bent County, Colorado, covering 4,320 acres, made in the interest of a cattle company, reported and adversely acted upon.

Two hundred and ten entries in Bent and Las Animas Counties, Colorado, covering 32,000 acres, made in the interest of a cattle company, of which 104 have been reported upon, all adversely, and 47 canceled.

Two hundred and forty-three entries in Custer County, Nebraska, covering 36,000 acres, made in the interest of a cattle company, 61 of which have been reported upon, and 18 canceled.

Twenty-eight entries in Albany County, Wyoming, made in the interest of a cattle-man, covering 8,000 acres; 10 reported upon, and adverse action taken.

Thirty entries in Bent County, Colorado, covering 4,500 acres, made in the interest of cattle-men; 27 of which have been reported, and 16 adversely acted upon.

Three hundred and sixty-five entries in the Humboldt District, California, made in the interest of a lumber company, covering 58,000 acres; 320 reported, and 249 adversely acted upon.

Eighty entries in Pueblo County, Colorado, covering 12,000 acres, made in the interest of a cattle company; 22 reported, and 8 adversely acted upon at date.

Twenty-five entries in Pueblo County, Colorado, covering 4,000 acres, made in the interest of a cattle-man; not reported individually as yet. Agent investigating.

Twenty-five desert entries in Laramie County, Wyoming, covering 45,000 acres, made in the interest of a cattle company; 38 adversely reported, and final proof tendered in 37 cases for the reason that the entries were not bona fide.

One hundred and seventeen desert entries in Laramie County, Wyoming, made in the interest of a speculative company, covering 74,000 acres; general adverse report in all, and individual adverse reports in 19 cases. Remainder being investigated.

In the two cases last preceding the entries were made almost wholly in the names of non-residents, principally of the Eastern States, who never saw the lands, and were simply made use of to obtain title, signing their names for a consideration to the papers presented, and which could only be used through perjury.

Twenty-one entries in Umatilla County, Oregon, covering 3,000 acres, made in the interest of one speculator, all adversely reported, and acted upon.

Thirty-six entries in Finney County, Kansas, covering 5,700 acres, made in the interest of a cattle company. At the trial of the suit to compel removal of fences maintained by said company, the manager testified that the entries were made at the solicitation of the company and were controlled by it.

Sixteen entries in Grant County, Oregon, covering 1,500 acres, made in the interest of a cattle company; 12 reported, and all acted adversely upon.

Twenty-one entries in Geneva County, Alabama, covering 2,500 acres, made in the interest of a lumber firm; all reported upon, and adverse action taken.

Forty-five entries in Cowlitz County, Washington Territory, covering 7,000 acres, made in the interest of a lumber man, all adversely acted upon.

Twenty-five entries in Bent County, Colorado, covering 3,800 acres made in the interest of a cattle-man all reported and adversely acted upon.

Forty-eight entries in Saint Louis County, Minnesota, made in the interest of an iron company, aggregating 6,500 acres, all adversely acted upon.

Twenty-eight entries in Brown County, Dakota, covering 4,400 acres, made in the interest of a live-stock company, ten entries acted upon, all adversely.

Thirteen entries in Bent County, Colorado, covering 2,000 acres, made in the interest of a cattle-man, eight cases reported and all acted upon adversely.

Twenty-five entries in the Duluth district, Minnesota, made in the interest of a lumber company, covering 4,000 acres, all acted upon adversely.

Ten entries in Chehalis County, Washington Territory, covering 1,€00 acres, made for one speculator, all adversely acted upon.

Sixteen entries in Whatcom County, Washington Territory, covering 2,500 acres, made in the interest of a mill company, all adversely acted upon.

Two tracts in Saint Louis County, Minnesota, covered by entries aggregating 25,000 acres, all made in the interest of two lumber companies, adverse reports in each case.

Six entries in Klamath County, Oregon, covering 1,200 acres, made in the interest of a cattle-man, all adversely acted upon.

Twelve entries in Cowlitz County, Washington Territory, covering 2,000 acres, made in the interest of a lumber company, all adversely acted upon.

From these statements, Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that the twenty-five cases specified, where the fraudulent entries were made for the benefit of large operators, include 1,522 entries, covering 350,520 acres, and that to date 753 of the entries have been adversely acted upon. The remainder of the number with a few exceptions are awaiting action.

And these are only indicative of the situation. This day could be exhausted in reciting the details of the records of the Department, the facts of which, sir, are not disputed by those in interest, and these all occur in so limited a section of the Union that on an ordinary map of the United States you may cover it with your hands.

In other sections of the Union the work of robbery by the wealthy and respectable has been going on.

I heard that a prominent citizen of Oregon was here denouncing Commissioner Sparks and his methods, and I took occasion to look him up, and found at the Department a letter from a reputable citizen of Portland, a portion of which is as follows:

In this city, which is in the county of Multnomah, one George Mizner, a livery-stable keeper in this city, in the employ of one J. B. Montgomery, a railroad contractor, hired a hundred or more of the irresponsible classes in this city, composed of gamblers, negroes, and others of the vicious order to be found in the purlieus of all cities, of which we have a full share, to apply to the above-named land offices to enter timber lands in the manner of the inclosed printed application. (Under act June 3, 1878.)

This agent of Montgomery furnished them with the numbers of the tracts they were to severally enter, to be followed by a deed to Montgomery as the ostensible title was perfected. For this service they received from $15 to $25 each, and all expenses incurred, till returned back to Portland. Others are engaged in the like fraud here, but I instance this as a leading representative of what is now going on in these two land districts. The greed of fees seems to have blinded the integrity of the land office officials, for the well-known infamous character of many of the applicants could not have been unknown to them.

The testimony, so-called and simulated for the several occasions, was taken for Cowlitz County, Washington Territory, before one S. W. Beall, probate judge, whose antecedents will entitle him to the confidence of those in this fraud or any other.

Believing it my duty as a citizen to place these facts before you,

I am, yours, respectfully,

——— ———.

An agent was sent to look into this, and I have here a list of entries, fifty-one in number, embraclng 8,012 acres, nearly all reported on as fraudulent, and made upon criminal acts as to entries and proofs so strong that this man has been indicted by the grand jury of his neighbors for his part in the transaction, and, I am advised, is now here trying to secure delay, if not dismissal, of the criminal proceeding without trial, and damning Sparks. [Laughter and applause.]

In the Northwest criminal proceedings have been instituted—indictments found against the officers of the Montana Improvement Company, an immensely wealthy corporation, which has doubtless robbed the Government of millions of dollars' worth of timber—eighteen indictments found, and by the unanimous verdict of the grand jury.

Now, will the gentleman from Kansas say that no cattle-men or wealthy syndicates are protesting? That they are not disturbed? That there seems to be a special immunity to them? He speaks, sir, on this point clearly without having examined the records, and I hope the information which I have given will silence such attacks and charges hereafter.

Mr. PERKINS. Would the Senate amendment, if accepted by the House, confirm in any manner or ratify or validate such possession?

Mr. PAYSON. Practically, yes. I will be glad to tell you why.

Mr. PERKINS. I will be glad to have you tell me why. I ask the gentleman to tell me if there is anything in this eighth section of the Senate amendment which in any way validates or legalizes or ratifies the title.

Mr. PAYSON. If adopted it would do it. It would prevent the Government of the United States from ever acquiring an acre of the public lands back again, and I will give you that presently if you will be patient.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to know from the gentleman how these two men, this company he speaks of, obtained the land.

Mr. PAYSON. I can tell the gentleman how I believe it was done. But in that particular instance I can not tell, because it is now being investigated, and the facts are not made public. But I am asking information myself, and want an answer from somebody who will tell me how it is possible under a proper administration of the public land laws for these two gentlemen to legally acquire that amount of the public lands within five years, and I yield the floor to have an answer.

Mr. PETERS. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. PAYSON. I would be glad to yield for the information.

Mr. PETERS. They could not have obtained the lands unless there was collusion in the local land office.

Mr. PAYSON. First, doubtless, perjury in the proofs, and possibly collusion in the local land office. I have no doubt about it. I think that is the way it was done; and I will tell you how it can be done and how I know it was done in many cases, if I may believe those men who were personally interested in the transaction. It was done by men of means hiring men to go on the lands and make colorable entries, paying them a monthly salary for their services. I may take three minutes in explaining for the edification of members around me how this is done. [Cries of "Go on."]

The desert land act allows a man to take a quantity of land for himself only, not exceeding 640 acres, upon due proof of reclamation. Here is a stream running, we will say for the sake of illustration, from this point around to where my friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] sits.

I want to get possession of this property, and I hire Tom, Dick, and Harry, hire men everywhere, to go and make desert-land claims with an agreement on their part that as soon as the proof is presented and recognized in the local land office they will turn the evidence of title over to me. That is done. It is true the men have got to commit perjury in order to accomplish it, but what does that amount to when you are robbing the Government? It does not amount to anything apparently. The desert-land act requires that there shall be reclamation, that there shall be water conducted upon the land. I hold here in my hand official records to show that men who have made entries in this way take a plow and go and run a line, plow a dead furrow up hill and down, around and about, and go back to the local office and swear that a ditch has been constructed, no matter how steep the hill may be, for water is presumed to run up a hill for the benefit of a man who desires to rob the Government—that a ditch has been constructed and is ready to have the water conveyed into it as soon as the head works are constructed. The conveyances are then made to the employer and the men are paid off.

As to the land which requires actual settlement as is required by the homestead and the pre-emption laws, here is a favorite way of doing it. The law requires there shall be proof of a house being erected, and that the man making the proof is the actual occupant of the land and resides in the house. They will build a house and put it on wheels. The man hired by the party desiring to make the entry goes and in sleeps in the house one night, then goes to the nearest land office, and swears he lived in the house situated on the land 9 feet by 12, with a second story, and all that sort of thing, giving a minute description of what for that country would be a pretty excellent house. Next morning a pair of oxen are attached to the house and haul it on to the neighboring piece of land, and the same process is gone through. My colleague sitting near me [Mr. PLUMB] tells me a man in his town was one of a party of capitalists who, by just such methods, secured in one county in Nebraska 27,000 acres of the public lands, and the records in the Department show it.

Mr. PETERS. Is the title those men have obtained to this land worth the snap of your finger?

Mr. PAYSON. Legally, no—because it is reported on by agents, and the entries are suspended, and the land will probably never be patented, but the entryman will have his compensation in denouncing Sparks—but under the Senate bill, legally, yes. And I may as well come to that now as at any other time.

The new proposed eighth section is as follows:

SEC. 8. Provided, That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land-office, until such error has been corrected: Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, the Commissioner shall hold the entry for cancellation, which action shall become final unless within sixty days from notice thereof the claimant or other party in interest shall ask in writing for a judicial investigation of the case, and thereupon the Commissioner shall suspend further action in the case and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained; Provided, That nothing herein shall be held or construed to impair the rights of any bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of any such land under existing laws, and all purchasers and mortgagees of record, and all other persons claiming an interest in any such lands under the original claimant, shall be made parties to such proceedings and may defend in their own right. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years after the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead, timber-culture, and desert-land or pre-emption laws, or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest againt the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

It proposes an entire revolution of existing law. What the present system is I may assume is known without going further than to say that it holds that the title is in the Government to all public lands until patent issues, that the receipt of the local land office is only the evidence of a right, and that so long as the title is in the Government the Department of the Interior has jurisdiction to investigate all questions connected with the entry and compliance with the law on the part of the entryman.

This new section proposes to divest the Department of all power of that character if the entryman or party in interest shall, in writing, request the transfer of the matter to the courts. Then all matters pertaining to the case must go to the Department of Justice and a suit be brought formally by the United States to cancel this certificate, and this applies to all cases now pending as well as to come.

Now, sir, has any gentleman in this House ever tried to move the Department of Justice to bring suit for the benefit of the General Government in anything? I can not illustrate my own views in reference to it better than to relate a little personal experience.

Mr. PERKINS. I have heard of a pan-electric company which succeeded in moving the Government.

A MEMBER. Electricity can do anything.

Mr. PAYSON. In the Forty-seventh Congress, in investigating this kind of transaction, I came upon what is known as the Earl of Dunraven entries of Estes Park in Colorado, and with which my friend in front of me [Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa] is somewhat familiar. We ascertained the fact was that this gentleman, a nobleman abroad, coming over here on a hunting expedition, went down into Estes Park, a beautiful spot, I am told—I have never been there—embracing an area of many thousand acres included in the mountains, a perfect oasis in the desert; and he suggested he wished he could own all the land he could see.

There happened to be an accommodating gentleman in the party who knew how these things could be done, and before that party separated a contract was made with a land agent in Colorado who contracted for so much pay in addition to the Government price of the land to secure a patent title to this land for this nobleman, and that thing was done. The official papers with reference to the transaction on the investigation I have had in my desk until about four or five weeks ago. That was done by means of mythical entries and the use of names of men who never existed and by perjury that was waist deep to the men who were in it, and through a man of the name of Thomas White the Earl of Dunraven was vested in the title of that property, and controls it to-day.

In my verdancy, in my early experience in Washington, I supposed that when a thing of that kind was brought to the attention of the officials something could be done to cause a reversion of that land to the Government. I went to the Department of Justice several times, backed with a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller, and tried to get the ex-Attorney-General, Mr. Brewster, to file a bill to set aside the title to this land. I met with a failure. I have tried it twice under this administration. I am done. [Laughter.] The record is open. Whether any suits ever will be commenced I have no means of knowing.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement?

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. I understand the gentleman from Illinois intimates there never have been any suits brought in the courts of Colorado to set aside fraudulent entries of public lands.

Mr. PAYSON. I said no such thing. I said I have never been able to move the Department of Justice here in a plain case. I understand the gentleman from Colorado himself was attorney for the Government in that State and prosecuted many cases successfully after patent had issued.

Mr. SYMES. The Department of Justice has often been moved and acted upon in this matter, and by proceedings in court fraudulent entries of land have been set aside and the lands restored to the public domain. As far back as 1877 I was employed myself by the Government as special counsel and took charge of twenty-six suits. I gained every one of them by a decision of Judge Dillon, and there was restored to the public domain one of the finest tracts of land in the Arkansas valley.

Mr. PAYSON. Set aside on account of fraudulent entries?

Mr. SYMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, it seems there are some frauds in Colorado.

Mr. SYMES. Have I denied it?

Mr. PAYSON. Perhaps not; but others have

Mr. SYMES. Let me make this further statement.

Mr. PAYSON. I can not yield further.

Mr. SYMES. Then you do not want to know the facts.

Mr. PAYSON. I do want to know the facts. Does the gentleman from Colorado intimate that we of that committee are not in favor of land reform?

Mr. SYMES. But you are intimating no other gentleman is; and because there have been big frauds in Colorado, frauds which I have denounced and have helped to unearth, that by a sweeping order of the Commissioner every honest settler must have his title suspended after having obtained a legal title to his land by entry. This is what you are doing.

Mr. PAYSON. Can the gentleman distinguish any difference between that and the line that we have been pursuing? Can he point to a single fact or a single instance in the history of the present Commissioner of the Land Office that is not in the interest of the people of this country under the law as it stands to-day? If he will tell me how much time he wants to point out such an instance I will yield it to him if he does not ask too much.

Mr. SYMES. It will take me only a minute or two.

Mr. PAYSON. I will yield the gentleman one minute to point out such an instance.

Mr. SYMES. Give me three minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, no.

Mr. SYMES. Give me five. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, no.

Mr. Speaker, the same state of facts which the gentleman from Colorado says he has helped to unearth in that State exists in every Territory in this Union, and when I say that you can not move the Department of Justice in Washington in cases of that kind, as a matter of practical operation of law, I believe it.

Mr. SYMES. You believe it, but you do not know it.

Mr. PAYSON. I believe that I know it. Does the gentleman from Colorado know what the eighth section of this bill provides? I will ask him whether he has even read it?

Mr. SYMES. I have read——

Mr. PAYSON. Yes or no?

Mr. SYMES. I have not read it [laughter]; but other gentlemen who have read it have explained it to me.

Mr. PAYSON. Gentlemen insist here that the House conferees have not done their duty, although they confess that they have not even read the bill and do not know what the difference is between the House and the Senate conferees with reference to this eighth section.

But, Mr. Speaker, I pass now to another point that has been overlooked by every one in this discussion, as to the difference between the House and the Senate. Did political parties mean what they said in their platforms when they all resolved that the public domain was the heritage of the people for the establishment of homes in the future? Political parties have been tumultuous in coming to the front in the last six or eight years upon that proposition, and how do they say that the public domain is to be distributed? In small allotments for actual occupants.

In obedience to that sentiment, the Committee on Public Lands of this House recommended, and the House passed, in the last Congress a law providing that thereafter no public lands should be subject to private entry at $1.25 per acre. Great areas of public land exist to-day which are subject to entry at $1.25 an acre, in quantities limited only by the desire of the purchaser and his capacity to pay. We thought that ought to be stopped, and we recommended that it should be stopped and that thereafter no lands should be subject to entry in that way. That bill went over to the Senate and in the last Congress they concurred with us.

In this Congress, at its last session, we adopted the same provision in our bill and sent it to the Senate, and then the Senate struck out that provision, thus saying that all the public land that is now subject to private entry shall continue to be so; and, in a speech which I had the honor to deliver here last July, I published a list of men who, in anticipation of this bill becoming a law, had made entries in the States of Mississippi and Louisiana aggregating 1,800,000 acres in less than four days. The bill, however, did not pass, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], as he stated in a low tone when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] was addressing the House, is in receipt of a communication from the local land office in his State informing him that, in anticipation of some legislation of this kind, great areas of lands in his own State are being taken up by speculators at $1.25 per acre, a large proportion of which lands are fit for homesteads.

Now there is a difference upon this subject between the Senate and the House. The Senate desire that these things shall go on, but the House of Representatives is determined that they shall be stopped, if we have the power to stop them.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. Do not the Senate conferees agree with you that the pre-emption law and the timber-culture law shall be repealed?

Mr. PAYSON. They do; but they couple that agreement with a condition. While they agree that the evils resulting from the operation of the pre-emption law and the timber-culture law and the desert-land law, as those laws stand upon the statute-books, are of such a character that they should be brought to an end by repealing the laws, yet they couple that agreement with the condition that the House conferees shall accept their idea of what the proper remedy is for any supposed invasion of individual rights in connection with this subject.

In other words, the Senate agrees with the House that these laws are vicious and should be repealed; that the evils grow out of the infirmity of the laws themselves, but because, in the judgment of a few Senators, there should be a new remedy for the enforcement of individual rights as against the Government in public land cases, this remedy must be adopted or the whole bill shall fail. Notwithstanding, the proposed remedial legislation is earnestly opposed by the officers of the Interior Department, all of them, as impolitic, inexpedient, and impracticable.

Secretary Lamar has given several opinions with reference to it, one a formal letter to a Senator, and others on conference with regard to it, and all adverse to it.

Yet these Senators, assuming to regard this question of remedy (and about which there is such conflict of judgment and the overwhelming weight of judgment against the proposed change) as paramount, persistently attach it to our bill, a bill which the people demand and have demanded for years, and prefer that the bill should fail utterly unless their demands are complied with and the House yield its convictions.

Mr. Speaker, I do not impute motives to any one, but I do not believe the Senate cares to pass any bill repealing these obnoxious laws. Look at the history of the attempt we have made to comply with the people's wishes.

In the last Congress the House passed the same bill in substance that we passed here—a repealing act, pure and simple; the Senate committee recommended the same bill, with some amendments perfecting it, but involving no new principles—a repeal of these laws and a suspension of the privilege of purchasing Government lands at private entry in large quantities.

In the Senate an amendment was added, not germane to the bill, to confirm certain private entries of public land in Michigan, about which there was then, and possibly now, grave doubts in the minds of many Senators and Representatives as to its propriety. It was purely a private matter, affecting only a few individuals, and yet, against the earnest protest of the friends of the bill, this amendment was loaded on it, and the bill failed because of it.

In this Congress we passed, in the House, the same old bill. Later experience emphasized the necessity for it. It went to the Senate. All but the enacting clause was stricken out, and this bill passed, loaded down with new schemes, some of which, involving vast areas of land, like the "mountain homestead," never heard of outside the room of the Committee on Public Lands till the bill was reported. Conferences were had, and because the House conferees would not yield in these matters the bill went over the vacation.

During the very last days of the session the announcement was made in the Senate that the Senate conferees had offered to strike out of the bill the clause validating fraudulent entries, and had agreed to yield so far as to confirm only such entries as were in the hands of persons who held 320 acres; and this was refused, it is said.

It was also asserted that the House conferees declined to sign a report setting forth the points of disagreement. So it was not in the power of the Senate conferees to report.

Mr. Speaker, the first knowledge I had of these statements was recently, since my return from Illinois, and my attention was called to them by you.

In justice to myself, I feel called upon to state that I was present at every conference last session, and it is strange, but true, that I never heard of these proposals till I read them recently in your room in this Capitol since my return.

I do know that we, the House conferees, made the offer to the Senate, in order to reach an agreement on the proposal in the Senate bill to validate fraudulent entries, that we would agree to a clause validating all such entries where they had been sold to bona fide purchasers, who were actual settlers to the extent of 160 acres, and we practically agreed to enlarge the amount to 320 acres, if the Senate would agree.

I prepared the offer for the House conferees, and hold the identical paper in my hand containing the offer by interlining in the printed Senate bill.

These offers came from us, sir, in every case.

I have in my hand, also, as corroborating evidence, a statement which I prepared for a member of the press, giving our understanding of the situation as to the difference on this and the eighth section of the bill, and I submitted it to Mr. COBB for his indorsement; this was immediately after the last conference at the last session; we then talked as to whether it would be proper to give to the public the substance of matters in conference, before final report, and finally concluded that it might not be proper; so the paper was placed in my desk, where it has since remained, and this is it:

The new section (8) provides a rule of practice for the Commissioner of the General Land Office in all cases where fraud is alleged in entries under the general land laws; it requires in all such cases, first, that the Commissioner shall suspend the issue of patent and send the case to the Department of Justice for legal proceedings in the courts to vacate the receiver's certificate. The action has an exception in these cases of fraudulent entries, "unless the lands have been sold to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration." In such case the matter can not be transferred to the Department of Justice for litigation, but the title must stand. The effect, of course, is to deprive the Commissioner of all power to investigate and adjudicate questions of fraud in public land entries; it deprives the Commissioner of all power to cancel entries after final certificate—a power that officer has had and exercised since 1834, and approved by every Secretary of the Interior since then, including Mr. Secretary Teller, in the Cogswell case, 3d Dec., 23; the Tower case, 2d Dec., 779; and Mr. Secretary Lamar in the Chrisinger case, decided January 25, 1886, by requiring in all such cases the certification of them to the Department of Justice for litigation, except in case of sale as stated, which sales are by the section impliedly validated.

The new rule proposed would place the entire burden on the Government of requiring in all cases the making of formal pleadings in court proceedings, of details of fraudulent entries, and of the proofs as well, instead of the easy, practicable method hitherto practiced, of hearings at the local land office, and would require the long formal proceedings in court on confessed fraudulent entries, which have been found very numerous.

Besides, it creates the new rule, a total innouation, that a sale of the entryman's equity, however barefaced and fraudulent, for a valuable consideration passes the title to the purchaser, and the Government is bound.

The law and rule of decision of the Department has always been that the Government only dealt with the entry-man; if he had performed and came with "clean hands" and had sold, the title to him would inure to the purchaser; but the purchaser must use care and see to it that the entry-man performed, because the Government only deals with him. This proposed new rule would be an incentive to fraud, by the prior announcement that all frauds must be certified to the courts, except where the land was sold, in which case the buyer would be protected.

Of course every fraudulent entry would go into the hands of a "purchaser for value."

The old rule is the safest, most expeditious, and best, and has the advantage of being settled and well understood. The House conferees appreciate the force of the argument that it sometimes happens that an innocent settler buys but a fraudulent entry-man's claim and is put to hardship; to relieve this class we have offered the Senate this compromise for their general validating proposal.

We agree to a provision, which we offer, that no matter how fraudulent an entry may have been, we will validate it if it has been sold to a bona fide purchaser who is in possession of the land, by himself or tenant, to the extent of 160 acres, and have intimated that we would raise the amount to 320, possibly, rather than have the bill fail; and also, to guard against any alleged harsh rulings by this administration, that the rules in force when the entries were made shall be the rules by which they shall be closed. This protects every honest settler fully, and relieves the purchaser from all frauds of his vendor, the entryman, and modifies the law for his benefit.

But the Senate refuses this.

I prefer that the bill should fail, deeply as I regret it, rather than to see section 8, either as originally presented or as modified, adopted into the law.

I feel sure that if it were adopted there would be no use for the division of the Department for the detection of fraudulent entries, and that every entry hereafter would be made good against the Government.

The old law and rules, with whatever imperfections they may have or whatever occasional hardships they may impose, are infinitely to be preferred to the new rule proposed, if the public lands are worth preserving from unlawful acquisition.

The public demand is for the repeal of these laws. This the House bill meets. The Senate concede this by passing the repeal, but connect with the repeal these condoning provisions which the House refuses, and which have not the approval of any of the officers of the Interior Department.

Nor is the statement true that I declined to sign a report setting forth the disagreement between the committees. I would gladly have done so. I regret that there should be an attempt to fix any responsibility for the defeat of the House bill upon us, and I also regret that there has appeared to be a necessity for raising a question of veracity in the case, but I am compelled to state my knowledge of the facts and present the papers made at the time, in support of it, and in which statement my co-conferees fully concur.

Mr. LONG. Now tell us why we should not agree to that remedy?

Mr. PAYSON. I will tell you why you should not. First, because there is no necessity whatever for it. These laws having been enforced as they have been for the last forty years and more, how does it happen that for the first time in the history of the nation there comes up a demand that there should be an overturning of a well-established, perfectly satisfactory, and orderly proceeding in the Public Land Office?

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Will the gentleman inform us at some point in his remarks how these Senate amendments would ratify fraudulent entries?

Mr. PAYSON. I will first get through the point I am discussing. The difficulty with the Senate conferees is that in insisting on their amendments they base their position upon the assertion—and this is the ground also of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD]—that the receiver's certificate as between the entryman himself and the United States is evidence of title. The gentleman from Nebraska, whom I do not now see in his seat, asserts that it is held that the receiver's certificate is evidence of title on the part of the entryman; that the courts have so decided everywhere. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I hold in my hand—I will not consume time with it, but will incorporate it in my remarks—a brief of the authorities on this question, and this brief presents numerous and uniform decided cases holding the contrary doctrine.

The Supreme Court of the United States has thus held time and time again until now it is so fully accepted as the settled law that no case is presented in that court asking for a review of the doctrine that the title never passes from the General Government until a patent issues as between the Government and the entryman. Furthermore it has been repeatedly held that the receiver's certificate is simply evidence of the entryman's right—to what? To receive from the General Government a patent for his land, not because the receiver and register have passed upon the matter, but, after it shall have been examined and approved by the superior officers in the Department of the Interior, and that he can not convey any better right than he has. That has always been the practice under the Government.

In the early history of the land laws the question was made in the courts as to whether or not the Commissioner of the Land Office first, and after him the Secretary of the Interior, had any revising power under the public land laws to protect the Government against imposition; and I repeat, the Supreme Court of the United States has always affirmed that doctrine; there has never been a decision even squinting toward the contrary view. The leading case on this question is that of Myers vs. Croft, in 13 Wallace. The Supreme Court there lays down the doctrine that as between the entryman and the Government his right to the patent is secure, provided he comes with "clean hands" to the Interior Department.

The brief to which I alluded is as follows: First, on the point that the entryman can not convey a better right than he has; that the purchaser stands in his shoes:

As against the United States the purchaser takes only what his vender has to convey. In Yost vs. Shields (1 Woolworth, 353) the court said:

"It is further insisted on behalf of the defendants that they are bona fide purchasers, and that they, as such, are entitled to the protection of the court. I think it pretty clear that some at least of these defendants purchased and paid their money without any knowledge in fact of any defect in the title. Yet they are not bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice, in the sense in which the terms are employed in courts of equity. And this for several reasons:

"They all purchased before the issue of the patent. The more meritorious purchased after the entry had been assailed and decided against by the Land Office. But this is a circumstance not material to this consideration. Until the issue of the patent the legal title remained in the United States. Had his entry been valid, Shields would have taken only an equity. His grantees took only an equity. They did not acquire the legal title. And in order to establish in himself the character of a bona fide purchaser, so as to be entitled to the protection of chancery, a party must show that in his purchase and by the conveyance to him he acquired the legal title. * * * After he had gone through with the process of making the entry, after he received the patent certificate, Shields had no more right or title or interest in the land than he had before. As he had none he could convey no interest in the land. By the deed which he made and by the successive deeds which they received, his grantees took no more than he had, which was nothing at all."

This is a declaration of the law which governs judicial determinations in all this class of cases. It is the law itself as declared by all authorities on jurisprudence, and as settled by legal opinions and judicial decisions from the earliest period of the general pre-emption system to the present day. In 1836 Mr. Attorney-General Butler (3 Op., 92) said:

"The assignee of the pre-emption certificate (supposing it, for the purposes of this opinion, to be assignable) takes it subject to all the equities existing between the original parties—the United States and the settler to whom it was given—even though he had no notice of such equities at the time of the assignment and payment of the purchase-money; and that he can acquire a specific execution of the engagement contained in the pre-emption laws on no other terms than could have been insisted on by his assignor, the original vendee.

"The error of the argument in favor of the assignee consists in assuming that the equities of the parties are merely equal, and that the legal title is in the assignee. The legal title, until letters patent shall have issued, is in the United States; and if their equity is merely equal to that of the assignee, yet it must be preferred, because they have the legal title. The doctrine as to purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice is applicable for another reason. If this were a case in which the parties were both suable the appropriate remedy of the assignee to compel the vendor to complete the title would be a bill for a specific performance. In other words, as the United States are in possession, and refuse to convey, the assignee must necessarily be the plaintiff. But a purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice, is not ground on which to maintain a suit. It can only be used as a defense; it is a mere shield, and not a weapon of attack.

"In all cases of this sort the rule caveat emptor is particularly applicable; and if the assignee has chosen to part with his money without providing suitable means of indemnification to meet the contingency of a failure of title in his assignor, he must submit to the consequences of his indiscretion."

In a recent decision by this Department (R. M. Chrisinger, 4 L. D., 347), the honorable Secretary of the Interior said:

"It is insisted by counsel and ably argued at length that the assignees of Chrisinger, being bona fide purchasers after entry, are entitled to intervene and have their interests protected, as they took without notice of any defect in the final proof.

"This proposition is not tenable. It involves the principle that although the claim for title while in the hands of the entrymen is worthless on account of his failure to comply with the law, such claim may be strengthened and made a matter of absolute right by virtue of a transfer to an innocent purchaser. The converse of this, however, is true. Conceding the right of sale after the issuance of final certificate and prior to patent, the purchaser takes no better claim for title than the entrymen has to confer, and whatever right is thus acquired is subject to the subsequent action of the Land Department."

It is obviously proper to apply the same rule to the Government in the matter of pre-emption claims that regulates the transfer of property from one individual to another. That rule is caveat emptor. It is uniformly so applied.

In the case of Whitaker vs. Railroad Company (7 Copp., 86) it was said by this Department under Mr. Secretary Schurz:

"In all cases of purchases of pre-empted lands before the issuance of patents therefor the rule caveat emptor is particularly applicable; and if the entries are fraudulent or void the purchasers acquire nothing. And it has been held in cases of entries under the early pre-emption laws having like provisions to those of section 13, act of 1844, and section 2262 Revised Statutes, as well as under later acts, that the doctrine of bona fide purchaser is not applicable to one who purchases of a pre-emptor before patent, and that such purchasers must abide by the disposition of the cases by your office or this Department, that they take no better title than their vendors have, and that your office and the Department had full authority to cancel pre-emption entries for invalidity or fraud. The foregoing conclusions will be found to be fully supported by the following authorities, the numerous decisions cited in United States Digest, volume 14, page 59, paragraph 1242 especially,

"Barnes vs. Childs, 10 Peters, 179, and Vattier vs. Hinde, 5 Peters, 271; Arnold vs. Grimes and Chapman, 2 Iowa (Clarke's) Rep., 99; Anketel vs. Convers, 17 O. "Further decisions upon the same point are: Harkness vs. Underhill, 1 Black, 31; Garland vs. Wynn, 20 How., 6; Gray vs. Stockton, 8 Minn., 472; Hill vs. Miller, 36 Mo., 183; Bettis vs. Amonett, 4 La., 363; Pepper vs. Dunlap, 9 Rob. C., 281, and numerous others."

It must be conceded that the law is well settled that the same rule not only ought to be applied but is applied to the Government that regulates the transfer of private property from one individual to another. What is sought by spoliators of the public domain is to induce Congress to ingraft in the statutes the principle that the Government cannot avail itself of the common rules of law applicable to transfers of property between individuals, to assert the somewhat exploded doctrine that the United States has no power to protect its own property.

In private transactions bona fide purchasers for value after deed are protected. So in respect to public lands. Bona fide purchasers for value, after patent, are protected. But neither in private nor in public transactions can purchasers before deed or patent demand a conveyance from the legal owner of the property, nor do they possess the character or have the standing of bona fide purchasers.

The propositions that the transfer of a claim adds anything to its efficacy against the United States, or that a certificate of purchase is in the nature of an investiture of title, or that the purchaser of an entry before patent is in any legal sense an innocent purchaser, are refuted by decisions hereinbefore cited. Many others might be referred to.

In Irvine vs. Marshall, 20 How., 555, it was held that although a certificate may be the subject of bargain and sale yet the United States can take care that conveyance shall be to him who is in good faith its vendee, and the court said:

"The reception of the certificate of purchase as evidence of title may be regular and convenient as a rule of business, but it has not been anywhere established as conclusive evidence, much less has it been adjudged to forbid or exclude proofs of the real and just rights of claimants."

A mere declaration in writing by a vendor that the vendee has paid the purchase-price of land, and that he intends to give him a deed, is not a document purporting to convey title. (Osterman vs. Baldwin, 6 Wall., 116.)

Legal title does not pass by contract of purchase without deed, and one who holds or claims by contract only is not protected as a bona fide purchaser for value. (Boone vs. Chiles, 10 Pet., 177.)

It will not do for a purchaser to close his eyes to facts which are open to his investigation for the exercise of that diligence which the law imposes. Such purchasers are not protected. (Boush vs. Wall, 15 Pet., 111.)

Purchasers by quitclaim deed even are not regarded as bona fide purchasers without notice. (Oliver vs. Piatt, 3 How., 333; May vs. Le Claire, 11 Wall., 217; Dickerson vs. Colgrove, 100 U. S., 578.)

Party without title can not acquire it by payment of taxes on land. (Homestead Co. vs. Valley R. R., 17 Wall., 153.)

A purchaser of land must look to every part of the title which is essential to its validity. (Brush vs. Ware, 15 Pet., 112.)

States have no power to declare certificates of purchase of equal dignity with a patent. (Bagnell vs. Broderick, 13 Pet., 436.)

If, before patent issues, the land department finds the entry erroneous it may treat the assignment as void, and, notwithstanding it, set the entry aside. (Franklin vs. Kelley, 2 Nebr., 79.)

The act of 1841 provides that the entry shall be made with the register of the land office. The acts organizing the Land Department of the Government provide that the action of the register shall be subject to revision and supervision by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and entry with the register is dependent upon the approval of his superior, so far as the course and order of the business go; and, without the affirmative action of the Commissioner, the patents issue. It would be a great evil if a party claiming a pre-emption right could, as soon as his entry was made, convey the land to a third party, and thereby prevent the Commissioner from re-examining and disapproving the entry if it was erroneously allowed. Such course would expose the Government to serious loss, and pervert a statute conceived in a wise policy and a generous spirit into a means of perpetrating the greatest frauds. This is the mischief aimed at. The object was to protect the Government, and in this view the language—that the right secured by the act should not be assigned—is apt. As between the claimant and the Government, his interest is a right merely until the patent issues. It is subject to reinvestigation and, on inquiry, to be disregarded by the Department. Until the patent issues, it is treated by the Government not as a title, but as a right or a claim of right.

I admit that if an entry under the act is made with the register, and the Commissioner finds that it was illegally allowed, as, for instance, if the entry is upon lands not subject to pre-emption, and he sets it aside, a conveyance intermediate the entry and the official act of vacating it would be void. Such a conveyance would be within the mischief. But if a valid entry be made, and a patent issued upon it, a conveyance intermediate those two acts would not be within the mischief. The issue of the patent is a confirmation of the entry; it relates back to it, and takes effect from it. (Astrom vs. Hammond, 3 McLean, 107.)

The courts have often ruled that where the right to a patent has once become vested in a purchaser of public lands it is equivalent, so far as the Government is concerned, to a patent issued. (Stark vs. Starrs, 6 Wall., 402; Simmons vs. Wagner, 101 U. S., 260.) But none of these decisions hold that the certificate and receipt of the register and receiver is conclusive evidence that a right has vested, nor that a patent is not necessary for the conveyance of the legal title. In Myers vs. Croft, 13 Wall., 291, the court says that the pre-emptor could sell after entry if he came up and made his proof and payment "with clean hands." But he must be in good faith the owner of the land and have "done nothing inconsistent with the provisions of the law on the subject."

Again, on the question of the power of the department to cancel entries, it may be said that the validity of a conveyance depends upon the validity of the entry, and that has always been a proper subject of inquiry by the Land Department at any time before patent issues, and by the courts in a proper proceeding afterward.

In the case of Harkness vs. Underhill (1 Black., 316), counsel for plaintiff urged that—

"The register and receiver having sold the land to Waters in conformity with the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office had no further power or jurisdiction over it. Neither had the Commissioner of the General Land Office power to set aside the sale even for fraud. This could only be done by judicial authority."

Counsel for defendant in reply cited the language of the supreme court of Missouri in Green vs. Hill, 9 Mo., 322:

"It is the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to revise the proceedings of the register and receiver and vacate entries which may have been illegally made, and thereby arrest the completion of a title originating in fraud, mistake, or violation of law." And to the same effect: Perry vs. O'Hanlon, 11 Mo., 585; Huntsucker vs. Clark, 12 Mo., 333; Nelson vs. Simms, 23 Miss., 383; Glen vs. Thistle, 23 Minn., 42; Mitchell vs. Cobb, 13 Ala., 137; Dickinson vs. Brown, 9 Smeade & Marshall, 130; Gray vs. McCance, 4 Ill."

The court (Mr. Justice Catron) said: "The question is again raised whether this entry having been allowed by the register and receiver could be set aside by the Commissioner.

"This question has several times been raised and decided in this court upholding the Commissioner's powers. (Garland vs. Winn., 20 How., 8, Lytle vs. The State of Arkansas, 22 How)."

In Barnard vs. Ashley (18 How., 43), the court said that the power of supervision by the Commissioner of the General Land Office "is exercised by virtue of the act of July 4, 1836, which provides 'that from and after the passage of this act the executive duties now prescribed, or which may hereafter be prescribed by law appertaining to the survey and sale of the public lands of the United States, or in any wise respecting such public lands, and also such as relate to private claims of land and the issuing of patents for all grants of land under the authority of the Government of the United States, shall be subject to the supervision and control of the Commissioner of the General Land office, under the direction of the President of the United States.'

"The necessity of 'supervision and control,' vested in the Commissioner acting under the direction of the President, is too manifest to require comment, further than to say that the facts found in this record show that nothing is more easily done than apparently to establish, by ex parte affidavits, cultivation and possession of particular quarter-sections of lands, when the fact is untrue. That the act of 1836 modifies the powers of registers and receivers to the extent of the Commissioner's action in the instance before us, we hold to be true. But if the construction of the act of 1836 to this effect were doubtful, the practice under it for nearly twenty years could not be disturbed without manifest impropriety.

"The case relied on, of Wilcox vs. Jackson (13 Pet., 511), was an ejectment suit, commenced in February, 1836; and as to the acts of the register and receiver, in allowing the entry in that case, the Commissioner had no power of supervision, such as was given to him by act of July 4, 1836, after the case was in court.

"In the next case, 9 How., 333, all the controverted facts on which both sides relied had transpired and were concluded before the act of July 4, 1836, was passed; and therefore its construction, as regards the Commissioner's powers under the act of 1836, was not involved, whereas, in the case under consideration, the additional proceedings were had before the register and receiver in 1837, and were subject to the new powers conferred on the Commissioner.

"In Vaquire vs. Tyler (1 Black, 195), the court recognized and affirmed the 'plenary powers conferred upon the Commissioner by the act of July 4, 1836,' and said that the powers of the Secretary of the Interior under the act of March 3, 1849, to revise on appeal is 'necessarily coextensive with the powers to adjudge by the Commissioner.'"

In Shepley vs. Cowan (91 U. S., 340), the court say:

"The officers of the Land Department are specially designated by law to receive, consider, and pass upon proofs presented with respect to settlement upon the public lands with a view to secure the rights of pre-emption."

In the case of C. P. Cogswell, decided by Secretary Teller July 21, 1884, it was said:

"In the case of Moore vs. Robbins (96 U. S., 530) as to one 40-acre tract there under consideration, there had been two sales and two final certificates issued; one to the pre-emptor and one to a purchaser at a public sale. The court held that the Secretary of the Interior (the contest having reached him on appeal) 'had the authority undoubtedly to decide finally for the Land Department who was entitled to the patent; and though no patent has been issued, that decision remains the authoritative judgment of the Department as to who has equitable title to the land.' As to the other forty, patent having been issued, the decision held that all jurisdiction had passed to the courts.

"In the case of Harkness vs. Underhill (1 Black, 316) an entry had been made and a final certificate issued and recorded in the county recorder's office, when the question was raised whether the entry, having been allowed by the register and receiver, could be set aside by the Commissioner. The court held that the question had several times been raised and decided in the affirmative by that court, and cited Garland vs. Wynn (20 How., 6) and Lytle vs. State of Arkansas, 9 How., 314).

"In the case of Horace Whitaker, ex rel. Nathan H. Garretson, vs. Southern Pacific Railroad Company, decided by this Department in July, 1880 (2 C. L. L., 919), Whitaker was the pre-emptor, who had made proof and payment and had received a final receipt. Garretson was a bona fide purchaser of the land from Whitaker, and held under a deed executed by him some months after he received the final certificate. Upon a hearing ordered and had subsequently to the issuing of the final certificate, it was found that Whitaker's pre-emption affidavit and pre-emption proofs were false and fraudulent, and upon such finding it was held that 'Garretson's claim, so far as the Department was concerned, was defeated.' It was further held, 'that the doctrine of bona fide purchaser is not applicable to one who purchases of a pre-emptor before patent; that such purchasers must abide by a disposition of the cases by your office or this Department; that they take no better title than their vendors have; and that your office and the Department had full authority to cancel pre-emption entries for invalidity and fraud.'

"The case of Margaret S. Kissack, decided by this Department in September, 1880 (2 C. L. L., 421) was that of a commutation of a homestead entry. Kissack purchased the land by deed, and claimed 'that patent ought to issue for her benefit as a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration.' It was found that Frazier, the entry-man 'had failed to comply with the requirements of the homestead law,' and it was again held that 'Kassack purchased no better title than Frazier had, and took subject to the action of your office upon the entry.'

"In Root vs. Shields (1 Wool., 340) the sale was made after entry, but before patent. Mr. Justice Miller states in his opinion that some at least of the 'defendants purchased and paid their money without any knowledge in fact of any defect in the title. Yet they are not bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice in the sense in which the terms are employed in courts of equity.'

"Congress has assumed that your office has the power to cancel entries after payment and final receipt, by providing, in many instances, for the repayment of the purchase-money 'upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt.'

"The petition sets forth that the laws of Minnesota, where the lands in question are situated, declare that thefinal receipts shall be received in the courts as prima facie evidence of title. But the courts of Minnesota have repeatedly decided that 'parties purchasing from pre-emptors before the issuance of the patent take subject to the authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cancel the pre-emption entry and defeat the rights acquired by it.' See Randall vs. Edert (7 Minn., 369), Gray vs. Stockton (8 Minn., 472). Both of these cases show that after payment and final receipt the lands had been transferred several times, and at the time the entries were canceled were obviously held by bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration.

"The practice of your office and the law as settled by the courts is not inconsistent with the character of the title which arises upon payment and final certificate, conceding, as we do, that the 'right to a patent once vested' is 'equivalent to a patent issued,' and that a certificate can no 'more be canceled by the United States than a patent.'

"Generally, then, a patent may be canceled for the same causes that would authorize the cancellation of a certificate. For instance, a patent may be canceled 'if there be any equitable reason as against the Government' why the patentee should not retain the patent; 'if it has been issued without authority of the law or by mistake of facts or by fraud of the grantee, the United States can by a bill in chancery have a decree in chancery annullinge the patent.' 'Nor is fraud the only ground upon which a bill will be sustained. Patents are sometimes issued unadvisedly or by mistake, where the officer has no authority in law to grant them, or where another party has a higher equity and should have received the patent; in such cases courts of law will pronounce them void.' (See United States vs. Stone (2 Wall., 535), United States vs. Schurz (102 U. S., 404).

"If the patent has issued, the jurisdiction to make cancellation is in the courts; and if your office has improperly issued a patent, it can not issue a second while the first remains outstanding (Moore vs. Robbins, 96 U. S., 530).

"But, as we have seen, your office has jurisdiction for proper cause to cancel entries, after payment and final certificate, before patent. The principle upon which the cancellation proceeds in the case of either final certificate or patent is essentially the same; the tribunals are different.

"Although your office may be informed of the fact that a pre-emptor (who has complied with the law) has sold his land after final certificate, nevertheless it will issue the patent to the pre-emptor. The instances are exceptional, and are expressly pointed out by statute, where the patent for public lands issues to the transferee.

"The Land Department deals directly with the pre-emptors, with its own vendees, with the persons with whom it contracts. It can not undertake to follow the transfers of the grantees, to settle the questions which may arise upon such transfers, and attempt to adjust the character of alleged bona fide purchasers for value from its own grantees. The Government issues the patent to the pre-emptor, and such questions, if they arise, must be determined by the courts. See Kissack's case (supra).

"Purchasers from persons who hold final certificates purchase with notice that the Land Department is but an administrator of the law, and that it has no authority to issue patents to pre-emptors or entrymen who have not complied with the law or have procured their certificates by fraud.

"The petition, therefore, so far as it proceeds upon the ground that the petitioner is a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration, and should therefore be protected and patent issue without regard as to whether the pre-emptor complied with the law or procured his final certificate by fraudulent practices, must be denied.

"The petitioner, however, alleges that the final proofs of the pre-emptors complied strictly with the law; that the proofs taken upon the hearing ordered, and upon which the entries were canceled by your office, were uncertain, indefinite, and not sufficient to authorize such action; and that he had no notice of such hearing.

"This Department has recognized the right of the purchasers to appear and be heard upon the question whether the entry-man has complied with the law (Whitaker, ex rel. Garretson, vs. Railroad, supra.) Such a purchaser would be a proper if not necessary party in a bill to cancel a patent alleged to have been procured by fraud."

Therefore, the principles settled by the courts are that the action of registers and receivers in admitting an entry of public lands is not conclusive, but is subject to review by the superior officers of the Land Department, by appeal in cases of contest between private parties, and as a matter of executive supervision in cases not of individual contest; that the latter are cases between the Government and the entry-man alone; that assignees before patent have no standing as innocent purchasers; that the right of the entry-man to sell after certificate has issued and before patent, is simply of such interest as he has; no more; that until patent issues on public-land entries the legal title to the land remains in the United States; that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may reject and cancel unpatented entries for illegality and fraud; that this is necessarily an act of executive jurisdiction; that the duties of supervising the disposal of public lands are executive duties and are not the subject of judicial interference; that the question of passing the title of the United States upon an entry of public lands under the public-land law is essentially a question of executive and not of judicial determination; that the point where the jurisdiction of the courts begins is the point at which executive jurisdiction ceases, namely, after patent has been issued, when, in a proper proceeding, the courts may intervene to correct the errors of executive action; and that it is only after the conveyance of legal title by patent that purchasers for value are protected by the courts.

This, sir, is, as I believe, the settled law of this matter; it is well understood and works well in the Department, and is only complained of among those interested, by such as are evading the plain, easy terms of the law.

There never has been any difficulty in the execution of the law until the last year of Mr. McFarland's administration as Commissioner of the General Land Office. Then applications for patents upon these fraudulent entries came in so rapidly, volume after volume, that finally it came to be noticed in the Interior Department that there was something wrong.

The inquiry was suggested, "Why is it that so many of these entries are coming in?" For it was noticed that frequently hundreds and hundreds of them were made on the same day—made by men living in a locality thousands of miles away from the land. I have now in my mind one made by citizens of Cook County, Illinois, in the interest of a prominent merchant of that city; ninety-eight entries, I think, purporting to have been made in a single day by citizens of that county.

Upon an investigation, these gentlemen said, "We were never out there at all, and do not know anything about it." Some of them were employés of this merchant, who stated that they signed the paper because they had been requested to do so.

Thus, when the Department began to look into the matter, it was found that these things were being done in a manner to constitute a fraud upon the system. These applications were held up, not by a formal suspension, but there was delay for the purpose of examination. And there never has been a complaint made of the practice of the Department in this matter—a practice authorized by the law of 1842, and sustained by uniform decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States—until within the past two or three years, when the cry has gone up for a change in the remedy, and when made by parties in interest, always, mark the word, always by those holding doubtful claims.

For, Mr. Speaker, in all my experience here I have never known of a half dozen cases of complaint against the present system made by men claiming 160 acres or less of public land; the complaints that have come to my knowledge are always by speculative holders, moneylenders, or parties claiming large areas of land.

Again, gentlemen here assume that the settler is deprived of any hearing; that every proceeding before the local land office is ex parte. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS]—and what he said was said deliberately, for I noticed that he was reading a prepared speech from manuscript—cited a case which he said was typical of the entire situation—a case in which the original entry-man sells out to another man, who goes into possession, builds his house, plows his land, plants his orchard, and does everything of that kind in entire ignorance of the fact that some special agent has made a report upon which the original entry was canceled, and he hears for the first time the fact after the entry is canceled, so that this innocent settler is compelled to buy his land from somebody who contests his title. Now, let me be understood by everybody in this House. There never was a time in the history of the Interior Department except, perhaps, about fifteen days, during which a decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, subsequently overruled by the Secretary of the Interior, was in operation—with this exception, there never was a time when under the practice of the Department, in case of a contest, the entryman has not been notified; and not only he, but every party who may be in possession—and everybody whom the Department can ascertain as a transferee or mortgagee—is notified not only with reference to the fact that there is a contest as against the land, but more than that, every one interested is put in possession of the knowledge of what the special agent's report is.

I have before me a copy of the notice which is served in such cases. Here is a form of notice such as was served upon a cattle company in Wyoming. This is the notice:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: Henry R. Hudson made pre-emption cash entry No. 147 December 8, 1883, of the S. E. ¼ Sec. 1, T. 5, R. 38 W., alleging in his proof to have settled December, 1882, surveyed the land, and built a house; has 300 posts for fencing; broke 2 acres, 1½ acres cultivated; value of improvements, $75; residence continuous; is a single man; used land for stock-raising.

On December 24, 1886, Special Agent George B. Coburn reported that he had made a personal examination of said tract and found no improvements of any value on the tract in April, 1886, except wire fence, which, according to claimant's own statement, was made subsequent to proof. Claimant never established a residence on the land. He now has a wife, and is residing at Culbertson, Nebr. The entry was made at the instance and in the interest of one Thomas Cooper, who was a stockman having heavy interests in the vicinity of the land in controversy.

Entryman also admits that the declaratory statement upon which entry was based was not signed by himself; it is, therefore, a forgery. Land was conveyed to Cooper September 7, 1883, by warranty deed for $500, from Cooper to W. J. McGillen two months prior to September 7, 1883, and has since been conveyed to the "Harlem Cattle Company."

Said entry is accordingly held for cancellation.

You will give claimant and transferees due notice of this action, informing them of the nature and substance of the special agent's report, as set forth above, and advising them that they will be allowed sixty days in which to apply for a hearing to show cause why said entry should be sustained, in accordance with circular instructions of July 31, 1885, and that if they fail to show cause why this entry should be sustained the same will be finally cancelled.

Respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

REGISTER AND RECEIVER,

Similar notice is given in all cases under an imperative order of the Commissioner.

What more can be asked? The claimant and transferees are given due notice of this action. They are informed of the nature and substance of the special agent's report, as set forth above. Not that there is simply suspicion against him, but the substance of every fact the General Government has against that man, and advising them that they will be allowed sixty days in which to apply for a hearing and show cause why said entry should be sustained in accordance with circular instructions.

These notices are served on everybody interested. Then comes the hearing. Now, members will assume from what has been said by gentlemen living in the West these hearings are ex parte, and that the burden of proof is upon the entry-man to show what he has done was done in good faith. Everybody, I doubt not, within the hearing of my voice, listening to this debate, with the exception of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], to whom I showed this paper—but we will come to that after awhile—everybody, I say, within hearing of my voice believes that the entry-man has to go there and make what proof he can. Now, what has been the settled law by the Department—and I have a decision in my hand showing exactly what it is; and perhaps I can not occupy the time of the House better than in correcting misapprehension as to what the proof is. In the first place, there must be notice in it, the substance of the report of the special agent, stating the facts, and setting apart a time for the hearing.

If the claimant or party in interest, purchaser or mortgagee fails to appear at the hearing, then the entry is canceled, but in all cases with the right of appeal; but if in reply to the notice the claimant or any party in interest offers to show cause, the hearing is ordered. Then before the claimant is required to offer evidence on his part the Government presents its testimony, and instead of the burden of proof being upon the entry-man the burden of proof is put upon the Government, and it is required to establish the truth of the charge by such witnesses as may be produced.

A MEMBER. Then the report is only advisory.

Mr. PAYSON. It is only advisory; is not treated as proof on the hearing; and, moreover, the entryman is put in possession of every fact the Government has. It notifies the entryman of exactly what charges he is required to meet.

This, sir, is the official direction to officers in cases of alleged fraud, or contest on account of it:

When from the report of a special agent it appears that an entry is fraudulent, or from any other cause its validity should be inquired into, such entry should not be canceled upon the report of the agent or the testimony accompanying it, but should be held for cancellation, and the entry-man should be notified of such action and allowed sixty days in which to apply for a hearing to show cause why the entry should be sustained; and if it appears from the report of the special agent that the entry has been transferred, the transferee shall also be notified as well as the original entry-man. If at the expiration of such time the claimant fails to apply for a hearing to show cause, the entry should then be canceled by the action of your office.

But if in response to such notice, the claimant offers to show cause why the entry should be sustained, a hearing should be ordered, at which the Government should offer proof to sustain the allegation that the entry is illegal or fraudulent before the entry-man shall be required to present his defense. Such hearing is a proceeding de novo, at which the register and receiver should not consider the ex parte testimony contained in the agent's report, but in all such cases where the entry has been regularly made and final certificate issued, the burden of proof is on the Government, and it will be required to establish the truth of the charge at the time of the hearing by the examination of the special agent or such other witnesses as may be produced, so that the entry-man may have the opportunity of cross-examination as allowed by law. This rule was clearly announced in the case of George T. Burns (4 L. D., 62), and will be strictly adhered to. See also James Copeland (Ib., 275).

You can see, sir, how accurate the statements are which have been made with reference to these proceedings by gentlemen who oppose this bill.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] asks why this should not go to the courts, as provided in the eighth section. The eighth section overturns the law of the land by assuming the title is in the hands of the entry-man when he gets his certificate, as I have shown in the brief I have presented. That has never been held to be the law. It puts the burden on the Government in a slow, formal, legal proceeding against the party, and in order to show in what the fraud consists and set out all details of it.

In the second place, the Senate bill provides that in cases of fraud the case must be certified to the Attorney-General, unless the land has been sold, &c., then it can not be, thus validating everything that has been disposed of by the entry-man.

Mr. PERKINS. Is not the gentleman mistaken as to that?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir. I have the printed bill before me, and it so reads.

Mr. COBB. No; it has not been stricken out; not a word of it.

Mr. PAYSON. In the bill which I have here it is provided—

That unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor.

Mr. STRAIT says so, and Mr. COBB says not.

Mr. COBB. I assert as a matter of fact it never was stricken out or agreed to be stricken out.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is mistaken in that, I think.

Mr. STRAIT. The Senate conferees did agree to strike it out.

Mr. COBB. I say they did not.

Mr. STRAIT. Well, I say they did.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, whether that is true or not, it does not weaken the argument, because it provides (that is, the amendment as now written) that in those cases wherever there is fraud discovered to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, if the party claiming the title shall request it in writing, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the Land Office to hold the entry for cancellation, and certify the entire matter in dispute to the Department of Justice for adjudication by legal proceedings, in which case the United States shall be made the plaintiff, throwing the burden of proof upon the Government, and the party claiming title the defendant, and the trial shall be proceeded with under all the ordinary forms of law. Now how will this operate if this provision of the bill should be adopted by the House?

Take, for instance, the Swan Cattle Company, of Wyoming, covering an area as large as Rhode Island. They hold their lands by assignment from men who have removed—no one knows where. Nobody knows where they are, and it would be impossible to reach them. You have then to assume the responsibility of filing a bill that there was something wrong in the original entry, and undertaking to litigate as against the parties in possession who merely assert in response to your plea that they are purchasers in good faith and that they are to be protected in every right. I think that is the exact language of the bill:

And all purchasers under the original claimant shall be made parties to such proceedings, and may defend in their own right.

That is the language they put in. Now, where is the necessity for such a proceeding? It is practically an impossibility on the part of the Government to do this. The Government practically makes a present of the lands to the men who will go and occupy them under the present laws. It imposes no hardship upon them to make the proof required to the satisfaction of the officers of the Government, and if at the end the Secretary of the Interior shall refuse to recognize their rights upon appeal, the party may always, for the courts are always open, go into the courts for the maintenance of the rights he may claim to have, and which he alleges are interfered with. The Government should have control of the land till the title passes, as a matter of public policy, and purchasers from the entry-man should see that he has performed. This is the well understood law and it ought not to be changed.

Every person with whom I have been brought in contact who is in favor of the perpetuation of the present system, and others who are in ignorance of the exact condition, but who doubtless desire to do right in protecting the public domain, admits that only by such means as the House proposes can we retain the small remnant of our public lands for the benefit of future settlement.

The Secretary of the Interior has carefully examined this section, and summarizes his objections to it as follows:

The provision in section 8, lines 17 to 22, requiring judicial proceedings to cancel a final entry, I totally disapprove of for the following reasons: First, it is a radical departure from the letter and the spirit of all former land laws; second, it assumes that title passes out of the United States by an entry or location, whereas both the Department and the courts have almost invariably held to the contrary; third, it divests the Land Department of a jurisdiction over entries which it has always exercised, which does and of right ought to belong to it until the issue of patent, and for the exercise of which adequate quasi-judicial machinery has been or may be devised; fourth, it will provoke a multiplicity of suits, since it contemplates a complete trial in the Land Department and another in the courts, with the result of an increase of expense both to the claimant and to the Government; fifth, it will prolong controversies over the issue raised, often for several years, whereas the preliminary trial, with the appeals, must also usually consume one or more years, and it will thus tie up the land for an unnecessarily long period in the hands of persons adjudged by the Department to have entered by fraud, and to the great and often irreparable damage of other and bona fide adverse claimants; sixth, it will result in flooding the courts with the already great quantity of contested entries, whose number will be vastly augmented by the resistance of those fraudulent entry-men who now never take an appeal when their wrongdoings have been exposed; seventh, it will discourage the institution of contests, for it will create delays and finally take the conduct of the cases away from the contestants, who are under existing laws the best safeguards against fraudulent entries, which are so readily made by reason of the ex parte proceedings at final proof; eighth, it is opposed to sound policy, for the reason that the surest guarantee of bona fide settlement and entry is facility of contest, followed by a swift, sure trial, and a summary cancellation upon proof of the fraud.

I am of opinion that this provision, which would be an incentive to and a protector of fraud, should be eliminated, and that instead thereof the following provision should be inserted: "The Commissioner shall suspend the issue of patent and hold the entry or location for cancellation, with right of appeal to the Secretary of the Interior; and if appeal be not taken as prescribed by the regulations, or if the Secretary should affirm the decision of the Commissioner, the entry shall be canceled and the land and all moneys paid therefor shall be forfeited to the United States."

Where, then, is the demand for this kind of legislation proposed by the Senate? I do not know, except the three or four gentlemen from Kansas and the gentleman from Nebraska. I do not know of anybody who is opposing the proposition of the Public Lands Committee; but I do know, sir, that there has been a demand from all over the land for the repeal of these vicious laws as independent propositions that this House and the Senate of the United States ought to heed.

I speak within bounds when I say that now in the room of the Committee on the Public Lands there are petitions filed by more than 150,000 voters of this country demanding the entire repeal of these laws. More than 150,000 voters of the laboring men of this country have petitions for the passage of this bill repealing the pre-emption law, the timber-culture law, the commutation feature of the homestead law, and the desert-land act. It seems as though that wave of public sentiment is spending itself without results.

It is the old contest of capital against popular sentiment, and, as usual, it looks as if capital would win.

It is the struggle of the monopolist against the people, and, as usual, the people must, it seems, yield.

By delay, inaction, and insisting upon all sorts of amendments, this bill will probably be killed again, and under the provisions of these laws and the frauds rendered possible by them, the process of making millionaires and paupers at the same time will be continued.

Immense estates are being created which will in time breed trouble in this land.

It seems to be regarded by some that it is of more importance to have grazing grounds for immense herds of cattle, secured by capitalists illegally, than to preserve the lands for homes for men and their families; but I shall continue to keep up my protest and perform my duty so long as my voice can command attention or my vote exert an influence.

Sir, no attention is paid to these monster petitions of the laboring men, nor to public sentiment as shown by the newspapers of the land and the votes in this House; but we, your committee, and the strong majority in this House, on both sides of the Chamber, are endeavoring, in obedience to that sentiment, to pass this bill; and if the time shall come when a change in the form of remedy shall be deemed expedient we propose to present for the consideration of this body that kind of a bill which we believe to be proper and right to pass. We do not believe that this is such a bill. We believe that it would be subversive of the very best interests of the Government, and in that we have the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lamar, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Sparks, and their predecessors in office for four years.

Mr. LONG. If the eighth section is objectionable, can you not put it in some form so as to preserve to actual settlers or purchasers the right to go into court for the purpose of settling title?

Mr. PAYSON. I have said, Mr. Speaker, that we have offered that to the Senate in our proposal to it, to validate all entries in the hands of purchasers who were settlers, and that has been refused, and a careful section was drawn by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and I had something to do with suggesting it, the substance of which was that in any case such as the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests, the party would have the right on his own motion to go into any court he might choose, and a notice sent by the clerk of that court to the Secretary of the Interior should be regarded as a sufficient notice to the Government, and thereupon the court should have jurisdiction, and could go on and settle the question according to the judicial practice of the country in other cases.

That proposition was offered the Senate conferees, and they, I was about to say, almost scornfully refused to entertain it. They asserted, as do some gentlemen on this floor, that they never would assent to any proposition that allowed the Interior Department to have any revising power over the entries of the public lands as to facts presented after the receiver had issued his certificate; that everything of the kind must go to the court and the United States Government must be plaintiff. I appeal to my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri, as to the accuracy of my statement.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman's statement is entirely correct.

Mr. PAYSON. It is intended by the Senate to divest the Interior Department of this power which it has exercised rightfully and properly under the law since the origin of the land system. But I believe with the firmness of a religious conviction that the best interests of this country would be endangered by divesting the Department of all that power and setting all these things afloat on the sea of litigation, under the direction of the Department of Justice, putting the entire burden on the United States Government as plaintiff in formal litigation. How long would it take to flood every court in the land with all these cases now pending in the Interior Department?

Under the eighth section thousands of entries involving many millions of acres of lands in the Territories would be transferred to the Department of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to no man in my desire to stand by the workingmen of this country, and by the men who are out on the frontiers endeavoring to make their homes there under the beneficent laws of the General Government.

I have lived too long in the great West, and have had too many experiences in common with them, to have any other feeling.

I have not forgotten the days of my early boyhood. I went to Illinois when it was the frontier; while the Indians were still in the Green River country and in sight from the door of the little log-cabin erected by my father for our home. My experience till early manhood was that of all others who in poverty led the life of toil incident to all farmers under like circumstanees.

With these experiences fresh still in my memory, let no man say that by any act of mine a straw shall be laid in the way of the man who has endured the privations of building up a home under such circumstances. But I stand here as I have done for six years, in the way of the torrent of robbery, perjury, and crime that has swept over the land despoiling the Government of what it should preserve to future generations for the benefit of the homeless and the landless. [Applause.]

Mr. STRAIT. I have section 8 here as proposed to be amended by the Senate and the clause which was referred to is stricken out as the gentleman from Illinois found when he came to read it; lines 15 and 16 have been stricken out of the bill, and that was as proposed by the Senate conferees.

Mr. COBB. I do not think it amounts to much what we have agreed to or what we have not agreed to as we have not agreed on the main proposition. But I say emphatically no such proposition came from the Senate conferees as the one suggested by my colleague on the conference committee, and in making that statement I think I will be borne out by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STRAIT. The gentleman from Indiana is entirely mistaken. I have the bill here as prepared by the Senate conferees.

Mr. COBB. Yes; but it never was presented to us.

Mr. STRAIT. The proposition was made to the House conferees.

Mr. COBB. I do not desire to engage in a controversy about it. I say it is not true, and I stand by that assertion.

Mr. STRAIT. I say it is true. They did propose it.

I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] for five minutes.

Mr. LAIRD withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have three minutes left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire now, in conclusion, to call the attention of the House to the fact that the controversy, as I have before suggested, is as to whether or not these men occupying these lands, these innocent purchasers, whether these settlers shall be given a hearing in court before they are stricken down and all they have in the world is taken from them. That is the question and the only one. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] admits that the Senate conferees have agreed that the timber-culture act and the pre-emption act shall be repealed, and the only question between them and the House conferees is, shall this right which we are contending for be extended to these settlers and bona fide purchasers?

Has the gentleman from Illinois given any reason why that should not be done? He has indulged, as I suggested he would, in the cry of "fraud." He has attempted to frighten gentlemen upon the floor of this House by that specter; but shall we be deterred from discharging our duty by such an appeal as that? Does the present law give any relief to these people? The gentleman will consent, if he consents to that which is true, that these settlers have no appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of the Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior when their interests are stricken down. They have no compulsory process by which they can bring their witnesses into court, or into the Land Office to defend their rights. The register and receiver have no power to compel the attendance of a witness in the interest of the settler, and, as I have suggested, when the right of the settler is stricken down by the decision of the Commissioner, the settler has no appeal to the Secretary of the Interior.

All that is conceded to him under the present practice is the poor privilege of bringing his witnesses to the local land office and establishing his right again, if he can. The original settler may have moved away, the witnesses may have died—no matter what the circumstances are, the man has no opportunity to defend himself, and no remedy except the inadequate one which I have stated. Under the present practice the decisions in the Secretary's office are much delayed, and if these entries are to be suspended and the present practice is to continue, when can the settlers have an opportunity of being heard? In what vista of time can they have a chance to defend their rights? All that we ask on their behalf is that they, as honest men, which we know the very great majority of them to be, shall have an opportunity to vindicate themselves and their rights in court. That is all, and that is the point of controversy, and the only point of controversy at issue here. [Cries of "Vote!" Vote!"]

Mr. STRAIT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. STRAIT. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN].

Mr. GILFILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened as patiently as I could to the discussion of this bill, pro and con, hoping that some result or conclusion might be reached in the way of practical legislation that would be in the line of reform and progress. We have come to the point in this discussion where we must recognize the actual condition of things as it exists to-day. It is alleged that in practice under existing law for the administration of the Land Department and in the procurement of title to the public lands, fraudulent practices are resorted to and do exist whereby the Government is defrauded. It is also alleged, on the other hand, that wrongs and hardships are inflicted upon honest and bona fide settlers upon the public lands by secret agents of the Government, and that the rights and titles of such settlers are invaded and placed in jeopardy by such officers upon ex parte reports or affidavits, and without an opportunity to be heard or other adequate remedy for the redress of such wrongs. Now, if these allegations be true, it is certainly high time that we should find some remedy for the existing evils. If all the frauds portrayed here by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] are going on as he alleges, then I appeal to him and to the Public Lands Committee, of which he is a member, in Heaven's name to give us some practical legislation to stop them.

Mr. PAYSON. We will do that by repealing the laws under which they are practiced.

Mr. GILFILLAN. And I appeal to him not to be biased by any prejudice or prevented by any pride of opinion from acting upon any practical suggestion, even though it may come from the other end of the Capitol.

As near as I can understand it from the arguments upon this floor and from the conferees of the two Houses, they all agree upon the repeal of these existing laws, and the only substantial difference between them is whether the question of alleged fraud in case of any entry of land heretofore made shall be finally tried by and in the Department of the Interior, as contended by the House conferees, or whether the settler or his grantee or mortgagee, as the case may be, in case his title is attacked for alleged fraud, shall have the right to remove the cause into the proper court and there have his rights adjudicated and determined by due course of law, as proposed by the conferees of the Senate. This is practically the only question of difference between the conferees.

Now I have listened patiently and carefully to the labored and able argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and I certainly am unable to see why the interests of all parties can not be fully and fairly protected under the operation of the amendment tendered by the Senate conferees. Why this House or the Government should be afraid or unwilling to give anybody a fair hearing in its courts passes my comprehension.

I have listened carefully to the discussion to hear whether any valid reason could be urged by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois against that mode of procedure, but I have heard no such reason. The only question here is whether or not this question of alleged fraud which enters into the validity or invalidity of these land titles shall be tried by any executive officer of the Government upon evidence which is more or less ex parte, or whether we shall give to any party who desires it an opportunity, where the title to his property is attacked, to go into court, where he can have the privilege of confronting his accusers and the witnesses produced against him and subjecting them to the crucial test of a cross-examination.

Why should the Government fear the result of such a proceeding? Why, sir, that is a privilege which is not denied to the meanest sneak-thief who seeks to rob your chicken-roost under cover of the darkness, or to any other accused person up through all the gradations of crime to the miserable crank who shoots down a President at noonday. To none of these is the right of trial by jury denied. Why, then, will you deny it to the poor settler upon the frontier, whose home, whose substance, whose all, perhaps, is threatened to be taken away from him upon the testimony of witnesses whom he can not have an opportunity to confront?

It seems to us beneath the dignity of this great nation to deny such a remedy to its humblest citizen. I appeal to this House, I appeal to the Public Lands Committee that they will not let their bias or their pride of opinion, which may be bias, for the gentleman says he has stood here in opposition to this thing for six years—I appeal to them that they will not let their bias or pride of opinion stand in the way of any wholesome or adequate remedy for such wrongs as they have portrayed here as being perpetrated in procuring title to the public lands of the United States. I appeal to that committee again that they accept this amendment, wholesome as it seems to be, so that we may have some remedy for the existing evils. For it is now evident that they must do so or we shall have no repeal or other legislation by this Congress, which is now fast drawing to a close. I suggest that their present position in this matter if persisted in and adhered to will but result in no relief at all, as has their action upon another measure pending in this Congress—I refer to their action upon the bill to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

When the Senate bill forfeiting about 6,000,000 of acres of the unearned lands of that grant came over to this House and was referred to this same Public Lands Committee, they substituted for it and reported to this House another bill (which they well knew never would pass the Senate) declaring a forfeiture of over 30,000,000 acres of that grant, five-sixths of which had been fairly and in good faith earned by the railway company, and in that form the committee urged and procured the passage of the bill by this House. It went to the Senate, and of course was non-concurred in, and went into conference, where it sleeps to this day and probably will sleep there forever. In the mean time the railway company is pushing the construction of its road and earning more of the granted lands, and thus placing them beyond the power of Congress to declare a forfeiture. The policy of the committee seemed to be to go too far and perpetrate a great wrong, or else to do nothing at all.

Now, I submit in all candor, Mr. Speaker, that by this course of procedure, which this committee seems wedded to in both of these matters, to do things in their own way or not do anything, the country will get no relief whatever from the evils complained of and acknowledged to exist. It will result in no legislation whatever, and the country will justly hold us responsible for doing nothing and for affording them no relief, when a just measure of relief is at hand, and offered to us to accept, but which we refuse. I hope the House will instruct its conferees to recede from their position and accept the amendment tendered by the conferees of the Senate, to the end that a repeal may be had of these laws, which have become obnoxious by reason of the abuses which have grown up under them, and to the end that the remainder of our public domain may be reserved and preserved for actual settlement by bona fide settlers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has now twenty minutes.

Mr. COBB. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay unnecessarily a vote on this question. It seems to be admitted on both sides of the Chamber that frauds have been perpetrated under the provisions of the land laws which it is now proposed to repeal; and the general sentiment of the House, agreeing with the general sentiment of the country, seems to be almost unanimous in favor of their repeal. The House passed a bill whereby these laws were repealed and the settler upon the public lands was left to deal with his benefactor, the Government of the United States. Title to the public lands is acquired primarily by honest settlers, and free of charge. The settler goes upon those lands free of cost. The Government, representing the people, owns the land; and I, for one, can see no injustice in leaving him and those who acquire title by purchase from him to deal with the Government of whose beneficence he and they reap the fruit in taking advantage of these laws and becoming the possessor of those lands of the people. No honest, upright settler in good earnest is afraid that the United States Government will cheat him out of his lands, provided he fulfills the necessary conditions of settlement. No such settler was ever so cheated.

The Government has cheated no one; but a whole tribe of freebooters, shylocks, and foreign landlords have been cheating the people.

Who are crying out in favor of this amendment and against the bill as originally passed by the House? Not the bona fide settlers on the public lands. Where are the petitions before this House to back the indignant statements of gentlemen who are in favor of this Senate amendment? What is the meaning of this amendment? It simply means circumlocution, delay, and red tape, and final escape of the dishonest land thieves, as against the direct method of allowing the Land Commissioner to deal with these settlers on the public lands, and the prevention of frauds. I venture the assertion here to-day that never in the history of the administration of the public land laws was one honest man, a bona fide resident of the land which he settled, injured by the administration of these laws by the Land Office. Misunderstandings and delays in a few cases may be, but actually robbery of the honest pioneer, never!

The people who are indignant against this bill as it passed the House, and who are in favor of this Senate amendment, which means security to past frauds, hinderance of honest methods, and general circumlocution, are the loan brokers and land grabbers of the West, and the land pirates of the East and of Europe, who have gone out into the great western country and absorbed millions of acres of the public domain.

Why, Mr. Speaker, under the corrupt practices and the mythical and fraudulent settlements that have taken place under the pre-emption and timber-culture acts, we have to-day a number of British noblemen who own princely estates in the Territories of the West. And such noblemen! If the British aristocracy are to get a foothold upon the public lands of the United States, in the name of all that is good let us have a choice as to the quality and kind of such nobility that shall make these entries through the instrumentality of their agents or servants. I have before me the English Financial Almanac for 1887. Referring to the list of the House of Lords I find it stated here, in connection with the peerage of Great Britain, that the Duke of Sutherland owns to-day one-half million acres of land in the United States—gotten how? Gotten in all probability as the result of fraudulent entries under the timber-culture and pre-emption acts, through the assistance of a hired gang of swearers, resorting to all the means depicted so graphically and ably by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

And who is the Duke of Sutherland? A man whose ancestors cleared from the Highlands of Scotland over fifteen thousand people under the guise of English law, and with a barbarous cruelty scarcely credible, almost the entire population of his vast estate, from their hereditary holdings under Gaelic customs; expatriated and exiled from their beloved mountain country one of the bravest, simplest, and most industrious and virtuous portions of the Celtic race on the globe, to give place to cattle and sheep—who made a region of happy hamlets and fertile farms into a wilderness to gratify their cupidity, burning the homes of the evicted with an inhumanity that was savage. Traveling free of expense on the land-grant railroads of the United States, and finding landlordism and feudalism now unpopular in the British Islands, the vulture-like claw of these hereditary land pirates and feudal barons is reached out to take the princely inheritance of the people of the United States. Our domestic land monopolists seem to have called in these British landlords as experts. They certainly do credit to their teaching. A few people in Great Britain own the most of Ireland and almost all of the old feudal kingdom of Scotland.

Mr. COBB. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. MCADOO. Where and how grew up these princely estates in the land from whence comes the Duke of Sutherland? Originally just as these great possessions are being obtained here in the United States. It was by fraud, and force, and the rule of might of an iron age that the ancestors of these British and Irish landlords robbed the aboriginal inhabitants of those lands. These great estates, as with us, grew and multiplied almost invisibly until they became so secured and strong that even the growing intelligence of an enlightened age has not as yet been able to throw off their feudal bondage, and multiply on their ruins happy homes and individual owners who shall be actual occupants.

Among other noblemen who have taken advantage of these laws I find the Marquis of Tweeddale credited with being largely interested in a company that owns in the United States 1,750,000 acres; also Baron Dunmore, 100,000 acres; Baron Kemy, 60,000 acres, and a number of others. Why, Mr. Speaker, I am astonished that any member of this body would prefer the Senate amendment to delay the execution of such a just and righteous law as that proposed here by the House for the protection of our public lands. [Applause.]

Mr. COBB. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, this debate has taken a very wide range, and in what I propose to say I shall confine myself strictly to what I conceive to be at issue between the two Houses.

At the last session of this Congress this House passed a bill repealing the pre-emption, the timber-culture, and desert-land act, and also that portion of the law providing for the commutation of homestead entries. That bill went to the Senate and was there amended by a substitute striking out all after the enacting clause, and incorporating into it, under language somewhat different from that employed in the House bill, a repeal of the pre-emption law and also the commutation clause of the homestead law, and amending the timber-culture and desert-land act. As to the latter, in fact, so far as I have named the changes, I believe the conferees are in accord between the two Houses. But the Senate in the first section proposes the confirmation of all entries made to which no adverse claim appears up to the 9th day of June last. That, I understand, however, from one of the House conferees, they propose to recede from, in the event they can reach an agreement upon the eighth section. The trouble, therefore, is simply upon that section.

Heretofore, by the terms of existing law, the rule has been to contest and vacate fraudulent entries before the local land office, from which an appeal may be sent up to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who decides upon the question, confirming the action of the local officer or reversing it, as the case may be; and his decision was finally taken on an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. The decision of the Secretary on such appeal is final, except by some of the processes that have been resorted to and which are objected to by some gentlemen on account of their expensiveness.

Now, the eighth section of the Senate amendment proposes to take these cases out of the general course, if the entryman desires it, and compel the General Land Office to certify the case to the Attorney-General, who shall under such circumstances take certain steps which are prescribed by the act in question, as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained.

That is the trouble. Now, sir, this is a new departure. The rule has been, and is now, that in respect to patents granted on fraudulent entries the Attorney-General must for that reason file his bill on the equity side of the docket of the United States court for the purpose of vacating it. This proposition would change the rule and make him file the bill to test the question of fraud, when the title has not yet been given to the entryman, but is held by the Government in abeyance. It makes the Government of the United States take the initiative; and, in my judgment, would be unwise and involve the Government in a number of suits brought by the Attorney-General to test the question of whether these entries were fraudulent or otherwise. It seems to me it would be infinitely better to let the law stand as it is, with the addition of a provision that in the event of the affirmation of a declaration that the entry was fraudulent, by the lower officers on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, for the conferees to provide some cheap and easy method for the entryman to go before the court and have his rights there litigated and decided; and to that end I have draughted a resolution of instructions, which I will offer at the proper time, if in order.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair will state, however, that this is not the time to offer resolutions of instructions. The report has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. OATES. I merely wish to state the substance of it, and hope the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me additional time.

Mr. COBB. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the resolution is in proper form, but I think it is. It provides for a further conference between the two Houses, with instructions to the House conferees not to accede to this proposition, but to propose some provision to be incorporated in the bill by which an entryman whose entry is canceled, and the cancellation affirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, may have the means by which his right will be made clear by bringing it before the courts of the United States for litigation and an ultimate decision.

The only objection I have heard to the present rule is that it is too expensive. I have not attempted to indicate in that resolution to the conferees the mode by which this shall be done. It is for them to devise a method; but it seems to me that proposition, if embodied in the bill, would meet the difficulties and would also secure all that the Senate conferees are contending for as well as what gentlemen here are contending for—the right of the entryman to have his case passed upon by the judicial tribunals of the country.

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Mr. OATES. I ask now that the proposed resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a further conference be ordered, with instruction to the House conferees to reject the provisions of the Senate amendment which in case of contested entry requires the Commissioner of the General Land Office to certify the same to the Attorney-General, who is required to bring suit to test the question of fraud, &c.; and in lieu thereof propose a clause allowing an entryman sixty days after the adverse decision of the Secretary of the Interior to file a bill in equity in the United States court for the district in which the land in controversy is situated, which shall have precedence over all other cases upon the equity docket.

Mr. COBB. I will state this for the benefit of the gentleman from Alabama, that the substance of his proposition was tendered on the part of the conferees of the House and rejected by the Senate committee. I think, however, it would be well to leave the committee on the part of the House free to act on the disagreement between the two Houses. Therefore, I now move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate; and upon that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The House must first dispose of this report.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it in order at this time to move to recede from disagreement to the eighth section of the Senate with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Will the House accept the report?

Mr. COBB. Upon that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on accepting the report, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. PERKINS. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 38.

So (further count not being called for) the report was accepted.

Mr. COBB. I now move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. PERKINS. Pending that motion, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the eighth section of the bill as amended by the Senate, and that the House assent to the same with an amendment, which I will offer.

Mr. PAYSON. Is the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] in order?

The SPEAKER. It is; and motions having a tendency to bring about an agreement between the two bodies have preference over others.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Is it in order to offer an amendment in substance like that offered by the gentleman from Kansas? The Chair, I think, will find that it is not in the precise form that it could properly go into an amendment of the bill; and yet it expresses a principle which the gentleman from Kansas undoubtedly had in his mind when he made the motion in this form.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order when made in this form; but a motion to instruct the conferees would not be in order till the motion of the gentleman from Indiana was disposed of. The motion, however, to recede and agree with an amendment has priority. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read the eighth section as proposed to be amended by Mr. PERKINS, as follows:

SEC. 8. That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land-office, until such error has been corrected: Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, the Commissioner shall hold the entry for cancellation, which action shall become final unless within sixty days from notice thereof the claimant or other party in interest shall ask in writing for a judicial investigation of the case, and thereupon the Commissioner shall suspend further action in the case of issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held or construed to impair the right of any bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of any such land under existing laws and all purchasers and mortgagees of record, and all other persons claiming an interest in any such lands under the original claimant, shall be made parties to such proceeding, and may defend in their own right. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption, timber culture, and desert land and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead, timber culture, and desert land or pre-emption laws, or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas seems to have sent to the Clerk's desk more than one amendment. There seems to be something stricken out from the text in two or three places.

Mr. PERKINS. The effect of my motion is that the House recede from its disagreement to the eighth section, with an amendment which amends the section so as to make it conform to the reading of the Clerk. My amendment does amend the section in two or three particulars.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the eighth section of the Senate amendment, and agree to the same with the amendment as read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 98.

Mr. PETERS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only seven members voting therefor.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. COBB, Mr. STONE of Missouri, and Mr. PAYSON as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes on the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent that on and after to-morrow the hour of meeting be 11 o'clock.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4535) granting a pension to Adeliza Perry;

A bill (H. R. 5652) for the relief of James W. Goodrich;

A bill (H. R. 6764) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 7209) to authorize the construction of a graveled road to the Richmond national cemetery, near Richmond, Va.;

A bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.;

A bill (H. R. 10091) for the construction of a stable for the use of the horses and wagons for the use of the offices of the House of Representatives;

A bill (S. 1170) granting a pension to Nancy C. Smith;

A bill (S. 1326) granting a pension to Caroline E. Pratt;

A bill (S. 1930) granting a pension to John Duffy; and

A bill (S. 2308) granting a pension to Henry Lafner.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SINGLETON. I have a Senate joint resolution which I am sure every member will vote for frankly when he hears it read. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his motion. The resolution I am satisfied will provoke no discussion.

Mr. STORM. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having bills to introduce for reference may be allowed to hand them to the Clerk, and have them duly referred.

Under the leave granted bills were introduced, as follows:

MONUMENT AT OLD FORT TICONDEROGA.

Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. 11205) for the erection of a monument on the site of Old Fort Ticonderoga, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH R. SANKS.

Mr. HOLMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 11221) granting a pension to Sarah R. Sanks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FORT SMITH AND EL PASO RAILWAY.

Mr. ROGERS introduced a bill (H. R. 11222) to grant to the Fort Smith and El Paso Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committtee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION TO WIDOW OF JOHN A. LOGAN.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Indiana in favor of the passage of the bill granting a pension to the widow of John A. Logan; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. BOUTELLE presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine in regard to trade relations with the Dominion of Canada; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COMMEMORATION OF THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, the motion to adjourn has been withdrawn, and I now ask that the resolution to which I have referred be taken from the House Calendar and immediately considered.

Mr. STORM. Regular order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let it be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. If the demand for the regular order is withdrawn the resolution can be read.

Mr. STORM. I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 18, 1887.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee of five members of the Senate and eight members of the House of Representatives be appointed to take into consideration the expediency of holding, in 1892, in commemoration of the discovery of America, an international exhibition of the industries and products of all nations; and, if such an exhibition should be deemed expedient, to consider the time, place, circumstances, and general plan thereof, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SINGLETON. There can be no objection to this resolution, Mr. Speaker. More than forty governors of States and Territories have indicated their approval of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON]?

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 22, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RACHEL ANN PIERPONT—VETO MESSAGE.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 2452, entitled "An act granting a pension to Rachel Ann Pierpont."

At the time this bill was introduced and passed an application for pension on behalf of the beneficiary named was pending in the Pension Bureau. This application was filed in December, 1879. Within the last few days, and on the 17th day of February, 1887, a pension was granted upon said application and a certificate issued at precisely the same rate which the bill herewith returned authorizes.

But the pension under the general laws dates from the time of filing the application in 1879, while under a special act it would date only from the time of its passage.

In the interest of the beneficiary and for her advantage the special bill is therefore disapproved.

JACOB SMITH—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without approval Senate bill No. 2111, entitled "An act granting a pension to Jacob Smith."

The beneficiary named in this bill filed his claim for a pension November 11, 1882. He seems upon the facts presented to be justly entitled to it; and since this bill has been in my hands the Commissioner of Pensions has reported to me that a certificate therefor would at once be issued.

Under such a certificate this disabled soldier's pension will commence November 11, 1882. Under this bill, if approved, it would date only from the time of its approval. I suppose his certificate has already been issued; and I am unwilling to jeopardize the advantages he has gained thereunder, as might be done if the bill herewith returned became a law.

JOHN D. FINCHER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 1768, entitled "An act granting a pension to John D. Fincher."

The beneficiary named in this bill enlisted August 6, 1862, and was discharged for disability February 24, 1863.

The surgeon's certificate of disability given at the time of the soldier's discharge recites "general debility which will disable him from performing the duties of a soldier for a good period of time. The disease was contracted by exposure and fatigue while performing the duties of a soldier."

The claimant filed his application for pension in September, 1882, nearly twenty years after his discharge, alleging that in November, 1862, he was attacked with bilious fever, followed by chronic diarrhea and lung trouble.

In support of his application an affidavit of a comrade was filed setting forth the fact that the claimant was taken sick, as he alleged, in the fall of 1862, and that he was sent to the hospital on that account. The affidavit further expresses the belief that the claimant still suffers from the effects of his sickness and exposure.

So far as I am informed and so far as the committee's report discloses, this is the only proof furnished of any continuance of disability at the time of filing the application for pension; and this proof, if it may be so regarded, is the mere expression of an opinion or belief, not necessarily based upon any personal knowledge, and which might have been honestly expressed if derived from representations of the claimant himself.

In this condition of the case the claimant was examined by a surgeon in 1882, whose report seems to negative all ailments except as one may be found in the fact alleged therein that he had pneumonia in 1868, and that there might be some pleuritic adhesions—plainly inferring that if such adhesions existed they were the result of the sickness to which he refers.

In February, 1885, the claimant was again examined by a board of surgeons. This examination seems to have been very carefully and thoroughly made, and as a result of the same the board reported that there was no disability. On this ground the claim was rejected.

There is no doubt as to the sickness of the claimant during his service, and his disability at the time of his discharge; but unless the report of the board of surgeons is to be impeached without apparent reason, there is as little doubt of the claimant's complete recovery.

No case has been presented to me in which the evidence afforded of a continuance of disability seems so inconclusive. In these circumstances the report of the board of surgeons appears to be upon the evidence before me almost uncontradicted.

EXTRA HOURS OF CLERICAL EMPLOYÉS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War in reply to a resolution of February 15, 1887, inclosing reports of the Adjutant-General and Surgeon-General, in relation to requiring clerks in the Adjutant-General's Office and the Surgeon-General's Office to work extra hours; which was read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON CITY, February 21, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the following resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate as to what unusual necessity, if any, now exists for requiring a certain part of the clerks in the offices of the Adjutant-General and Surgeon-General to work extra hours, the number of hours so worked, and what is considered extra hours."

In reply, I beg to state that early in November last the Secretary of the Interior wrote to me that there were a large number of calls from the Pension Office unanswered at this Department. Upon examination it appeared that there were some discrepancies between the two Departments as to the number of unanswered calls, but there were, on November 1, 1886, in round numbers, 9,654 cases in the office of the Surgeon-General, and 50,439 cases in the office of the Adjutant-General unanswered, from the Pension Bureau of the Interior Department. I immediately called the attention of the Adjutant-General and the Acting Surgeon-General to this state of affairs and directed that immediate action be taken to hasten the work and to take such steps as were necessary to improve the methods and increase the efficiency of the investigations. The Adjutant-General at once called for volunteers for extra work, and his clerks readily responded. The result was that there was a decided increase in the out-turn of business, 16,750 calls being answered in December, against 9,989 in November. This result was increased in January, there being 16,938 answers sent in during that month. The schedule annexed, marked "A," shows the work in the Adjutant-General's Bureau from the 1st of June, 1886, to the 15th of February, 1887, the improvement being from December 1, when the unanswered calls amounted to 50,449, to February 15, when they had been reduced to 31,345. It is evident that with the full force of his office upon the work the arrearages will be made up, and all calls in future will be answered in a short time.

The latter part of January the Adjutant-General informed me that he could not keep up with his work unless the whole of the force of the pension division of his office was put upon this extra work. In view, therefore, of the increased volume of work thus imposed upon these two bureaus, and the absence of any authority of law for the employment of an additional number of clerks, no other course was open to the Department than to extend temporarily the number of working hours, in order to meet the pressing demands from soldiers throughout the country for the speedy adjudication of their pension claims.

Under volume 22 of the Statutes at Large, chapter 128, section 4, page 563, I was of opinion that the emergency existed requiring me, as the head of the War Department, to extend, under this section, for a period the hours of labor in this bureau. It was accordingly done and the clerks were ordered to perform extra work, beginning on February 1, and work has since been continued under that order.

In the office of the Surgeon-General there was delay in taking hold of the work with the vigor and efficiency that the emergency demanded. A change was made in the officer in charge of the division, and Dr. Ainsworth, assistant surgeon, was appointed and assumed charge of the division on December 8. He at once called for volunteers, who responded, and the change in the amount of work accomplished will be noticed in Schedule B, herewith annexed. The number of calls answered from December 1 to February 15 has reduced the number on hand December 1, 1886, 8,569 to 2,972 on February 15, 1887.

The irregularity of attendance of volunteers made it necessary to issue an order similar to that issued in the Adjutant-General's Bureau, and under the provision of the above statute such order was issued by me, which went into effect on February 2.

The only provision found in the statutes for the employment of extra clerks is in section 171 of the Revised Statutes, which permits such employment only during the sessions of Congress in answering the calls of either House. The provisions of this section could not, however, be applied in the present case, as the information was not for Congress, but for one of the Executive Departments. The section indicated, however, is regarded as repealed by section 4 of the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Statutes, page 265), which provides that no greater number of clerks and other employés shall be employed than is specifically appropriated for by Congress each fiscal year; but even if the section were not so construed, it could not be made operative, as it makes no appropriation to pay for the services of such extra clerks.

It is proper to add that in the office of the Secretary of War a standing order exists requiring the clerks of the several divisions to work beyond the usual office hours when the business is of such volume and character as to demand it. Work beyond the usual hours in accordance with this order is of frequent occurrence, and such a power in the head of a Department is necessary for the proper dispatch of the public business.

I inclose to you herewith a report made to me by the Adjutant-General on the 15th instant, and also one by the Surgeon-General on the 16th instant, showing the necessity for the extra hours of labor imposed upon the clerks of their bureaus. I also inclose, marked A, a detailed statement prepared by the Adjutant-General, which exhibits the results of the extra work performed in his office since it began on the 1st of December, 1886; and also a similar statement prepared by the Surgeon-General, marked B.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the United States Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words before asking that the communication be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, where I think it should go.

My object in offering the resolution of inquiry and calling on the Secretary of War for the information was not to criticise that Department or any other, but to ascertain what the emergency was that required extra work by a portion of the clerks, and to call the attention of the Senate to the actual condition of affairs that exists there, so that if it is the judgment of the Senate to do so, appropriations may be made to enable the Secretary of War to get whatever force is necessary to carry on the work of that Department so as to meet the emergencies in reference to pensions and everything else that it is required that their attention should be called to.

I have been aware for some time that the Adjutant-General's Bureau and the Surgeon-General's are constantly called upon by the Pension Office and are worked beyond what they had the capacity to perform, and that the condition of the papers in those two bureaus is such that there ought to be some immediate attention to them so as to put the papers in those Departments in a condition where they can be handled, and at the same time preserved.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not quite possible that under that condition of things the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which is to come from the other House, may contain some provision for an increase of force there?

Mr. CULLOM. I indicated that I intend to ask that this document be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, so that when the proper bill comes before that committee they may have these facts before them and make such provision as is necessary to carry on the work of that Department without requiring a portion of the clerks to work all day and then all night in order to catch up with the work and carry on the important business of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In connection with what he is saying, I wish to ask whether, in calling upon these clerks for extra work (which the law referred to by the Secretary of War clearly authorizes, and by implication requires, when the public service demands it) the clerks in that branch of the work are all treated fairly and alike in that way, or whether personal favors are applied to one and discriminations against another. Somebody has mentioned to me that the administration, under the fourth section of the act referred to, was an administration of favoritism, and unfair. I have no reason to suppose that that can be so, but I have heard it stated.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand that that is the case. The only thing I complain about is that taking the Adjutant-General's Office, for instance, it is crowded with work so that the clerks in that bureau can not perform it in seven hours of day labor, but they are called upon to go there at night.

Mr. INGALLS. Do they get extra pay for it?

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir; they do not get a cent of extra pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law forbids it.

Mr. CULLOM. In other bureaus of the same Department, that are not so pressed with work, the clerks simply work seven hours a day, or whatever the time may be, and then have their nights off without work.

I think it is unfair to require one bureau of a Department or one Department as between it and another to perform extra work unless the whole establishment does the same thing. All I ask is that the Committee on Appropriations shall examine into this subject and so provide that all clerks in the service of the Government shall be treated alike, and that the men who are required now to go to the Department and work extra hours, some of whom can scarcely perform it without great danger to their health and lives, shall not be required to do so.

Mr. DAWES. Does not the Senator know that they have authority to detail from all the other branches of the Department to that service, and if they come here and ask us to cut down the number of clerks, as they have in every one of these appropriation bills, why should they complain that one particular bureau is overworked?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know what the law is in reference to that, but I do understand that in the Adjutant-General's Bureau, for instance, the clerks in the different rooms there are simply informed that their work is behind and that they are expected to come back after dinner or during the night and work a given number of hours. I do not understand that the clerks of any other bureau are called in to relieve them from any part of that duty.

Mr. DAWES. What is to hinder that being done?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that anything is, but I do understand that it is not done, and I think there ought to be fair play among the clerks.

I wish to say further that the Government is not so poor as to require a poor fellow to work all day and then work all night also in order to carry on the business of a Department. There is no occasion for it, and while I want every clerk to do his whole duty and work the given number of hours required by law, yet I say that we have no right to demand that those clerks shall go there and work half the night in order to catch up with the business of the Government.

Mr. SAWYER. Without extra pay.

Mr. CULLOM. And without extra pay. It is an outrage upon them.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Illinois thinks that the Committee on Appropriations can report a measure which will enable the Secretary of War to administer his Department, I think he will be mistaken. The trouble about this whole matter is that the Departments do not seem to have force enough.

Mr. CULLOM. Then give it to them.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not an emergency. This is not a new thing. There has been a lack of force in the Adjutant-General's Office for some time. There is a lack of force now in several of the auditors' offices; that is to say, if clerks are to work but seven hours a day. The Committee on Appropriations have been aware of this from time to time, and have endeavored to furnish a sufficient force, but the Senator knows perfectly well how difficult it is to secure an increase of the force of a Department.

Mr. CULLOM. With information of the condition of things before the Committee on Appropriations, can not the committee provide an item in the appropriation bill appropriating a given amount of money for so many additional clerks, whatever the number required may be?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the communication, with the accompanying papers, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REJECTION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of February 11, 1887, a report in regard to applicants for pension being denied a hearing in the Pension Office by reason of having petitioned Congress for relief; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION APPEALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think this is the proper time to do it; I ask leave to present a letter from the Secretary of the Interior addressed to me on the subject of the condition of pension appeals in his office, together with an accompanying statement, that is very interesting, as to the thousands of cases there pending and the insufficiency of the force apparently to get on with them and clear them off.

It will be remembered that at the last session we provided for six additional officers in the office of the Secretary to aid him in disposing of these appeals. He has made this communication to me in response to my inquiry in regard to how they were getting on, there having been very great delay before, just as it has been shown there is in the Adjutant-General's office. There ought to be some way of providing force enough to clear off these delayed pension cases.

I notice in the statements accompanying this letter that in a very large number of instances comparatively, after the Commissioner had rejected claims and appeals were taken to the Secretary, cases have been again re-examined by him and the appeals withdrawn and the matters allowed, which would seem to show that the first examinations had not been so careful as they should have been. But at any rate the three or four thousand appeals of the poor people who apply for their pensions ought to be disposed of one way or the other.

I move that the paper be printed, as it is of valuable public information, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of McMillen Post, No. 122, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; a petition of Richard Chambers Post, No. 535, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; a petition of Harker Post, No. 146, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; a petition of Morrison Post, No. 167, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; a petition of Kinsman Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Kinsman, Ohio; a petition of Thomas Lilley Post, No. 345, Grand Army of the Republic, of Georgesville, Ohio; a petition of Minerva Post, No. 106, Grand Army of the Republic, of Minerva, Ohio; a petition of Lewis Post, No. 347, Grand Army of the Republic, of Xenia, Ohio; a petition of Buckley Post, No. 12, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; resolutions of H. G. Blake Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, of Medina, Ohio; a petition of Dan W. Williams Post, No. 369, Grand Army of the Republic, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio; a petition of G. M. Neighbor Post, No. 494, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; a petition of Milliken Post, No. 228, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; and a petition of Joe Hooker Post, No. 21, Department of Ohio, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented resolutions adopted by John T. Drake Post, No. 321, Grand Army of the Republic, of Brooklyn, Iowa; resolutions adopted by Huston Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Redding, Iowa; and resolutions adopted by Iseminger Post, No. 18, Grand Army of the Republic, of Chariton, Iowa, urging the passage of the dependent pension bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the mayor and city council of the city of Socorro, in the Territory of New Mexico, remonstrating against the passage of House bill 9985, providing for the confirmation of private land claim No. 107, which includes the present site of the city of Socorro; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. DOLPH. I present a petition similar to the one just presented by the Senator from Iowa, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER presented a preamble and resolutions of Henry Demming Post, No. 192, Grand Army of the Republic, of Laingsburg, Mich., in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of the passage of a law to adjust certain accounts between the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a preamble and resolutions adopted by A. S. Welch Post, No. 75, Department of Minnesota, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, presented resolutions adopted by George C. Wilson Post, No. 442, Grand Army of the Republic, of Alexandria, Pa.; resolutions adopted by Beaver Post, No. 473, Grand Army of the Republic, of Beaver, Pa.; resolutions adopted by John D. Musser Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pa.; resolutions adopted by Adjutant Martin Post, No. 510, Grand Army of the Republic, at New Oxford, Pa.; resolutions adopted by Mallory Post, No. 285, Grand Army of the Republic, of Sayre, Pa.; resolutions adopted by Col. P. B. Honsum Post, No. 309, Grand Army of the Republic, of Chambersburg, Pa.; a petition of 60 soldiers of Argyle, N. Y.; resolutions adopted by George Simpson Post, No. 44, Grand Army of the Republic, of Milton, Pa., and resolutions adopted by Eben N. Ford Post, No. 336, Grand Army of the Republic, of Warren, Pa., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill notwithstanding the objections of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I present 64 petitions, signed by 4,800 citizens of the State of Michigan, praying for the better protection of women; a petition of citizens of Minnesota, signed by 124 citizens, praying for the better protection of women; and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Dover, N. H., all praying for an investigation into the alleged traffic in young girls for immoral purposes. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHENEY presented a petition of Storer Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Hampshire, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of Candor Post, No. 383, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented two petitions of citizens of the District of Columbia, and three petitions of citizens of Virginia, praying for the passage of the so-called Colquitt bill, regulating certain licenses in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the twentieth session of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, favoring the passage of such laws as shall furnish the benefits of the Signal Service to the farmers of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of druggists of the city of Richmond, Va., praying for the repeal of internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I present resolutions in the nature of a memorial of the Geraldine Club, New York city, remonstrating against the proposed extradition treaty with the British Government. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will state that I have a score or more of the same kind of memorials from the city of New York and the city of Boston. I was not quite sure that the Senate would be prepared to receive these memorials in open session, so I offered this one this morning, and finding the Senate does not object I shall present the rest in a few days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not make any objection, but ordinarily such petitions or memorials have been presented in executive session.

Mr. ALLISON presented resolutions of John Dillon Post, No. 233, Department of Iowa, located at Marengo, Iowa; resolutions adopted by Crocker Post, No. 12, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, located at Des Moines, Iowa; resolutions adopted by Isemonger Post, No. 18, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Chariton, Iowa; resolutions of Huston Post, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Redding, Iowa; and resolutions of John T. Drake Post, No. 321, Department of Iowa, located at Brooklyn, Iowa; all requesting that the dependent pension bill may be passed over the President's veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of George K. Otis, of New York city, late mail messenger and transfer contractor, praying compensation for his services under contract with the Postmaster-General; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRYE. I present the resolutions of the American Shipping and Industrial League, adopted at a recent national convention in the city of Washington. The secretary of the convention is very desirous that the resolutions shall be published in the RECORD. I ask that the resolutions and the accompanying information be published in the RECORD—it is important information, and the resolutions are important; and then that reference be had to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN SHIPPING AND INDUSTRIAL LEAGUE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: The American Shipping and Industrial League at its recent national union convention assembled in this city unanimously passed the following resolutions, and ordered that the undersigned should present the same to both Houses of Congress:

RESOLUTIONS.

The American Shipping and Industrial League in national convention assembled in the city of Washington, D. C., do declare:

First. The object of the league is to promote the development and distribution of products of American labor by the extension of the merchant marine of the United States, and to establish thereby more intimate commercial intercourse with other countries by frequent and direct mail service.

Second. That an increase of our merchant marine is demanded by considerations of the most momentous character, among which may be mentioned:

1. The fact that the people of the United States are now producing so much more of the raw materials from farm and mine, and such superabundance of manufactured goods, that our home markets are glutted, and stagnation thereby produced. Stagnation, experience has shown, is the parent of financial crises, which bring ruin to the producing classes of every community.

2. Our best markets should be those of Central and South America, the West Indies, and Australasia, from which we are practically excluded at this time by the inadequate facilities we have for transporting our products to their seaports.

3. The distribution of all American products could be more promptly and economically effected through the instrumentality of American shipping, if such facilities were at all adequate for the needs of the hour. The economic fact is generally overlooked by those not in immediate contact with practical commerce that the nationality of a ship in which goods are transported carries with it command of the market to which the goods are consigned, and also controls the exchanges by which payments are effected.

Third. That the decay of American shipping and its injurious effect upon all industries demands not alone the thoughtful attention of intelligent men, but the adoption also of measures, both prompt and efficient, for arresting the evil, and restoring our merchant marine to its former prosperous condition.

It was the birthplace of the Navy, and should be the nursery for the gallant men who are to make our flag respected and feared upon every sea.

Fourth. The rapidly developing industries of the Gulf States in the mining of coal and iron and in the manufacture of cotton goods make the demand for new outlets and increased facilities of transportation imperatively necessary. The proximity of the Gulf ports of our Southern States to the various Spanish and Portuguese American countries gives the United States an insurmountable advantage over all foreign countries in point of distance and time for the supply of the provisions, breadstuffs, and other products of the great Mississippi Valley, of which said countries are large consumers, and which, for want of a properly sustained merchant marine, are now supplied to a great extent from foreign countries. This need the General Government should satisfy, and in doing so the benefits would be distributed to every portion of our common country.

Fifth. That this convention should urge upon the Congress of the United States the passage of what is known as the "bounty bill," which provides that every vessel, sail or steam, built and owned in the United States, trading with foreign ports, shall be allowed 30 cents per ton for each 1,000 miles sailed or steamed for a period of twenty years, one-third reduction of said rate to be made at the end of the first ten years from the date the act of Congress shall take effect.

We have the honor therefore to present these resolutions, in conformity with the instructions of that convention, that they may have the attention necessary, and in behalf of which we beg your kind interest.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present copies of the petition of Thomas Clark, a soldier of the war of the Revolution, addressed to the General Assembly of New Hampshire, with statistics and papers attached, and a copy of the will, and probate of it, of the same Thomas Clark, and the statement of the town clerk where some records are upon the subject. I move that all these papers be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, which has a petition of a descendant of Thomas Clark before it asking for relief.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Twenty-fifth session.] S. F. [No. 341.

Joint resolution asking Congress to appropriate $10,000 for the improvement of the Minnesota River at the borough of Belle Plaine.

Resolved by the senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring), That whereas the borough of Belle Plaine has, by a vote of its people, built a free-toll iron draw-bridge across the Minnesota River, within its limits; and

Whereas the consent of the National Government was obtained before the Minnesota River could be bridged; and

Whereas the importance of continuing the work of the improvement of the Minnesota River in the interest of cheap transportation is a matter of national interest; and

Whereas there is a large amount of travel and intercourse between the citizens of the United States carried on across the said "free-toll bridge;" and

Whereas the highway leading to said bridge on the north side is apparently in imminent danger of being cut in twain by reason of the Minnesota River changing its present bed or channel and running north of said bridge, thereby rendering said bridge useless to the public at large, and at this point the navigation of the Minnesota River endangered, if not made worthless, which would be a great calamity: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use all reasonable efforts to secure an appropriation of $10,000, to be expended under the directions of the engineer of the United States, in such a manner as to save to and for the public at large the use of said "free-toll iron bridge," and the unimpaired navigation of the Minnesota River at this place.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to send a copy of these resolutions and preambles to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. E. RICE,
WILLIAM R. MERRIAM,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 12, 1887.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of State:

I hereby certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing with the original now on file in this department, and that it is a true and correct copy thereof, and of the whole of the same.

Witness my hand and the great seal of the State this 19th day of February, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] H. MATTSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. SABIN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Twenty-fifth session.] S. F. [No. 201.

A joint resolution requesting Congress to appropriate money for the improvement of the navigation of the Red River of the North and its tributary waters.

Whereas the improvement of the Red River of the North has been greatly benefited by a wise expenditure of money heretofore appropriated; and

Whereas surveys have demonstrated the practicability, and experience has demonstrated the necessity, of the further improvement of the navigation of said river by the construction of a lock and dam at Goose Rapids; and

Whereas it is believed that the navigation of said river may be extended up the Red Lake River, and up the Bois de Sioux through Lake Traverse to the head of Big Stone Lake, by creating a reservoir at that lake and also at Red Lake, and improving the streams leading therefrom to said Red River; and

Whereas the improvements contemplated, and known to be feasible, would tend to greatly cheapen the transportation of the cereal products of Minnesota and Dakota, and greatly aid in building up and fostering international traffic with British North America: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use all their influence to secure an appropriation for the construction of a lock and dam at Goose Rapids, and to further prosecute the dredging of said river between Breckenridge and the international boundary, and to make a survey of Red Lake and river and of the Bois de Sioux River, and Lake Traverse and Big Stone and the intermediate country with a view to connecting said lakes by canal.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be requested to forward copies of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. E. RICE,
WILLIAM R. MERRIAM,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 12, 1887.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of State:

I hereby certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing with the original now on file in this department, and that it is a true and correct copy thereof, and of the whole of the same.

[SEAL.] H. MATTSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. SABIN also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Twenty-fifth session.] S. F. [No. 185.

Joint resolution requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to secure the canceling of entries of the public lands made by the Winona and Saint Peter Railroad Company and other land-grant companies of this State in excess of their grants, or compel payment by said companies therefor.

Whereas it appears from the report of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States that the amount of lands approved to the Winona and Saint Peter Railroad Company, by virtue of the grant of lands made by the Congress of the United States to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of said road, over and above and in excess of the lands so granted, reaches from 300,000 to 600,000 acres of land wrongfully abstracted from the public domain, in defiance of the rights of the people, the settlers of this State, and injurious to the welfare and prosperity of the citizens and tax-payers thereof; and

Whereas it further appears from said report that the amount of lands approved under the acts of Congress to other land-grant roads reaches thousands of acres in excess of the terms of the granting acts; and

Whereas upon the statements set forth in said report of the honorable Commissioner of said Land Office, large numbers of our citizens, believing that said lands were unlawfully withheld from the public domain by said railroad companies, have in good faith settled thereon, at great cost to themselves, yet liable to be ejected therefrom unless relief be afforded them by Congress or the proper authorities; and

Whereas said entries should be canceled, and said companies compelled to restore said excess lands to the public domain to be open for entry for actual settlers, or that said companies should be required to account and pay therefor by legal process, methods, and means: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to urge the enactment of such legislation (if any be deemed necessary to secure such end or the needful representations made to the proper officers of the Government) that will compel the said railroad companies to restore to the public domain all lands found by the Department of the Interior to have heretofore been approved to said railroad companies in excess of the amount heretofore granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of said railroads or the cancellation of such excess entries; or that in case of bona fide sales to actual purchasers of any of said excess lands, that the proper judicial officers be requested to take the necessary steps and proceedings in law or otherwise against said railroad companies to recover the value of all such excess lands sold as aforesaid to bona fide purchasers.

Resolved, That a copy of the above and foregoing joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A. E. RICE,
WILLIAM R. MERRIAM,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SABIN also presented a joint resolution of the State of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Twenty-fifth session.] S. F. [No. 290.

A joint resolution asking immediate adjustment of land grants to railroads in this State.

Whereas large areas of land in this State have been granted to railroads; and

Whereas in consequence of which still larger areas have been withdrawn from settlement for the purpose of making good to said companies any deficiency which might possibly arise in the adjustment of said grants by reason of sales or prior claims of settlers; and

Whereas all of these railroads have long since been completed and in operation, notwithstanding which all of said grants still remain unajusted; and

Whereas these lands have remained withdrawn and untaxed for from twenty to thirty years, to the great detriment of the State and the settlers residing on the even sections adjoining said lands; and

Whereas year after year the people and the Legislature of this State have repeatedly petitioned Congress for some action in this matter to have the same decided, so that settlers could obtain title to said lands either from the Government or the railroad companies to which said lands might be awarded: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That the interest of the State and the citizens requires that all land grants to railroads in this State should be adjusted at the earliest possible day, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use all honorable means to secure an immediate adjustment of said grants, and that they urge upon Congress the necessity of instructing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the immediate adjustment of said grants, so that the lands may become subject to settlement or sale and taxation.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, requested to forward a copy of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress at as early a day as practicable.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3600) for the removal of the charge of desertion from John Rockwell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8620) granting relief to Henry Durkee, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Orrin R. McDaniel, of Shumway, Ill., praying that he be granted an honorable discharge from the Army, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 3333) for the relief of Orrin R. McDaniel; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Bolton, of Montpelier, Vt., praying for the passage of an act removing charge of desertion against him, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 3334) for the relief of George W. Bolton, alias Charles W. Andrews; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8319) for the relief of Martin Coughlin, have instructed me to report the same back to the Senate with the information that the Secretary of War has already corrected the military record of this claimant as provided for in the House bill. I therefore move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2885) donating fifty unserviceable muskets and bayonets to Wallace Brown's Post, No. 190, Grand Army of the Republic, of Birch Run, Mich., have instructed me to report it back to the Senate and to recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill on the ground that the War Department is now and has been for some time furnishing Grand Army posts with unserviceable muskets at the price of $1, and the accouterments, bayonets, cartridge-boxes, &c., for 50 cents; and it is believed that the Grand Army posts will cheerfully purchase them at those low prices, without the passage of special relief bills. The letter of the Chief of Ordnance, with the schedule prices of muskets and accouterments, is attached to the report. I move that the report be printed and the bill indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3006) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to send to Wallace Brown's Post, No. 190, of Birch Run, Mich., 50 unserviceable muskets and accouterments, have instructed me to report the same adversely, and ask that it be indefinitely postponed, for the same grounds stated in the report just made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8331) to regulate the pay of the officers of the Army and Navy who refuse or neglect to provide for the support of their families, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 102) establishing a national quarantine station at Key West, Fla., reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7176) for the relief of Isaac Crawford, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report adversely the bill (S. 2903) to provide for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations and the issue of coin certificates, and for other purposes. I ask to have it placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. BECK. That bill is reported adversely by a majority of the committee barely. I desire to have it placed on the Calendar, and I give notice that I shall call it up at a very early day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6162) granting a pension to Joseph M. Potter;
A bill (H. R. 6823) granting a pension to Peter P. Hoffman;
A bill (H. R. 7952) granting a pension to Mary Parrott;
A bill (H. R. 9248) to increase the pension of Richard Foreman;
A bill (H. R. 8828) granting a pension to Giles Wright; and A bill (H. R. 9213) granting a pension to Mary Corbett.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8437) granting a pension to Thomas Weekly;
A bill (H. R. 3963) granting a pension to Henry P. Reed;
A bill (H. R. 8355) for the relief of Sarah A. Jones;
A bill (H. R. 6423) for the relief of Mary Kaylor;
A bill (H. R. 5171) granting a pension to Missouri Anderson;
A bill (H. R. 9301) granting a pension to Joseph Jones; and
A bill (H. R. 4678) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan, deceased, late a private in Company A, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9414) for the relief of John A. Thompson, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3931) to grant a pension to Nancy Gunsales; and
A bill (H. R. 6656) for the relief of Mary Tarbell.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7418) granting a pension to Emily Threadgill, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6066) to authorize the sale of the United States barracks property in the city of Newport, Ky., and the purchase of a new site and the erection of buildings thereon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2718) for the detail of officers of the Army for colleges and schools, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3202) to amend section 1121 of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of chaplains, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10991) to quiet title to certain land in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment.

WHARTON'S DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 4,000 additional copies of Wharton's Digest of International Law be printed and bound, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of State.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOVERING, Mr. TAULBEE, and Mr. MORRILL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for a term of court at Duluth, Minn.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DEATH OF NEW YORK REPRESENTATIVES.

The message also announced that the House had passed resolutions commemorative of the life and character of the late Representatives Arnot, Beach, and Dowdney, of New York; which were transmitted to the Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ABINGDON, VA.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same.

That the House agree to the Senate amendment numbered 1, with the following amendment: At the end of said amendment numbered 1 add the following: "But nothing in this act shall be construed to require an exchange of site;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

WM. MAHONE,
JOHN C. SPOONER,

C. P. SNYDER,
BERIAH WILKINS,
W. W. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885; which was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained, to see what it means. We can not understand it from the report.

Mr. MAHONE. It means the reduction of the appropriation $200,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is not formal. It has not been signed by the members of the conference on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MAHONE. I will withdraw it for the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When signed it will be again presented.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Virginia withdraws it for the time being so that it can be placed in form.

SALE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents, instruct me to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell, at cost price, to any party wishing to purchase the same, any public document of which copies available for this purpose, not required for official use, remain; but only one copy of any document shall be sold to any one person.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was to add as a new section:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall have kept a detailed statement of each and every public document sold, the name of the purchaser and date of the purchase, and that he shall annually publish among the documents accompanying his annual report a statement showing the number of each public document sold during the fiscal year, and the price thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 103) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 7,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF "FLAGS OF ALL NATIONS."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution for printing the "Flags of all Nations," prepared by order of the Secretary of the Navy by the Bureau of Navigation, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That the "Flags of all Nations," prepared by order of the Secretary of the Navy by the Bureau of Navigation, be printed, and that 3,000 additional copies be printed, of which 800 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,200 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Navy Department, for issue to vessels of the Navy, and for sale at the cost of paper and printing, in accordance with section 432 of the Revised Statutes.

ALLEN'S REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution to print the report of Lieut. Henry T. Allen of his explorations in Alaska, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of Lieut. Henry T. Allen of his explorations in Alaska, transmitted by the Secretary of War in response to a request therefor from the Senate, be printed, and that 3,500 additional copies be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 500 copies for the use of the Secretary of War.

COMPILATION OF VOTES OF THANKS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution directing the Committee on Printing to have prepared a compilation of the votes of thanks by the Continental Congress and by the Congress of the United States for military, naval, and civil service, to report the same favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Printing be, and hereby, is directed to have prepared a compilation of the votes of thanks by the Continental Congress and by the Congress of the United States for military, naval, and civil services, with abstracts of the resolutions, showing what prompted their passage, and to report the same in print before the 10th day of December next; and the expense for compiling, copying, and indexing the same, not to exceed $500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that had better go over. I want to inquire a little about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. CAMERON. I am instructed by the Committee on Coast Defenses to report a resolution, which I ask may be printed and placed on the Calendar.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and they are hereby, authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess of Congress, at such places in the United States as they may deem proper; and that they be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into all matters connected with the subject of sea-coast fortifications and other works of defense, with power to administer oaths and take testimony, and to employ a stenographer and a clerk; and that the actual necessary expenses of the said committee, properly incurred in the execution of this resolution, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate in the usual manner, upon the order of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the resolution lie on the table, and I will call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to report back the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] on the 17th instant relating to the hour of meeting, &c., with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa, from the Committee on Appropriations, reports a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session the Senate will convene at 11 o'clock a. m., and, with a recess of one hour, will continue in session until 9 p. m.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was to substitute for the resolution the following:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session the Senate will meet at 11 o'clock in the morning, and the morning hour shall terminate at 1 o'clock p. m.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over subject to points of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule. The Chair supposes, it being a report of a committee, it will be placed on the Calendar subject to be taken up on motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; let it go on the Calendar regularly.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he to-day give notice and reintroduce his resolution because it is a change of the standing rules of the Senate, and if the question of order is to be made his resolution will go down under the question of order. I would give the notice to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. I will look into it.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 3335) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia so as to make the 12th day of February a holiday within said District; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3336) for the relief of Sterling H. Tucker and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 3337) to confirm a grant of land to the city of Socorro, N. Mex; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3338) relative to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition to be held annually in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 3339) for the relief of Michael Conlan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SABIN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 114) authorizing the several Executive Departments of the Government to loan to the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition certain articles for exhibit; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVARTS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask a change of reference of the bill which I introduced yesterday, being the bill (S. 3332) to authorize the construction of an arsenal for the manufacture of ordnance and ordnance stores for the use of the Government of the United States, at Columbia, Tenn., from the Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that change of reference will be made.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That there be printed 500 additional copies of the report of the reply of the Civil Service Commissioners to Senate resolution of July 22, 1886, for the use of said commission.

AWARD AGAINST REPUBLIC OF HAYTI.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to communicate to the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public interests, copies of the letters dated respectively June 8, 1886, and September 20, 1886, addressed by the counsel of A. H. Lazare to the Secretary of State, and filed in the Department of State, in the matter of the award against the Republic of Hayti in favor of A. H. Lazare, under the protocol made by and between the Secretary of State of the United States and the minister plenipotentiary for the Republic of Hayti, dated 24th May, 1884.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session the Senate, at the conclusion of the morning business, will consider Senate bills favorably reported by the committees until 2 o'clock on each alternate day, and House bills on the other alternate day, commencing first with the Senate bills.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

SENATORS: My office as President pro tempore of the Senate will necessarily terminate on the 4th of March next with my present term as Senator. It will promote the convenience of the Senate and the public service to elect a Senator as President pro tempore whose term extends beyond that date, so that he may administer the oath of office to Senators-elect and aid in the organization. I, therefore, respectfully resign that position to take effect at 1 o'clock p. m., on Saturday next, February 26.

Permit me in doing so to express my heartfelt thanks for the uniform courtesy and forbearance shown me while in the discharge of my duties as Presiding Officer by every member of the Senate.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think an order ought to be made that that be entered in the Journal and placed on file, instead of merely laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the communication will be entered in the Journal and placed among the files of the Senate.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], which comes over under objection. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this session no Senator shall speak on any question more than once, and shall confine his remarks to five minutes' duration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order under Rule XL. That changes the rules of the Senate and is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the resolution is not in order. It does not define the rule to be changed, or come within the terms of the rule authorizing a change of rules.

INDIAN TRADERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents also the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], which comes over under objection, and which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the select committee directed to investigate the subject of the appointment of Indian traders, the granting of licenses to them, and the refusal to extend such licenses to persons engaged as such traders, &c. (appointed under resolution of June 3, 1886), be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to continue the said investigation during the coming recess of Congress, with all the powers and authorities granted to said committee by the resolution of June 3, 1886.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I inquire to how many committees the privilege has been granted of continual and perpetual session? I only desire to know. It takes time to be passing these resolutions in detail; and had we not better have one resolution which shall embrace them all?

If an amendment be in order I would suggest that all the committees, regular and special, be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate. That will give them all an opportunity to gallopade at the public expense.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps I ought to say a single word with reference to this resolution.

Shortly before the close of the last session of Congress this committee was raised by direction of the Senate to conduct an investigation. That investigation is partially concluded, but not entirely concluded. It has been impossible to conclude the investigation, and this resolution is the result of a belief on the part of the committee that it ought to discharge the duty which the Senate has imposed upon it, which it has been unable to discharge up to this time. I believe that it is agreed to by the whole committee.

I happened to be appointed, very much against my wishes, chairman of the committee, and I want to say with regard to it that I present the resolution at the request of the committee. I leave the question with the Senate. I shall be very much relieved if the Senate does not wish the investigation to be further conducted, but I want to discharge my duty in the matter, and that is all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether this committee will be to any extent disorganized by the termination of the terms of any of the gentlemen who now compose it?

Mr. PLATT. All the members of the committee will be members of the next Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. We spend much time on questions like this at a very unfortunate period in the history of the Senate, in the last few concluding days, when the time should be really occupied for other and more important purposes. Then it is that we find generally these resolutions come in quietly one after another. The most unobjectionable I notice always and that supposed to be the most popular and as to which no objection is suggested comes from the Committee on Education and Labor. That seems to be a sort of John the Baptist in this matter. It is the leader, the precursor of all the rest. Nobody feels at liberty in the easy far niente manner in which it comes to say a word in objection. Then they all follow on.

I asked for information a moment ago. I think that committee came first quietly; and then the Committee on Commerce. Of course the largeness and importance of that committee probably gives it a little more attention. That committee precipitates a resolution to sit during the recess, that the Committee on Commerce shall roam all through the long summer months on the Atlantic and the Pacific. That resolution went back to the Committee on Commerce I think, and I believe it has not been reported yet. I would ask the Secretary about the resolution authorizing the Committee on Commerce to sit during the long weary months of the recess.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You had better ask the Chair.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will ask the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The Chair is without information on that subject.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Does the chairman of the Committee on Commerce know anything about that? Probably not. [Laughter.] Then we are without information on that point. Then I understand the Committee on Coast Defenses precipitated a resolution that has passed the committee. The Committee on Appropriations ought to take some interest in this matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The commerce resolution has not been reported.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That for the Committee on Coast Defenses, I am told, has passed, but the resolution for the Committee on Commerce has not been reported back. This is for the Indian traderships committee.

Mr. DOLPH. That for the Committee on Coast Defenses was not passed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not passed! So much the better for the people. Then nothing but Education and Labor has wormed itself through unanimously, I believe. Now, as to this proposition in relation to the committee on Indian traderships, the resolution to raise the committee was adopted at the last session, I think. Will it be in order to inquire how much time this committee has devoted to the examination of that very important and interesting subject of Indian traderships during the session of the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. At the last session of the Senate the committee took testimony which probably fills 100 or 150 pages of print. The committee did not travel during the recess for that purpose, and did not sit during the recess, and did not summon witnesses during the recess. At this session of the Senate it has been impossible for the members of the committee with their other duties to pursue that investigation.

There are some matters connected with the subject which, as I said before, I think ought to be investigated. I think the whole law and the method of procedure under the law and the question whether there should not be a change of the law, ought to be thoroughly examined; but with the pressure there has been upon members of the committee, it has been utterly impossible for them to conclude the investigation up to this time.

I simply repeat now what I said before, that if this Senate does not want the investigation continued I hope they will vote down this resolution. They can not gratify me any more personally than by doing it, but I feel that I am simply discharging a duty in this matter.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs who were originally instructed to pursue this investigation went into it so far as to find that it would take so much of their time that it would be impossible for them to pursue it in the manner in which it ought to be pursued, and they came back to the Senate and requested the Senate to appoint a special committee of members of the Senate to pursue the investigation. The committee were satisfied that it was an important matter, which ought to be thoroughly investigated, and they were in the hope that that investigation would result in some measure which would reform the Indian-trader service of this great Government, which stands, in my opinion, in great need of such reform.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Did the special committee sit during the last recess?

Mr. DAWES. Since the committee was appointed, as I am not a member of it, I have not kept track of the proceedings; but the character of the committee is such that I think the Senate will have confidence in it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When was the last session of this committee?

Mr. PLATT. Just about the close of the last session. We sat during the session perhaps ten or twelve days, and of course the adjournment of the last session broke in upon our investigation. We have not been able to continue it since.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then there has not been a session of this committee in about nine months. This committee may be very important; but if it is important it ought to have some relation to current history and close up its affairs during this generation. May I inquire whether this is the first introduction of this resolution this morning, or does it come over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution was introduced on a previous day, comes over under the rule, and is under consideration this morning.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not approve of all the committees of this body sitting during the recess of the Senate; yet I feel it necessary to offer such an amendment to this resolution, because I take it that if it is important for this committee to sit, it is probably important for nearly every other committee of the body to sit during the recess. The Committee on Coast Defenses, the Committee on Commerce, and I suppose the regular Indian Affairs Committee, are prepared with resolutions of the same kind. I might ask my friend from Massachusetts, as there is generally a resolution that the Committee on Indian Affairs sit during the recess, whether the Indian Committee expect to have a resolution of that kind passed this session.

Mr. DAWES. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs have not matured any resolution on the subject yet. Whether they will or not will depend upon their sense of duty as to whether there should be imposed upon them the labor which is involved in pursuing the investigations which they have pursued in the recess from time to time in years past. The Indian Committee have never taken that duty upon themselves voluntarily and they never felt that it was a recreation like that in which my friend from Nebraska is so fond of indulging throughout the country. They have spent very many days of labor and endured a good deal of buffeting about the plains and in tents by night and by day when other members of the Senate have had no such duty imposed upon them during the recess, but have contented themselves with criticisms on committees that have been engaged.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I notice that the Senator is not desirous that the Indian committee shall meet until their convictions of duty, as I understand, make it necessary.

Mr. DAWES. That may be a singular idea to the Senator.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; it is in view of the past history of this body. I notice the convictions of duty on the part of committees get very lively in the last few days of a session generally. The conviction of duty runs on the recess.

Of course I know it is an unpleasant duty to antagonize all these pleasant resolutions that are offered, but yet convictions of duty which the Senator from Massachusetts referred to seem to render it necessary that it should be done.

For this body to make a continuing session of part of its members, for nine months nearly until the next session meets, would seem to be asking just a little more than I think convictions of duty should require at this time, and I only desire now—not to specify, because I think it is just as meritorious for this committee to meet during the recess as for any other committee of this body, and probably a little more so—but my point is if possible to have some system about this matter; not that they shall come in one upon another. Therefore I propose as an amendment, if the Secretary will take it down, for the purpose of having a system. I am opposed to it, and I am opposed to the amendment as much as I am to the resolution, but I think it will be pleasant probably for the Senate to put them all in one body—that all the committees of the Senate, the regular and special committees of the Senate, shall be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of the resolution after the word "Resolved" and insert:

That all the regular and special committees of the Senate shall be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am very happy with that vote, Mr. President. Now, I trust that the Senate will give attention to the proposition in the resolution that this committee specially designated to examine into Indian traderships, because they think and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs thinks that some reform should be had in the system of traderships, shall have authority to sit during the recess. Our friends on the Indian Committee spent, I think, nearly the whole summer before last in the Indian country, and a portion of last summer they were out, engaged in this work——

Mr. DAWES. No.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not last summer? The summer before, then.

Mr. DAWES. One month.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The gentleman seems to fail to remember definitely as to last summer, but they were probably not out. I supposed that had fixed itself so firmly on his memory that he would recollect if they were in the Indian country last summer. I do not remember whether they were chased by the Indians the summer before last.

The Committee on Indian Affairs discovered that there should be some reform in the matter of traderships and they thought it so important a subject that a select committee should be appointed for the purpose of looking into it. It was done, and the special committee engaged in that work it seems have been here during this whole session, and for the last nine months there has been no meeting of the committee. For the last nine months these gentlemen have been where information could be obtained, I suppose at the Department where all the information could be obtained. If not, they have power to send for witnesses.

It is remarkable that here is a committee having charge of an important matter, with authority to send to the agencies and bring in witnesses, and yet it has done nothing for months. It will not do to say that there is no power or that they have not had time. When there was something supposed to be in the way of an outrage at an election far off in Texas, there was no difficulty in having a special committee organized to send for witnesses, and witnesses have been sent for from Texas and been examined by the special committee in session.

It costs a great deal of money, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] suggests; undoubtedly it does, but there is time to do that important work. Now, here was a special committee appointed to examine into Indian traderships, and for nine months they have had no session. For three months during this session there certainly must have been time. They could have sent for witnesses. My friend says it costs money. Certainly, but probably not so much as to employ a committee of this body and give them power to occupy nine months of the recess.

I have said all I desire to say on this. I have discharged my convictions of duty, as the Senator from Massachusetts has his on this matter. I call the attention of this body and the country to it in order that we may see at the outset whether we are to do as we have been so often in the habit of doing—give each committee that chooses to come and ask for it power to sit during vacation. They always come, generally hoping it will be done. They would generally like to be excused from the labor, toil, and heat of the summer campaign, as they very properly tell us, but then at the same time they prefer that the Senate should adopt their resolutions.

I have discharged my duty, and now it is for the Senate to say whether they intend to inaugurate the system of authority to the special and general committees of this body to sit during the recess of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Nebraska has discharged his duty. It is a gratification undoubtedly to the whole Senate. I do not think it is necessary to go into any further explanation in the way of defense of the action of this committee. I am very frank about it. A committee of this kind can only investigate by inquiry preliminary to taking testimony. During the recess the clerk of this committee did make such inquiries as convinced the committee that further testimony ought to be taken. I think the recess of the Senate was well employed in that matter.

It is true that at this session of the Senate we could have summoned twenty-five or thirty witnesses from the Indian Territory. It would have cost three to five times as much as it would for this committee to go to the Indian Territory and take their testimony. The committee believing that it was best to save the expense to the Government have asked to be continued during the recess, and some members of the committee, if it be continued, will go to the Indian Territory or near there for the purpose of continuing this investigation and examining the witnesses. If the Senate think it ought not to be done, do not pass the resolution. If the Senate think it ought to be done, then pass the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NOMINATION OF JAMES C. MATTHEWS.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That all the papers and documents on the files of the Senate or of any of the committees thereof relating to the matter of or pertaining to the nomination of James C. Matthews to be recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia be published in document form for the use of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that as not being proper in open session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator to allow me to make a brief statement, and then he can interpose his objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think this is a matter that should be considered in executive session, not with open doors.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The injunction of secrecy has been removed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the action of the Senate, but not from these papers.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir; entirely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I withdraw the objection if the Senator is right. I do not object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. When this nomination was first presented for the consideration of the Senate, it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I was a member at that time. Before the committee reported the nomination back to the Senate certain charges were made against Mr. Matthews from his own home. There was a report from that committee against the confirmation, a majority report, and the nomination was rejected. After the adjournment of the Senate the President again appointed Mr. Matthews, and when the Senate reconvened the President nominated him a second time and wrote a letter for the public assigning his reasons therefor. The propriety of that letter I am not called upon here to discuss. It was a matter that was executive, and executive only because it proceeded from the executive head of this Government, and ought to have rested in quiet and in secrecy until the Senate in executive session had disposed of the matter a second time.

The same committee reported the nomination adversely the second time, and a second time the nomination was rejected. Since then we have heard nothing but that Matthews was rejected because he was a colored man or that he was rejected because he was a colored Democrat.

Now, sir, the injunction of secrecy having been removed, I want my vote in committee and in executive session to go to my constituents. I voted against him in committee and in executive session, and I do not subscribe to either of the reasons that have been assigned by some gentlemen and by some portions of the press of this country for his rejection.

Until we removed the injunction of secrecy there could not be given here nor to the country the real reason that actuated Senators here and in committee for the rejection of this nomination.

I held first that this nomination ought to have been made of some citizen of the District of Columbia, for the recorder of deeds occupies the same relation to the property-holders of this District that the recording clerk or the county clerk in the State of Virginia and in other States of this Union occupies to the property-holders of their several counties.

There were charges preferred against him of the gravest character, one of which was that while colored men were engaged, and white men, too, as laborers in the construction of a public building in the city of Albany, this man went to them and told them that unless they voted a certain ticket on the next day they would be discharged. I would have voted against him if he had been as white as any man, under such circumstances. I will vote against any man's confirmation who will go around among the men engaged in labor upon public buildings and notify them that unless they vote either the Republican or Democratic ticket they shall be discharged.

My reason for offering the resolution that brings the papers that are in the custody of the Committee on the District of Columbia to light and secures their publication, is to expose that fact, and let not only the colored people, but the white people of Virginia know that there were higher reasons for the rejection of this nomination than such as have been assigned by some portions of the press of this country and by some gentlemen on the hustings.

If there be a Senator here who voted for this confirmation knowing these facts, I ask him to state it to the country, and let all these papers go there and let the public read the papers as they were presented to the committee, and as they are sustained by citizens of the city of Albany, who sent them to the committee and who appeared here to affirm them.

Do I understand the Senator from Tennessee to have something to say? I see that he is rising.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall have something to say when the Senator is through, but not now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Lest I should not give the Senator time before 2 o'clock, I am almost inclined to say that I have about finished now. I think I have about given the facts of this case. If I have not, when there shall come a response to the resolution the facts will be sent out.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I shall most cheerfully vote for the resolution of the Senator from Virginia. He does not desire more than I do that every fact connected with the nomination of J. C. Matthews and the report of the committee and the action of the Senate should go to the public.

It is due to the truth of history, however, inasmuch as the Senator has emphasized the fact that certain charges were filed before the Committee on the District of Columbia against James C. Matthews, that some other facts should be stated in that connection. It is true that charges were made, but it is equally true that the chairman of the committee [Mr. INGALLS], the Senator who now occupies the chair, and myself were appointed a subcommittee to investigate those charges. It is equally true that we summoned from Albany, N. Y., every person that the man who made the charges indicated as one who could probably sustain them. We also summoned such witnesses as the accused chose to designate as having knowledge upon the subject. You and I, sir, sat for a whole day, and examined and cross-examined the various witnesses so brought to this city, under the solemn sanctions of their oaths. The evidence taken in that examination is now on file in the committee-room, and I shall be glad to see every word of it go into print and go to the public. But you and I, sir, agreed and reported to the full committee that there was not the shadow of foundation in truth for any one of the charges that had been so made against James C. Matthews.

I know not what the motives were of any Senator for voting against his confirmation, nor do I choose to inquire into their motives; but if there was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia who doubted or had reason to doubt the personal respectability of the man or his qualifications to perform the duties of that office, no such doubt was ever expressed within my hearing.

Let these facts go to the public with the statement of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, if such examination were had and it is a matter of record in the room of the District Committee, then I am willing to add after the word "papers" in the resolution the word "evidence."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his resolution.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to enlarge it so as to meet the views of the Senator from Tennessee, for I inquired specifically about that, and I never could get it.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, he raised the same question upon the first occasion when the Senate considered the nomination of Mr. Matthews, and when he did so I sent to the committee-room and had the testimony brought into this Chamber and laid upon the desk of the Senator from Virginia—a fact that the Senator ought not to have forgotten.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If I have forgotten it, then my memory fails me now when refreshed. When I asked for it I was told that it was not taken down; and if it was not taken down how could it have been printed? I was told so, sir, by yourself, the chairman of the committee, appealed to by the Senator from Tennessee. A committee of two of investigation, at any rate, was an irregular proceeding, and I say that without intending to reflect upon either of the gentlemen.

I should like to be able to see a copy of that testimony now. I should like to know if these witnesses were summoned here, by what authority it was done, and whether done with the knowledge or consent of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator wants information on that subject, I can inform him that it was with the full authority and upon the order of the Senate that it was done, as the Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the committee, will remember.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wanted it so that I could further develop the facts of this case. There was an investigating committee appointed in this matter, of which I was chairman, and of which Senator SPOONER, and, I believe, Senator BROWN, of Georgia, were members, and it was suggested that we should not have such authority. On that that subcommittee retired from the further consideration of it.

If the Senator wants to have both of our records laid open and laid bare, he can not satisfy me better than to invite it, for I recollect that at the first meeting of that committee (which is a part now of the whole proceedings which are to be laid open under this movement here to remove the injunction of secrecy) he opposed Matthews's confirmation, in my opinion, with all the vim that characterizes him on this floor and elsewhere where his convictions lead him, and at the subsequent meeting, after the charges had been preferred, he turned in favor of Matthews, and advocated his confirmation from that time on without any reason given, so far as I know, for that wonderful, that miraculous change.

Sir, I repeat that my object in bringing this matter to the notice of the Senate is to get it to the attention of the country and to stop the prejudicial statements which are intended to affect votes in a certain section of this country, and intended to misrepresent gentlemen who voted against this confirmation for reasons that might influence them to vote against the confirmation of any man, without regard to race or color. That is my only object, not to criticise the action of any Senator or any member of a committee. I think I stated with sufficient particularity, that I only wanted this to go to the country to give me my opportunity, and to give every other Senator his opportunity who voted against the confirmation, to show that the representations which proceed from the head of this Government now are founded in error of fact.

There is scarcely a morning that we do not see it circulated over the Southern country that Matthews was rejected because he was a colored man. I never heard the word "colored" suggested in committee or in executive session of the Senate, and I dare say that the Senator from Tennessee will say as much that he never heard the word "colored" suggested as a reason for rejecting this nomination. It was done for the two reasons I state here now. The peculiar relationship that the recorder of deeds occupies to the people of the District of Columbia led us to believe that that office ought to be filled from among the people of the District of Columbia; and second, these charges stood so far as I know now—not only knew then but so far as I know now—unrefuted, and I believe to-day that if the Senate had been in possession of those papers from the outset he would not have got half a dozen votes, if any, in this body.

Now, sir, if there was any report of what occurred before the committee, I should like to see where it came from, and I should like to know who took it down; for when the subject was before the Senate, I am quite sure I was told that the evidence had not been taken down. If it was printed, I ask whether it was printed by direction of the committee, and I would ask if any Senator on this floor saw the evidence. He may have seen the paper, but the evidence, I was assured, was not taken down; and if that is the fact it could not have been printed for the use of the Senate. I do not deny the fact, but I say I have never seen it, and the chairman of the committee assured me that it was not taken down.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator was assured of any such fact he was assured of what was absolutely false. Every word of the testimony was taken down and now exists, and is on file in the committee room and subject to the inspection of the Senator at any and every moment that he may desire to look at it; in addition to which the testimony was laid on his table in manuscript during the last session of this Congress.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. In manuscript?

Mr. HARRIS. In manuscript; I ordered it carried, and saw it laid upon his desk when the matter was under consideration in the Senate during the last session of this Congress.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall require more provocation than the Senator from Tennessee has had before I shall use the word "false" in the discussion of a matter of this kind, because I did not state——

Mr. HARRIS. I say that if the Senator was informed of such a fact he was informed of what was false, because the fact is exactly the reverse of what he says he was informed, and therefore the information was false.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I state here again that I never saw any such manuscript on this desk or anywhere else, and that the chairman of the committee told me that the evidence was not taken down.

Now, sir, whether a Senator says "true" or "false," I care not. I know it is true that I never saw any such manuscript on my desk, and I would like to know by what authority a committee will take down evidence and lay one copy of it upon my desk in manuscript. There are seventy-six Senators here. When did one of them become so great that he, after retiring from the committee, should be allowed to have the only copy of the evidence taken in this matter? I have not measured myself up to that stature nor weighed myself up to that weight. If it was evidence that ought to have been submitted to one Senator, it ought to have been submitted to all. If there was a manuscript copy of the evidence taken down in that case, it ought to have been printed for the use of the Senate, and it ought not to have been laid upon the desk of any one Senator.

Mr. President, the object of the resolution is almost accomplished now, but still I want it to pass so that if there be manuscript evidence it can be yet printed in document form for the use of the Senate, and then the facts will stand out and we shall see and know, and the country will know, for what reason this man was rejected.

I admit that it is a small subject to have assumed so much public attention as it has, but it has been forced by a design, it seems to me, to use it for political purposes in certain sections of this country; and hence my object in offering this resolution is that the facts may go before the country so that we may all know them and know them as they are.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, one word, and only one. The Senator has chosen to state to the Senate that when this nomination was first under consideration in committee he understood me as opposing the confirmation of Mr. Matthews.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. As at first opposing it.

Mr. HARRIS. That was your statement. That statement is true. I did state to the committee—and I was perhaps the first Senator who expressed his opinion about it in the committee—that while perfectly satisfied as to the respectability and qualifications of Matthews, I believed that a District of Columbia man ought to have been nominated to fill that position. I did so believe, and I so believe still; but I found myself in the minority, as I then thought, as to the propriety of selecting a District man. When we came to a vote, the Senator very well remembers that we stood exactly equally divided. Subsequently, and after Mr. Matthews had been made the victim of false charges, and was being persecuted in respect to the matter, I resolved to forego the only consideration which had prompted me to oppose his confirmation; but when I expressed myself as opposed to confirmation, for the reason above stated, I insisted that the committee should make a written report showing that it was satisfied as to his respectability and qualifications, and that he was rejected only because he was a non-resident of the District.

But after these other events had transpired I resolved to forego that one consideration and to sustain his confirmation. There were a number of other changes of votes as well as my own. The Senator from Virginia, I will say however, had opposed him from the beginning to the end, as he is opposing him still, for what reason I know not. The Senator from Virginia perhaps may know.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not oppose him now.

Mr. HARRIS. You did oppose him while confirmation was pending, and you pursue him even now, after he has gone down.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. No, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to state that fact. I raise no question about other members of the committee having changed their votes, nor do I choose to personate the members of the committee who did so change; but on the first occasion he was rejected by a tie vote, and subsequently he was rejected by a decided majority. Let all the facts go to the public.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. McPHERSON. Before the consideration of this bill is proceeded with, I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for a moment.

I desire to give notice that, immediately after the consideration of this appropriation bill is concluded, it is my purpose to ask the Senate to take up House joint resolution 170, being a resolution to investigate the Pacific railroad companies.

One of the reasons why I wish to ask it is that, in the first place, it is the most important measure pending to-day before the Senate upon its Calendar. I understand that I am not violating any of the agreements which have been entered into between the two sides of the Chamber as to the order of business, but it is perfectly competent for me to call for the consideration of this resolution. Owing to its importance I think I am entitled to ask and demand it as a right, it being a matter of great public interest.

I shall ask its consideration, further, because I am recently in possession of information which will probably call me from the Senate after to-morrow, and as I have taken a great deal of interest in the matter and am desirous of being present during its consideration, I shall ask the Senate to accord it to me as a privilege that the resolution may be brought up and decided by the Senate.

I give this notice in order that Senators who may take an interest in the matter may be here.

Mr. MILLER. I presume the Senator from Kansas will yield to me as he has yielded to the Senator from New Jersey to give the notice in regard to taking up the particular measure he has stated.

It has been the general understanding, at least on this side of the Chamber, that the next bill to be taken up after the passage of the District appropriation bill would be the bill creating a Department of Agriculture, and I now give notice that immediately following the conclusion of the pending bill I shall move to take up that bill; and it has also been understood that immediately after the consideration of the bill creating a Department of Agriculture the next bill to be taken up is the bill in regard to the extirpation of the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia, a bill which is being demanded by nearly the whole country. If the Senate shall agree with me to take up the bill establishing the Department of Agriculture, as I trust it will, I shall then move immediately after that bill has been disposed of to take up the bill for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia.

I do not propose to take the time of the Senate at this moment in discussing the importance of these bills, or even in speaking of their importance. I will do that when they are taken up and are before the Senate; but I give this notice simply because I am compelled to do it in defense of the position of the Committee on Agriculture upon these questions, because the Senator from New Jersey saw fit to notify the Senate in advance what measure he proposed to bring forward.

That is all I have to say at the present time.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Kansas to allow me to have a vote upon Senate bill 3300, which has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, and which concerns the judicial settlement of titles to a large quantity of land in the State of Florida. I ask this upon the condition that there shall be no debate and nothing but the reading of the bill and the taking of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the Senate may now proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. PLUMB. I am placed in rather an embarrassing position on account not only of the debate that has taken place but on account of the request of the Senator from Florida. I do not want to put myself in the attitude of farming out the time of the Senate or of in any way impeding the consideration of the appropriation bills which are necessary to be passed and promptly, as they will have to be further considered in the other House.

Mr. MILLER. I do not desire to interfere with the bill of the Senator from Florida, but as I see my colleague [Mr. EVARTS] is not in his seat, and I understand that he desires to speak upon this bill, and is interested in it, I shall have to object to its present consideration, at all events until my colleague shall come into the Senate and speak for himself upon it.

Mr. CALL. The Senator is mistaken. I think his colleague makes no objection to a judicial settlement of the matter.

Mr. MILLER. I shall have to make the objection now, but if my colleague does not object at some other time I, of course, will present no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT.

Mr. MAHONE. With the consent of the Senator from Kansas, I ask leave to present the conference report on the Detroit public building bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be received. It has been previously read, and withdrawn on account of informality. The necessary signatures having been obtained, it will be now received.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In line 16, page 1, strike out the word "three" and insert "one."

In line 11, page 2, strike out the word "three" and insert "one."

In line 18, page 2, strike out the word "three" and insert "one."

And that the House agrees to the same.

WILLIAM MAHONE,
G. G. VEST,

N. E. WORTHINGTON,
W. L. MAYBURY,
Managers on the part of the House

The report was concurred in.

INDIAN TRADERS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me that I may appeal to the Senate for unanimous consent that the resolution which was passed this morning about the committee on Indian traderships may be reconsidered, and that a formal amendment may be made to it by inserting the words "continued and" after "hereby."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that order will be made.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendments, the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations being first disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued unless objection be made.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses," in section 1, line 22, after the word "expenses," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" and, in line 23, after the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "nine;" so as to make the clause read:

For executive office: For two commissioners, at $5,000 each; one engineer commissioner, $924 (to make salary $5,000); one secretary, $2,160; one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one messenger, $600; one messenger, $480; one driver, $480; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, horseshoeing, and other necessary expenses, $3,000; in all, $22,944.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 38, after the word "cashier," to insert "who shall, in the necessary absence or inability from any cause of the collector, perform his duties, without additional compensation;" in line 44, after the word "dollars," to insert "for services necessary for preparing an exhibit of all outstanding taxes in arrears, $2,000;" and in line 48, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "seventeen;" so as to make the clause read:

For collector's office: For one collector, $4,000; one cashier, who shall, in the necessary absence or inability from any cause of the collector, perform his duties, without additional compensation, $1,800; one book-keeper, $1,600; four clerks, at $1,400 each; one clerk, $1,200; one messenger, $600; for services necessary for preparing an exhibit of all outstanding taxes in arrears, $2,000; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, and other necessary items, $700; in all $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 63, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "four;" in line 64, after the word "thousand," to insert "two hundred;" and in line 68, after the word "all," to strike out "eight thousand seven" and insert "nine thousand two;" so as to make the clause read:

For attorney's office: For one attorney, $4,000; one assistant attorney, $2,000; one special assistant attorney, $1,400; one law clerk, $1,200; one messenger, $200; for rent of office, $100; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, printing, and other necessary items, $300; in all, $9,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for engineer's office," in line 94, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One assistant inspector of buildings, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 113, after the word "dollars," to strike out "that" and insert "and;" so as to read:

And the fees collected by said harbor-master shall be paid to the collector, for payment into the Treasury, to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, after the word "exceed," at the end of line 128, to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

Contingent expenses, including rent of property-yards, books, stationery, binding and preservation of records in the engineer's and surveyor's offices, printing, transportation (vehicles, animals, saddlery, forage, and repairs), and other necessary items and services, in all not to exceed $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 132, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for engineer's office" from $60,690 to $62,190.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "improvements and repairs," in section 1, line 145, to increase the appropriation "for repairs to concrete pavements, with the same or other not inferior material," from $75,000 to $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 146, to increase the appropriation "for materials for permit work" from $75,000 to $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, line 159, to increase the appropriation "for continuation of surveys of the District of Columbia with reference to the extension of various avenues to the District line," from $4,000 to $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, after the words "contained in," at the end of line 163, to strike out:

House Executive Document No. 18, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, as follows: In Georgetown, $40,000; in the northwest section, substituting New Jersey avenue from M street to the Boundary for New Hampshire avenue from Q street to Sixteenth street, $115,000; in the southwest section, $40,000; in the southeast section, $55,000; in the northeast section, $40,000; and for filling streets below grade, at not exceeding 10 cents per cubic yard, $10,000; in all, $300,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The annual report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the year ended June 30, 1886, pages 146 and 147, being part 6, House Executive Document No. 1, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, and including also the pavement of New Jersey avenue from M street to O street northwest, $400,000: Provided, That under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavement at a higher price than $2 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District prior to July 1, 1886.

So as to make the clause read:

For improvement of streets and avenues named in the schedule of work on city streets and avenues proposed for the fiscal year 1888, contained in the annual report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the year ended June 30, 1886, pages 146 and 147, being part 6, House Executive Document No. 1, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, and including also the pavement of New Jersey avenue from M street to O street northwest, $400,000: Provided, That under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavement at a higher price than $2 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District prior to July 1, 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 187 to line 196, inclusive, of section 1, as follows:

For constructing, maintaining, lighting, and repairs of bridges, $12,000; and the money appropriated for new sewers and for work on sundry avenues and streets shall become available on the approval of this act: Provided also, That under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavement at a higher price than $2 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District prior to July 1, 1886, and with a base of not less than 6 inches in thickness.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For ordinary care of bridges, including keepers, oil, lamps, and matches, $2,500; for construction and repairs of bridges, $9,500; in all, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, was in section 1, line 206, to increase the appropriation "for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, and alleys" from $60,000 to $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 208, to increase the appropriation "for current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys" from $25,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "streets," at the end of line 209, to strike out "including any road that may be opened by reason of the building of a bridge over the Eastern Branch at the termination of Pennsylvania avenue;" so as to read:

For current work on county roads and suburban streets, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 212, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That the Tenallytown, Seventh street, and Bladensburg roads be first completed up to the limits of the District of Columbia out of this sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Tho next amendment was, after line 215, to insert:

For constructing county roads and suburban streets, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 221, after the word "items," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "twenty-two;" so as to make the clause read:

For the parking commission: For contingent expenses, including laborers, cart-hire, trees, tree-boxes, tree-stakes, tree-straps, planting and care of trees, whitewashing, care of parks, and miscellaneous items, $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 227, after the word "service," to strike out "ninety-five" and insert "one hundred and twenty;" and in line 228, after the word "dollars," to strike out "for electric light, $20,000; in all, $115,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For lighting: For illuminating material and lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning lamps on avenues, streets, and alleys, and for purchasing and erecting new lamp-posts, and replacing such lamp-posts as may be damaged or unfit for service, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the proviso to the same clause, after the word "purpose," at the end of line 238, to insert:

But not exceeding $20,000 of the above amount may be used in providing electric lights on one or more of the principal thoroughfares of the city, without regard to this limitation, but at the lowest reasonable price obtainable;

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no more than $20 per annum for each street-lamp shall be paid for gas, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and said lamps shall burn not less than two thousand six hundred hours per annum; and the commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to substitute other illuminating material at the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose; but not exceeding $20,000 of the above amount may be used in providing electric lights on one or more of the principal thoroughfares of the city, without regard to this limitation, but at the lowest reasonable price obtainable.

Mr. PLUMB. I move in the amendment of the committee, commencing in line 239, to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "ten."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 249, to insert:

Ice-boat for the harbor of Washington and the Potomac River: For the purchase or construction, and equipment of an ice-boat for the purpose of keeping the harbor of Washington and the navigation of the Potomac River free from obstructions by ice, and for the enforcement of the laws and regulations governing such harbor, for the relief of vessels in distress, and to serve as an auxiliary to the fire department of the city of Washington, $75,000; for the maintenance of said boat, $10,000; in all, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, line 275, after the words "obstructed sewers," to strike out "two" and insert "ten;" in line 276, after the words "pipe sewers," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "seventy;" after the word "dollars," at the end of line 276, to insert "construction of suburban sewers, $25,000;" and in line 278, after the word "all," to strike out "seventy-seven" and insert "one hundred and thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For sewers: For cleaning and repairing sewers and basins, $30,000: Provided, That the expenditures heretofore made and to be made on account of "repairs to sewers and basins" during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, shall be paid from the appropriation entitled "Cleaning sewers and basins" for said year; replacing obstructed sewers, $10,000; main and pipe sewers, $70,000; construction of suburban sewers, $25,000; in all, $135,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, after line 279, to insert:

The sums herein appropriated for materials for permit work, current work on county roads and suburban streets, constructing county roads and suburban streets, for harbor and river front, for ice-boat, for sewers, purchase of sites and construction and equipment of school buildings, and for procurement of mains, engines, and boilers for the water department shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "public schools," in section 1, line 292, after the word "items," to strike out "six hundred and sixty-two thousand nine" and insert "seven hundred and fourteen thousand one;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of superintendents, teachers, and janitors, secretary of the board, and clerks, including additional teachers, rents, repairs, fuel, furniture, books, stationery, new school buildings, furniture for new school buildings, and other necessary items, $714,120, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, line 308, at the end of the clause making appropriations for the compensation of teachers of public schools, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the number of teachers who are receiving $900 and over, and their present compensation under the existing schedule, shall not be increased, and the minimum compensation shall not be less than at the rate of $300 per annum; and the actual compensation paid to each teacher under this provision shall be reported to Congress at its next session by the commissioners of the District.

Mr. PLUMB. In view of some discussion which ensued in the Senate some days ago on the presentation of a petition by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], and also on account of some statements which have been made in the public prints recently, it is proper that I should state the position of the subcommittee and of the Committee on Appropriations on the subject of school accommodations for the District of Columbia, including the question of teachers' salaries.

It will, perhaps, be safe to assume that the committee were justified in taking, in the absence of any statement to the contrary, the representations which were made to them by the commissioners of the District and by the school officials who might appear for the purpose of making representations in regard to the needs of their department.

So far as I am aware, during the time I have had to do with this bill, which embraces the entire period of my service upon the Committee on Appropriations, the committee has given always everything and sometimes more than has been asked for for school accommodations, and, in fact, until the last year there had been no special representations made in regard to the inadequacy of such accommodations, and nothing to indicate that more was desired or necessary than was asked for by the commissioners in their annual estimates.

At the time when the last District of Columbia appropriation bill, now nearly one year ago, was under consideration in the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, the present superintendent of schools was before the subcommittee for the purpose of making such representations as he thought were necessary looking to an increase in the efficiency of the schools and generally to enable them more certainly and fully to accomplish the purposes for which they were established. But the only thing he asked was that the salaries of the teachers should be increased. In the course of the conversation which ensued upon that subject he expressed to the committee with very considerable force the alleged fact that in Washington city there was less proportionate need for teaching in the primary grades than there was in communities usually in this country, rather insinuating perhaps than saying that the people of Washington had children who were already either educated beyond the primary grades, or who had special need for high-grade education as compared with the needs of an equal number of children elsewhere in the cities of the United States, and upon that based an argument for an increase in the compensation to be paid to teachers in the higher grade schools. Neither then nor at any prior or subsequent time did he or the commissioners of the District of Columbia make any representation to the committee that additional school accommodations were needed beyond those provided for in the bill as it came from the House until the present year. The first that was heard, except perhaps some indistinct muttering from outside, was what was stated in the Senate by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] on the occasion of the consideration of the District appropriation bill last year.

This year, the matter having been brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations by reason of the debate in the Senate on the presentation of the memorial of which I have spoken, and by reason of the various publications which had been made in local prints, and in representations and solicitations made by citizens of the District to individual members of the committee, and by reason of representations made by a committee of citizens who came before the subcommittee for the purpose of bringing to its attention this matter especially, the committee became convinced that there was a lack of school buildings whereby the children of school age in the District of Columbia could be adequately sheltered while they were receiving tuition, and in fact that they were by reason of the lack of school room prevented from receiving that tuition which the law intended they should have.

Thereupon they addressed themselves somewhat thoroughly to the consideration of this question, and they asked of the superintendent of schools what he had to say about the various representations which had been made. He said in reply very promptly and emphatically that no child had ever been turned away from any school in the District of Columbia, thereby intending to convey, as we thought, the idea that the school accommodations of the District were adequate. It being suggested to him in response to this remark that that might not be the question, that perhaps the children did not appear where they knew they were not wanted and where they knew they could not be provided for, and that back of that was the question as to whether there were adequate accommodations for them if they did appear in such a way that the law which requires parents to send their children to school above a certain age might be enforced, he did say, but without any degree of alacrity or emphasis, that more school buildings were required, but, as before, he was chiefly concerned about the salaries and urged upon the subcommittee nothing except the increase of the average of teachers' compensation, as fixed by the House.

A somewhat similar admission was obtained from the commissioners themselves, this subject being brought to their attention as well; but the noise, the argument, the solicitation was then, as it always has been, on the subject of salaries.

Something has been said about longevity pay for teachers. In the District of Columbia appropriation bill for 1883, as it passed the House, in the item under the head of "public schools of the District of Columbia" there occurred this provision in the enumeration of the objects of appropriation, "and increase in teachers' pay by continuous service." After duly considering the question and being advised that that meant the establishment of longevity pay the committee struck it out. The Senate ratified this action, and the House receded. It was stated to those persons who came before the committee on that occasion to speak about school affairs that it was the intention of the committee in striking it out to prevent longevity pay hereafter, and to leave in the place of it, so far as the absence of the provision would affect it, the plan of promotion and increased pay dependent upon merit and not upon length of service.

That provision thus omitted has never been inserted in any District of Columbia appropriation bill or in any other bill since that time, but it came to the knowledge of the committee last year that notwithstanding the fact that the law had practically prohibited longevity pay, this principle had been applied to the force of teachers in the District as it had been before the time I have named, and that there was an intention, the law to the contrary notwithstanding, to keep it up. So we were urged to increase the average compensation as fixed by the House, backed by the statement that if we did not a deficiency would result—a statement in effect that the law would not be obeyed if enacted as proposed by the House—and it was in effect admitted that the law would be violated for the purpose of longevity pay; that is, increased pay based upon length of service and not upon merit.

We ascertained also that for the purpose of violating the spirit of the law of last year while pretending to observe it a considerable number, about twenty, I believe, of teachers had been employed at a nominal compensation, say $250 a year, whereby the average of the salaries of the whole number of teachers had been kept nearly within the limit provided by law. But even that did not operate to quite comply with the letter of the law, and so after the promotions had been made on account of longevity the commissioners razeed each one of the salaries, the highest and the lowest alike, 3 per cent., thereby, as the committee thought, committing a most serious injury upon the lower-grade teachers already receiving a very modest if not a somewhat inadequate compensation.

That question naturally came to the front somewhat this year, not upon a proposition to destroy the high schools, or to take away any facilities which were afforded to high-school scholars, but on a proposition that, as we intended to maintain, with our present light, at least the average compensation established by the bill as it came from the House, the new appointments to the force of teachers provided for by the bill should be in the lower grades, believing, as we do, that it is in those grades that increased force and increased efficiency are necessary, and that there has been too much of a tendency on the part of those who have had to do with the management of schools in the District to give increased efficiency to high-school grades at the expense of the lower grades. It did not enter into the mind of any member of the committee, nor was it suggested by any one, to take anything from the high schools. The whole plan and purpose was to increase the school facilities in the primary grades—and it was fully competent to do this without taking anything from the existing establishment. The committee was simply determined to recommend the appropriation of enough money to make it perfectly sure that hereafter, or at all events within such limit of time as should be necessary for the erection of proper buildings, there should be no lack of school room for every scholar of school age in the District of Columbia, both in the high schools and in the primary schools. I may say in behalf of the committee that if the lack of school accommodations had been brought to the attention of the committee a year ago or two years ago, as I have no doubt they should have been, the same adequate provision would have been made in the appropriation bills of those years that has been made in the present bill.

Unfortunately the schools have not apparently received very much attention at the hands of the District commissioners. A school board composed of I do not know how many persons, nor who has been chiefly in charge, perhaps without power and responsibility, but at all events with enough of it to relieve the commissioners from any sense of responsibility on their own part. I judge, too, from some recently developed facts that there has been too much tender solicitude for the interests of the saloons, bawdy-houses, and kindred establishments of the District, to leave much time to look after those of the common schools. Certain it is that the schools have been neglected, that thousands of children have been practically denied admission to them, and that the upper grades have been promoted at the expense of the lower ones. That vice and crime out of proportion to the population should have ensued is not to be wondered at.

When we come to the item for the buildings for schools it will be observed that the committee has recommended the substitution of an entirely new paragraph. In that paragraph provision is made for a cash appropriation to erect an eight-room school-house, in addition to the school-houses provided by the bill as it came from the House. In addition to that the commissioners are authorized to sell property belonging to the District and not needed for District purposes which is said to be of the value of about $150,000, and with this money to erect new school-houses. With these new facilities, a large portion of which will be available by the beginning of the fall term of the schools in September next, there will be added to the facilities now existing in the District room for between 7,500 and 8,000 scholars, enough, as we believe, to entirely fill the want now existing and to provide, as ought to be provided everywhere, ample facilities for every scholar of school age.

I do not make this statement so far as I am concerned because of any publications which have been recently made in the newspapers concerning the attitude of myself or of other members of the subcommittee. Hearings before the subcommittee have always been regarded and treated to be practically private. And so far as I know the resulting obligation has not heretofore been violated. The incorrect statements which have been made, with no doubt an ulterior purpose, while serving the purpose of a caution as to the matter of confidence hereafter, do not call for reply. It is action formulated in results which possess public interest, and efforts at notoriety through controversy can properly be permitted to fail of their designed effect, however tempting the opportunity to puncture them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, in the clause making appropriations "for janitors and care of buildings and grounds," in line 329, after the name "Addison," to insert "Amidon;" in line 331, after the name "Cranch," to strike out "Amidon;" and in line 339, after the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For janitors and care of buildings and grounds: For care of the high-school building, $1,600; of the Jefferson building, $1,400; of the Stevens building, $1,100; of the Franklin building, $1,100; of the Force, Seaton, Henry, Webster, Gales, Peabody, Wallach, Garnett, Sumner, Analostan, Curtis, and Dennison buildings, at $900 each; of the Lincoln and Miner buildings, at $800 each; of the Twining, Abbot, John F. Cook, Addison, Amidon, and Randall buildings, at $700 each; of the Cranch, Morse, Brent, Bannaker, Blair, Wormley, Anthony Bowen, and three new buildings, at $500 each; for messenger to the superintendent of the first six divisions, $300; for messenger to the superintendent of the seventh and eighth divisions, $200; for care of smaller buildings and rented rooms, at a rate not to exceed $48 per annum for the care of each school-room, $7,300; in all, $34,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 343, after the word "grounds," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" and after the word "all," at the end of line 349, to strike out "ninety" and insert "ninety-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For miscellaneous: For rent of school buildings, $15,000; repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds, $25,000; for sanitary improvements in old buildings, $10,000; for contingent expenses, including furniture, books, stationery, printing, insurance, and other necessary items, $20,000; for fuel, $20,000; for the purpose of industrial instruction, including tools, machinery, material, and apparatus, $5,000; in all, $95,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 351 to line 368, inclusive, as follows:

For buildings for schools: For building and furnishing an addition to the Columbia road school, $3,000; for building and furnishing an addition to the Hamilton road school, $3,000; for building and furnishing an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Wallach school building, $25,600; for building and furnishing an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Sumner school building, $28,400; for building and furnishing an eight-room school building in school division No. 4, $25,000; and the commissioners are authorized to sell and convey any lot now owned by the District in said division and to apply the proceeds of such sale to the purchase of a more eligible building lot, if in their judgment expedient; and for such purpose the additional sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is also appropriated; in all, $88,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For buildings for schools, and for furniture for the same: For building an addition to the Columbia road school, $3,000; for building an addition to the Hamilton road school, $3,000; for building an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Wallach school building, $25,600; for building an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Sumner school building, $28,400; for building an eight-room school building in school division No. 4, $25,000; for the purchase of a site and building a school building in school division No. 8, $35,000; for the purchase of proper and sufficient furniture for the several buildings aforesaid, $8,000; for providing and causing to be erected and affixed to such of the school buildings in the District of Columbia as require the same, under the provisions of the act approved January 26, 1887, entitled "An act for the further protection of property from fire, and safety of lives, in the District of Columbia," such iron fire-escapes and combined stand-pipes and ladders, or either of said appliances, as may be approved and adopted by the commissioners of said District, $6,000; in all, $134,000. And the said commissioners are authorized to sell and convey to the purchaser or purchasers thereof any lot or parcel of land now owned by the District of Columbia in any part of the said District and not necessary for the present use of the District, and to apply the proceeds of such sales to the purchase of eligible sites and the erection thereon of such eight-room buildings for public schools as in the judgment of the said commissioners shall be required to furnish school accommodations for all the children of school age in the District of Columbia, not otherwise provided for, as need such school accommodation, so far as the said proceeds will accomplish said object.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 381 the word "eight" should be "two;" so as to read: "A school building in school division No. 2, $35,000." I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I see the last line of the amendment reads, "so far as the said proceeds will accomplish said object;" and that leads me to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether he thinks that by the adoption of this bill with the amendment proposed there will be provided sufficient accommodations for all the children who desire to attend school, so that they can all have an opportunity to attend school during the whole day without dividing the time between the forenoon and afternoon?

Mr. PLUMB. I believe that such will be the effect of the provision we have inserted in the bill. It will certainly provide school facilities for somewhere between 7,500 and 8,000 children not now provided for.

Mr. PLATT. I understood the Senator to so announce when on his feet before, but I wanted to have the statement brought out distinctly.

Mr. PLUMB. It was the design to do that thing most absolutely.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, was in the appropriations "for Metropolitan Police," in section 1, line 415, before the word "inspectors," to strike out "night;" so as to read:

Two lieutenants, inspectors, at $1,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 416, after the word "one," to insert "chief clerk, who shall also be;" so as to read:

One chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 427, before the word "privates," to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

One hundred and thirty privates, class 1, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 439, before the word "drivers," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four drivers of patrol-wagons, at $360 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 446, after the word "office" to insert "purchase of van;" and after the word "items," at the end of line 450, to strike out "ten thousand five hundred" and insert "twelve thousand;" so as to read:

Miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including stationery, books, telegraphing, photographs, printing, binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs to same, beds and bed-clothing, insignia of office, purchase of van, purchase and care of horses, police equipments and repairs to same, harness, forage, repairs to vehicles, van, ambulance, and patrol-wagons, and expenses incurred in prevention and detection of crime, and other necessary items, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 452, after the word "second," to strike out "or fifth precinct" and insert "and fifth precincts;" and in line 453, after the word "horses," to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "nine thousand;" so as to read:

Police signal and telephone system in second and fifth precincts, including wagons and horses, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 455, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for Metropolitan police" from $344,700 to $352,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for the fire department," in section 1, line 471, to increase the appropriation for "purchase of hose" from $2,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 473, to increase the appropriation for "forage" from $5,000 to $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 478, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for the fire department" from $108,920 to $110,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 513.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 511, in the appropriations for the health department, after the words "and other necessary items," I move to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand;" so as to read:

And for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, rent, repairs to pound and vehicles, forage, meat for dogs, horseshoeing, maintenance of ambulance service, painting, and other necessary items, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to a necessary change in the footing in line 513.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 513, after the word "thousand," I move to insert "five hundred," so as to read, "in all $42,580."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 551.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 540 I move to strike out "three thousand six hundred" and insert "ten thousand;" so as to read:

For rent of District offices, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I will furnish to the clerks in a moment the necessary addition to make up the total in line 551.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for reformatories and prisons," to strike out lines 610 and 611 of section 1, as follows:

For the Georgetown almshouse: For the support of inmates, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "charities," in section 1, line 633, to increase the appropriation "for the National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children," from $6,500 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 636, to increase the appropriation "for St. Ann's Infant Asylum" from $5,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 639, to insert:

For the erection of a new wing for the Church Orphanage of the District of Columbia, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 643, to reduce the appropriation "for the Washington Hospital for Foundlings" from $7,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 647, to insert:

To complete the payment for the building of and repairs to the House of the Good Shepherd, $3,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to change the construction of the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the amendment of the committee adopted?

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to amend the paragraph by transposing the words "and repairs to" and adding the words "the same," so as to read:

To complete the payment for the building of the House of the Good Shepherd, and repairs to the same, $3,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, line 654, after the word "thousand," to insert "six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the board of managers of the Association for Works of Mercy to discharge so much of the indebtedness of said association incurred in the purpose of a building, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 656, to insert:

The several institutions included under the head of asylums, reformatories, industrial schools, and charities named in this act, shall report to the commissioners of the District, on or before the 1st day of December next, a full and detailed account of receipts and expenditures, and all their operations, and said commissioners shall transmit the same to Congress, with a report as to what legislation is necessary to increase the efficiency and economy of said institutions, and to effect the general purpose for which they are organized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "Water Department," in section 1, line 692, after the word "mains," to strike out "eighty" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For engineers and firemen, fuel, and for high service, pipe-distribution to high and low service, including public hydrants, fire-plugs, material and labor, repairing and laying new mains, and lowering mains, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to one amendment that was withheld for changing the total.

Mr. PLUMB. That is on line 551. That total should be $21,200.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This will be agreed to if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to have inserted in the RECORD at the close of the proceedings in regard to this bill a statement showing the items of the bill and the difference between the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement will be inserted in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 10395, being the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. May I ask the Senator from Iowa how long the bill will probably take?

Mr. ALLISON. A very few minutes; probably not more than twenty minutes; very little time beyond the reading. I ask that the bill be read for amendment, and that the single amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations may be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to have this bill informally laid aside, and to call up the bill to make a port of entry at Tampa, Fla. It will only require the reading of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will do that with pleasure, if it will take no time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Florida repeat his request?

PORT OF ENTRY AT TAMPA.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 2992.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Fla., a port of entry.

Mr. CALL. I am requested by the Senator from Oregon to offer an amendment to add as a new section the following:

That Port Angeles is hereby created a port of delivery in the district of Puget Sound, Washington Territory.

Mr. ALLISON. Does that come from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. CALL. If any Senator objects I will withdraw it.

Mr. ALLISON. If that is the matured judgment of the Committee on Commerce I have no objection to it.

Mr. CALL. I understand it is reported from the Committee on Commerce. I so understood the Senator from Oregon, though I do not know the fact.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator's bill had better be kept independent.

Mr. CALL. Very well. I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment after line 229 to add—

For the erection of a gymnasium for cadets, and for repairs and alterations of the present gymnasium, $35,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALL subsequently entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLER and Mr. MCPHERSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 5190, Order of Business 2035.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture and Labor.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I gave notice a few moments ago of my intention to call up the Pacific Railroad accounts joint resolution. For three days I have persistently sought the eye and recognition of the Chair, but I find it impossible to gain it. Senators on the other side of the Chamber can have recognition whenever it is demanded. I know on three or four occasions I have first addressed the Chair, but for some reason, which perhaps the Chair can explain, I have failed of recognition, and it has been accorded to the other side of the Chamber.

When I first gave notice of my intention to call up this measure I was immediately antagonized by the Senator from New York. The Chair now elects to recognize the Senator from New York instead of myself.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator will pardon me for a moment. I do not desire to make——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to a question of order?

Mr. MILLER. Not just this moment, because of course the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey are out of order. The motion which I have made does not admit of any discussion except by unanimous consent. I do not care to cut the Senator off from any proper remarks which he may desire to make in advance on this subject, but I think it will be much better if we take a vote on this motion without going into any discussion, because if the Senator from New Jersey desires the courtesy of the Senate to speak upon it, of course other Senators will desire to be heard on the opposite side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New York is not debatable, and the Senator from New Jersey will on a moment's reflection, the Chair thinks, feel that his criticism of the Chair is unjust. The Chair endeavors to be entirely impartial. If the motion of the Senator from New York shall prevail, it will be then in the power of the Senator from New Jersey at any time, or during any appropriation bill, or any bill that is pending, to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution he proposes to have considered; but in the mean time the Chair is bound to recognize the Senator from New York, because he addressed the Chair first; and the question is not debatable.

The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of the bill relative to the Department of Agriculture. If it is taken up it will then be in order for the Senator from New Jersey to move to proceed to the consideration of any other subject on the Calendar.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I admit the fact that I am not proceeding in order, but I will only say this, as to the action of the Chair to-day and for several days past, as stated, I am surprised and grieved.

I know full well that I can not amend the motion of the Senator from New York under the rules. Therefore I will wait until the bill of the Senator from New York is before the Senate, and then I will make my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I now move to postpone the consideration of the bill before the Senate and proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 170.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is in order.

Mr. MILLER. I was on my feet and had addressed the Chair. I thought that, having charge of the bill, I was entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has a right to move to proceed to the consideration of any other subject, but he can not take another Senator off his feet to make a motion of that kind.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from New Jersey was recognized by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The right of the Senator from New York to the floor was exhausted when the motion he made was agreed to by the Senate and the bill was taken up.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now, that I may know whether it is the intention——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. MILLER. Will the President please state the question before the Senate now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New Jersey is to postpone the pending order and take up the House joint resolution 170.

Mr. CULLOM. Is that debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable.

Mr. MCPHERSON. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to postpone the pending order and proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 170.

Mr. CULLOM. May I make an inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as the resolution is stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. The inquiry I desire to make is this: The Senate has just voted to take up the bill called up by the Senator from New York on motion. Now, without that being laid aside, the Senator from New Jersey moves to take up another bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate may postpone one bill at any time and take up another.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the motion ought to include a motion to lay aside the one we have just taken up for consideration.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It includes that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion would include that. It is a motion to postpone and take up. On this question the Senator from New Jersey asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] generally. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were present, and I decline to vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called.) My pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] has been tranaferred to the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded; the result was announced—yeas 22, nays 33;

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate will be read.

Mr. MILLER. At the suggestion of some of the Senators immediately about me I feel called upon before proceeding with the bill to make a statement in regard to the order of business, under which it now comes up.

It is no secret at all. It is well known to the Senate that a committee of Senators, some upon this side and some upon the other side, have been consulting at different times in regard to the order of business for the closing days of this session. An order of business was agreed upon by a committee of this side, and also, I believe, an order of business prepared by a committee on the other side, and those two committees, acting together, agreed upon a majority of the bills which should be taken up, and upon the order in which they should be taken up; but upon all of the bills, or upon the order in all cases, they did not agree.

The bill which I have moved is in accordance with the order prepared by the committee on the Republican side of the Chamber. Down to this point in the consideration of bills of importance, I believe the two committees have agreed; but on this particular bill the committees I understand have not fully agreed, leaving every one free to vote as he saw fit as regards taking up this measure or any other.

That is as I understand the condition of affairs. The measure moved by the Senator from New Jersey is upon the order of business as prepared by the committee on this side, and upon the order of business as prepared by the committee on the other side; but the two committees did not agree as to the precise point where that measure should come in.

I say this in order that the Senators near me who are in favor of taking up the measure of the Senator from New Jersey in its proper order as agreed upon by this side may not be put in a false light of voting against the consideration of that measure at any time that measure will under any circumstances come up, because the two committees have agreed that it shall be considered, but thus far they have not agreed as to the place or the time when it shall be considered.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from New York will allow me a word?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution that the Senator from New Jersey moved that the Senate proceed to consider at this time, the committees on both sides of the Chamber agreed should be considered, but did not agree as to the order in which it should be considered.

Mr. MILLER. That is just what I stated.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on this side of the Chamber insisted that it should come in immediately before or after the consideration of pensions upon the list, while the Committee on that side of the Chamber placed it far down upon the list. Hence there has been no agreement as to the order in which it should be considered, but both sides agree that the resolution shall be considered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from New York yield to me now a moment after that statement?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I understood when I made the motion to bring this resolution up that it was entirely in order to make the motion. I understood from the committee on this side of the Chamber that they had insisted upon the early consideration of the Pacific railroad resolution. I now understand from the Senator from New York that the committee on that side of the Chamber determined that it should have very late consideration.

In other words, a bill now proposed by the Senator from New York, which has been before the Senate for four successive years and has been rejected every time, is made in the estimation of the committee and of the distinguished gentlemen on that side of the Chamber of much more importance than attempting to save to this Government $2,500,000 a year, which probably the investigation will save to it. If there is any reason why the investigation of the Pacific railroad matters, which probably will provoke some discussion, and that, too, within eight or ten days of the end of the session, is to be subordinated to a bill creating a department of agriculture, then I have nothing further to say. Let the people judge for themselves.

Mr. MILLER If the Senator has finished, I will say simply another word in regard to this order of business. It does not appear that the order as arranged by the committee on this side put the measure of the Senator from New Jersey far down upon the list. These bills are considered in their regular order without interference. I should say that not more than two or three days would elapse at furthest before the measure which the Senator from New Jersey moved to take up would be reached. As to the importance of these measures, I do not care to go into that question at all. The importance of the bill which is now before the Senate is conceded by the whole country, and along with it and following it according to the order of business as prepared by the committee on this side comes the pleuro-pneumonia bill, which, in my judgment, if it is enacted into a law and faithfully executed, will save more to this country than all the money that the United States has invested in the Union Pacific or all other railroads combined.

That is all I care to say about the order of business.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator now allow me a moment?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Some days since the order of programme was laid out by these committees or by one committee. Some suggestion was made and I think this very proposition was urged which the Senator from New Jersey now has in charge, and I supposed it was understood distinctly that when he returned from New Jersey the resolution should be taken up. I think that was so understood by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that when the Senator from New Jersey returned it should be considered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Not only that, but I have asked, as a personal favor to myself because of my necessary absence, that the resolution should be considered, and for the first time since I have been acquainted with the proceedings of the Senate that favor has been denied.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I felt it my duty to make that suggestion.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator will permit me, I think the Senator from Massachusetts was not listening to what was said, for if he had heard what was said I believe he would not consent to the correctness of the statement, because I did not so understand it at the time the matter was brought up before.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I will repeat it. I do not actually suppose it necessary that I should give any excuse for voting as I did on the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey, but that would seem to be directly intimating that I should do so. I did not vote according to the programme, and I was about stating the reasons why I did not do so, that higher and above the programme I thought was the action of the Senate a day or two ago when the joint resolution was reached on the Calendar. It was asked by some one on the other side that it should be deferred until the Senator from New Jersey returned. Then I understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said that when the Senator from New Jersey returned the joint resolution should be called up immediately. So I understood him. However, I may be in error as to that.

Mr. HOAR. I will state what actually happened. If the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] are both present I should like to have them hear what I say.

The joint resolution was reached in the morning hour under the Anthony rule one morning when the Senator from New Jersey was absent, and it went over. Those cases which were to be considered under the five-minute rule subject to a single objection were being called. This case was reached. Somebody objected to it; I do not know who. The Senator from Maryland then rose and stated that he desired to have it go over till the next morning, retaining its place under that rule; that is, to be considered the next morning under the five-minute rule, subject to a single objection. I rose and stated that it ought not to come up in the absence of the Senator from New Jersey, who took a great interest in it, and that it could not come up under the Anthony rule, because it was a measure which of course would give rise to a discussion of more than five minutes and would be objected to.

I further stated, I think, to the Senate (I am not sure now from my memory, but whether I stated it to the Senate then or did not, I will now state it), that I had had a conference with the Senator from New Jersey, who expressed the desire to have the matter come up early, as soon as he got back, and I engaged that I would aid in the furtherance of that wish. I told the Senator from New Jersey that I was bound by the order which the Republican caucus had made, but that I would agree that if the Senators who represented prior measures upon that order of business were willing I would consent that the joint resolution might be advanced, and if the Senator from Kansas, who had charge of several of these measures, was seen. I saw him myself, and he told me that he could not be sure that day whether he would consent that his land bill should give way, but he would let me know the next day. I think it was yesterday morning, Monday morning, that I saw him. But, however that was, at any rate the substance of the whole thing is that I proposed to be bound in honor by the order of business adopted by the Republican caucus, but that if the gentlemen representing previous orders of business would consent I proposed to do what I could to have this matter brought forward, as I consider myself bound to it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Agricultural Department bill was taken up as provided in this order. Then, as is very usual with bills which are recognized, it was laid temporarily aside for the purpose of considering some other matter. That of course is not, I think, a violation of the order here, because the right of way was given to the department bill in charge of the Senator from New York. He had the right of way upon that measure, and, therefore, it was not unusual, neither do I think it is in conflict with the programme, I say in justice to myself, to lay it aside temporarily to take up the joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me; I made no criticism on the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I know you did not.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know how he voted. All I have to say is that what he has quoted related solely to bringing it up under the five-minute rule, and I stated to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who proposed to have it retain its place under the five-minute rule, that there would be no use in doing that, because it was a measure which could not be considered under that rule, and, further, that it could not be considered while the Senator from New Jersey was absent. That is all that I said.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator's explanation is satisfactory and is fully understood. I said that according to the programme the bill of the Senator from New York had the right of way, and a motion was made, as is ordinarily done, to lay it aside temporarily for the purpose of giving consideration to some other matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That cannot be done by a motion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well; that was done.

The importance of the joint resolution, I take it, is perfectly evident. There are many bills on the programme between the bill here named and this bill which are important, but this measure is important in this aspect, that it is an amendment of a proposition of the House of Representatives. The House joint resolution went to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I understand the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously proposed a substitute, which is reported, and it is important, as it is an amendment to the House proposition, and therefore necessarily must go back to the House before there can be final action upon it; and if it meets with any degree of hostility in the House it can not be passed at this session of Congress.

Its importance is increased by the fact that there should be early action on the joint resolution. It comes unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary; and it certainly can not take many minutes to dispose of it in the Senate, and it may go back to the House with a possibility of its passage. But if it is deferred until it is reached in its proper place in the programme, the danger is that if it goes back passed even in five or ten minutes in this body, whatever opposition it may meet in the other House, where it will probably be opposed to a certain extent, will be able to defeat it entirely,

Mr. McPHERSON. Can the Senator give me an assurance that it is not the intention that the joint resolution shall not pass, by placing it down at 14 upon the list, as your side of the Chamber have done?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator must draw his own conclusion as to that. A proposition, the importance of which is recognized in this body and throughout the whole country, which was so important that it came unanimously from the Judiciary Committee, would seem certainly to be entitled to early consideration on the part of the Senate, so as to insure its passage, if its passage is desired by both bodies.

Mr. McPHERSON. I supposed the joint resolution would provoke some discussion in the Senate, and I knew quite well it would in the other House, as it at present appears before the Senate, having been reported by the Judiciary Committee. Therefore I desired, and only desired, early consideration of the measure, that it might go to the other House and have consideration there.

When I left Washington last week I did not expect on my return to find the measure in the position it is in to-day.

I supposed that the caucus committee would certainly give it early consideration, because of the fact that the Judiciary Committee considered it of so much importance that they held daily sessions in order that some agreement might be reached by the committee, and the measure was promptly reported back to the Senate. I find now that after it is reported there seems to be a persistent, determined effort that it shall not have consideration. In my opinion if inventive men were paid at public cost to devise some way by which the other House should not have an opportunity to act upon the joint resolution at all, no better plan could have been devised.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not intend to interrupt my friend from New York.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This investigating resolution or bill, whatever it was, as it came from the House of Representatives, was in my opinion calculated—I do not say, as my friend from New Jersey seemed to intimate, designed—to prevent getting forward with this Pacific Railroad business in a definite and decisive way; but it was calculated to do precisely what the railroad companies, if they did not wish to have anything accomplished in the way of coming to a decisive determination of this matter, would have devised.

So far as the investigation went about old transactions, no matter how bad they were, it is of no possible consequence in respect of the things that Congress has to do—not the slightest. You may grant that they would discover that millions have been stolen and expended for improper objects, buying the Senator from Vermont, and the Senator from New Jersey, and other Senators, and buying members of the House of Representatives. That would be a very useful investigation by either House, which has the sole jurisdiction over its own members, by a committee of its own, and to expel the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Jersey if they were found, or even suspected, I will say, to have been engaged in any such thing. But so far as the House resolution went, when it came to us it was purely a performance that if carried on in the way proposed by the House would result in a delay of a year, or two, or three in bringing these matters to a decisive resolution.

Now, then, the Committee on the Judiciary amended the House proposition so as to rectify the investigation to a certain extent and to bring it somewhat within limits that could be accomplished within the life of man; and secondly, it added provisions which are of real and immediate consequence to be adopted, as I think, though all the members of the committee do not agree with me about that. Pending any final disposition of the matter, the thing ought not to be sent along by investigation after investigation, without anything being done in certain other respects.

Therefore, as the matter was reported I was for it, not on account of the investigating part of it, which I think is utterly useless, it will not help any, but in respect of the other matters that the Committee on the Judiciary thought proper to add as a means of trying to get some legislation at this session.

Anybody who supposes that any gentleman on this side, even some of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary who did not agree with me and with the majority of the committee about these additional provisions, agreed that we ought to take action. I say that anybody who supposes that the gentlemen on this side who voted to take this out of its order of what was thought to be the importance of measures and their arrangement on any idea that we are trying to hold up this matter and to keep Congress from having some action about it which would be of some advantage to the people of the United States, is entirely mistaken.

I voted against taking it up now and for taking up the agricultural bill—and would have preferred much to vote to take up the pleuro-pneumonia bill—in order that we may go on in some order or other and get something done, for the joint resolution as amended by the Committee on the Judiciary is of importance, not of importance as it came from the House, I repeat, but of importance one way or the other in respect of the additional provisions that the Committee on the Judiciary put in it, and it is an entire injustice to suggest that any gentleman on this side has voted against taking it up now on the ground that we do not want to act, for that is not the truth.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in some and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had concurred in other amendments of the Senate with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New York to yield to me a moment that I may ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 22, 1887.

Resolved, That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, numbered as follows: 3, 4, 154, 158, 161, 172, 189, 193, 197, 205, 206, 207, 208, 212, 218, 219, 220, 221, 229, 232, 255, 256, and 257.

And concur in the thirty-ninth amendment of the Senate to said bill with an amendment, as follows:

Page 8, line 23, of the bill, after the word "Louisiana," insert the words "at Chicot Pass and to mark navigable channel along Grand Lake, Louisiana."

Concur in the fifty-fifth amendment of the Senate to said bill, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For post-office, custom-house, and court-house at Wilmington, N. C.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $50,000.

"For court-house and post-office at Jefferson, Tex.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $25,000.

"For post-office at Houston, Tex.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $25,000.

"Public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.: For completion of the building, $52,148.

"For post-office and custom-house at Portsmouth, Ohio: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $12,000."

Concur in the fifty-eighth amendment of the Senate to said bill with an amendment, as follows:

Page 9 of the bill, after line 2, insert the following:

"Lighting the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor: For building for engines and boilers, $10,000; incandescent-light plant, $2,500; dynamos, lamps, and lens for torch, $4,000; removing present machinery to new building, additional houses for side lamps, putting grounds in order, fencing and incidentals, $3,000; in all, $19,500."

Concur in the one hundred and seventy-ninth amendment of the Senate to said bill, with an amendment, as follows: After the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

"Elevator for the House wing of theCapitol: For the construction of an elevator, for the use of the public, in the House wing of the Capitol, to be located at the south end of the western corridor, and to run from the basement to the upper story, $12,000; and the Architect is directed to have the same completed for use by December 1, 1887."

And non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to said bill numbered as follows: 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 155, 156, 157, 159, 160, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 190, 191, 192, 194, 195, 196, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 209, 210, 211, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 230, 231, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 258, 259, 260, 261, and 262.

Mr. ALLISON. In hastily looking over the amendments made by the other House, I think some of them ought to be concurred in, perhaps most of them; but in order to facilitate the consideration of the bill, I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendments proposed by the House of Representatives, and insist upon the Senate amendments, and ask the House for a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate disagree to the amendments proposed by the House of Representatives to amendments of the Senate, and insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the committee will be stated in their order. The Senator from New York, however, has the floor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, before taking up the amendments I will detain the Senate for a short time only in making a brief explanation of the bill and of its importance.

For many years the agricultural interests of this country have been seeking the creation in the Government here at Washington of a department with a full secretary at its head. Bills for this purpose have repeatedly passed the House of Representatives and at times the Senate, but never up to the present time has a bill for this purpose passed both Houses during any one session of Congress; consequently the objects sought in this bill have failed of realization up to the present time.

It will be seen upon a reference to the bill that the scope of it is somewhat enlarged from what it has been in similar bills heretofore presented to the Congress of the United States. It is proposed by this bill to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor.

It will be remembered that two years ago Congress created in the Department of the Interior a bureau known as the Bureau of Labor, and a commissioner was appointed at its head. By this bill the Bureau of Labor is transferred from the Interior Department to the department to be created by this proposed act, and thus we shall have, if the act becomes a law, a department here at Washington, with a secretary at its head, which shall have for its object the consideration of the interests of a vast majority of the people of our whole country.

It has also been proposed by an amendment to the bill to transfer to this new department, when it shall be created, what is known as the United States Signal-Service Bureau, or Weather Bureau, taking it out of the Army and putting into this new department. For a long time there has been a desire expressed both by the head of the Army and by many officials connected with the Government, and generally by Senators in this body, that the Weather Bureau or Signal-Service Bureau should be taken out of the Army and put into some one of the other Departments. It has not seemed proper heretofore that it should go to any one of the Departments as now organized, and the committee acting upon the suggestion made to it has proposed an amendment to the bill which will transfer the Weather Bureau to this new department.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the Senator to explain that a little more fully. The Signal-Service Bureau, I understand, is a military bureau for the purpose of training young men of the Army in signaling for military service, and the Weather Bureau is separate and distinct from it. Will there not have to be some distinction made in the bill, so as to leave that portion of the Signal Service which is purely military in the hands of the Army for army purposes, and transfer only the Weather Bureau, which is now under the Signal Service, to this new department? I desire to call the Senator's attention to that point, because I am somewhat confused about it.

Mr. MILLER. When we come to take up the amendment of the committee on that point and consider it I will then make the best explanation I can, and the best answer I can to the question which the Senator has proposed; but in my preliminary remarks I simply desire to refer to it in the most general terms. I will say that the committee have had great difficulty in drafting an amendment which would properly bring about the results which are desired; but I will refer to that later on.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the Senator if the amendment to which he refers is printed?

Mr. MILLER. The amendment was printed when the bill was reported.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will allow me, it was because I thought he was going to speak of it, and on account of the confusion we have had in the Appropriations Committee in regard to this matter that I desired him to explain it a little more fully.

Mr. MORGAN. The whole difficulty suggested by the Senator from Kentucky will be removed by an amendment on which we are all practically agreed.

Mr. MILLER. Several members of the committee desire to transfer to this department other bureaus now actively at work in some other of the Executive Departments of the Government. Some desire to transfer to it all matters relating to the commerce of the country, and it would seem most appropriate that all questions relating to internal commerce and to transportation should belong to a Department which has to do with the productive energies of the country, with those energies which give us our commerce and which produce the articles of commerce; but fearing that we might overload the bill and thus break it down, the committee decided to go no further than it has in offering amendments, believing that if this department shall be created, within a very few years a number of important bureaus will be added to it Some members of the committee believe that the Census Bureau should become a part of this new department.

For one I shall be glad to see the time when all the laws under which the public lands can be taken up shall have been repealed except the homestead act, and then the arable public lands of this country which are to be occupied by the farmers and the laboring men of our country should be put directly under the charge and control of the Agricultural Department. But, as I have said, the committee did not desire and did not think it wise at this time to make any such general or sweeping changes. Therefore they have contented themselves with reporting back a bill creating a department of agriculture and labor, transferring to it the Labor Bureau from the Interior Department and the Weather Bureau from the War Department.

It is scarcely necessary, but still I will venture for a few moments to refer to the great interests which are involved and which are to be affected by this bill. The census of 1880 gives us the statistics of agriculture and labor in this country. There we learn that there were in 1880 four million separate farms in the United States; that they were valued, with their improvements, with the agricultural machinery and the live-stock upon them, in round numbers, at $12,000,000,000, which is more than one-quarter of the entire property of our country and our people. The value of our farm products in 1880 as given by that census was $2,212,540,927. Without going into too great detail, I may here refer to some of the principal products and the quantities that were produced in that year. Of wheat there were produced 459,483,137 bushels, equal to more than 9 bushels per capita for the entire population of the country; of Indian corn there were produced 1,754,591,676 bushels; of oats, 407,858,999 bushels; of potatoes of all kinds, 202,837,232 bushels; of hay there were produced 35,205,712 tons; of cotton there were produced 5,755,359 bales; of the dairy products, of butter there were produced 806,672,071 pounds, of cheese, 243,157,850. The clip of wool in 1880 in this country was 240,681,781, being an increase over the production of 1870 of 147 per cent.

As I stated a moment ago, the bill affects, directly and indirectly, nearly all our people. There are engaged in agriculture, either as owners of farms or as laborers upon them, about 8,000,000 people, producing, as I have already stated, a total valuation of products of more than $2,000,000,000 per annum. These 4,000,000 farmers and their laborers not only produce food for the farmers and their laborers but also for our whole 60,000,000 people. Not only do we supply all our own wants but we are enabled to supply very largely the wants of the rest of the world. Whatever shortage there may be in the crops of Europe always finds a ready supply from our own markets.

It is estimated that the United States is producing to-day more than 30 per cent. of all the grain or cereals produced in the world. We owe to the surplus product of our farms the fact that the balance of trade between ourselves and the rest of the world is largely in our own favor. The great bulk of the exports from our country are farm products, and the amount of our exports has been steadily growing for many years.

Let me briefly call the attention of the Senate to the part that the agriculturists of our country have played in our foreign commerce and in the maintenance of the balance of trade in our favor. In 1850 the agricultural exports from the United States were $108,605,713 in value, which was then equal to 80.5 per cent. of the total exports of our country. Ten years later, in 1860, those exports had grown to $256,560,972, being 81 per cent. of the total exports of the country. Ten years later, in 1870, they had grown to $361,188,483, amounting, however, to only 79 per cent. of the total exports of the country. Ten years later, in 1880, they had substantially doubled in value. The exports in that year of agricultural products were $683,010,976, being 82.9 per cent. of the total exports of the United States. In 1881 they were still higher, being $729,650,016, or 82.5 per cent. of the total exports. In 1882 they had fallen somewhat; the total exports that year were $552,219,819, being 75.3 per cent. of the total exports. In 1883 they advanced and were $619,269,449, being 77 per cent. of the total exports. In 1884 they receded again and were $536,315,318, being 74 per cent. of the total exports. In 1885 they were nearly stationary, being $530,172,835, or 73 per cent. of the total exports. In 1886 they fell somewhat; they were $484,954,595, or 72 per cent. of the total exports. The total amount of the exports in the seven years from 1880 to 1886, inclusive, was $4,135,593,008, or an average of $590,800,000 yearly.

Mr. BECK. Does that include petroleum?

Mr. MILLER. This includes simply agricultural products.

Mr. BECK. It does not include petroleum?

Mr. MILLER. It does not include petroleum, nothing but agricultural products. Of course it includes meats and provisions, but it has nothing to do with our mining exports, or manufacturing exports, or with petroleum.

Mr. President, I need not pause here to attempt to describe what would be the condition of our country to-day, what the condition of our finances, had it not been for the large surplus products of the farms which have gone abroad and given us the large balance of trade. We owe it to this trade that we were able in 1879 to resume specie payments and to maintain them to the present time. We owe it to this large exportation of our surplus products that we are able to-day to go on coining silver and maintain it at a parity with gold. If the balance of trade should turn largely against this country, and we should be called upon to pay our foreign exchange in coin, and in gold coin as we certainly should be, how long would it be before we should be compelled either to suspend specie payments or to come entirely to the use of silver as a currency?

I do not care to open up that question, and I shall not discuss it here. I simply refer to it to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of the vast industry of agriculture and to say that in my judgment we can not give it too much attention. We can not give it too much consideration. We can not devote too much time to it, I believe, in the councils of our nation.

Certainly an industry of this kind should have at the head of it in the Government one of our ablest financiers, a man skilled and versed in commerce, a man having a knowledge of the wants of the other nations of the world, and who would be able in his investigations and in his recommendations to Congress to do very much to develop our agriculture, to improve it, and to increase it in value, and thereby add still more to our ability to maintain the balance of trade in our own favor.

How much this has had to do with our ability to pay the great war debt which has been weighing upon the nation for a quarter of a century I need not stop to discuss, but instead of having paid off one-half of that vast debt, if our agricultural industry had not been as prosperous as it has, if instead of the surplus product which has been exported in the past seven years of more than $4,000,000,000 worth, there had been no surplus, does any Senator here believe that we could have met the requirements of the sinking fund, or that we could have gone on and paid off one-half of our debt and have come to the point now when there is little more of our debt left in sight which we can reach even in a reasonable time?

Mr. President, it needs no argument to make that fact patent to every one. Not only have we thus shown our capacity to supply the wants of our own 60,000,000 people and to send this vast surplus abroad, but as yet we have scarcely drawn upon the great agricultural resources of this country.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a single moment to our capacity to increase our agricultural products in this country, and it is upon that fact that I base one of my chief arguments for asking for the passage of this bill and the creation of a new department.

In 1880 our farms contained 837,628 square miles, which was 28 per cent. of our entire territory, not including Alaska. But of this only about one-half was improved at all, or, in other words, there were 444,955 square miles of improved lands in our farms in 1880, which was only 15 per cent. of our total area, not including Alaska. Who shall tell us what might be the production of our country if all the arable land was under improvement, or if we had good farming and good agriculture upon the lands which our farmers now occupy? I will read from an estimate which has been made by Mr. Edward Atkinson, the noted statistician, upon the power of our country to increase its agricultural products and to maintain an increased population:

> The crops of 1879, after feeding our 50,000,000 inhabitants, furnished more than 283,000,000 bushels of grain for export. The corn, wheat, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, and potatoes—that is, the food crops—were that year produced on 105,097,750 acres, or 164,215 square miles. But that is less than one-ninth of the smallest estimate of our arable lands. If, therefore, it were all brought under the plow, it would feed 450,000,000 and afford 2,554,000,000 bushels of grain for export. But this is not all. So excellent an authority as Mr. Edward Atkinson says that where we now support 50,000,000 people, "100,000,000 could be sustained without increasing the area of a single farm, or adding one to their number, by merely bringing our product up to our average standard of reasonably good agriculture; and then there might remain for export twice the quantity we now send abroad to feed the hungry in foreign lands." If this be true (and it will hardly be questioned by any one widely acquainted with our wasteful American farming), 1,500,000 square miles of cultivated land—less than one-half of our entire area this side of Alaska—are capable of feeding a population of 900,000,000 and of producing an excess of 5,100,000,000 bushels of grain for exportation, or, if the crops were all consumed at home, it would feed a population one-eighth larger, namely, 1,012,000,000. This corresponds very nearly with the results obtained by an entirely different process from data afforded by the best scientific authority.

I have read this and referred to it simply for the purpose of emphasizing my statement that we have as yet scarcely begun to develop the great agricultural resources of this country. It is believed that if instead of the weak and feeble efforts our Government has made through a bureau of agriculture and by appropriations to agricultural colleges in various States throughout the Union, it had created a department of agriculture fully equipped in all its branches and had supported it with any sort of liberality, giving to it anything like the proportion which should go to this great interest, the agricultural industries of this country would to-day be from twenty-five to fifty per cent. more valuable than they are.

We do not hesitate to appropriate $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 to maintain a little army even in times of peace. We do not hesitate here in the Senate to appropriate $10,000,000, ay $21,000,000, in a single day to the building of coast defenses and of armored vessels, and we do it without even calling the yeas and nays—we do it by a unanimous vote; but when the agricultural interests of this country come here and ask for appropriations we debate for a day or two over a little appropriation bill which usually has carried from $50,000 to $100,000. In the last few years we have been a little more liberal; we have reached half a million and sometimes $600,000. We have given $40,000, $50,000, or $75,000 for experiments in the matter of producing sugar in our country. The Congress of the United States has treated the agricultural interests of this country as though they were of very little account, or as though they were entirely able to care for themselves.

By this bill it is proposed to create here a department which shall be equal in importance and in power to any of the other great Executive Departments of the Government, and the department which we are now attempting to create is to deal not only with the great interests of which I have spoken and some of the statistics of which I have given, but coupled with it and going with it comes the great question of labor or of production not only upon the farms but in all our workshops and manufactories and in all our transportation lines throughout the length and breadth of the country.

It will be seen by reading the bill that it transfers to this Department the Bureau of Labor, with all of its power for collecting statistics, and that it makes it the duty of the Department to investigate into all the causes of strikes and all the difficulties which are arising between labor and capital in this country. This is a new question. It is a question which the governments of the world have not been able fully to grapple with or to understand or to legislate intelligently about. Nevertheless it is demanding the attention of all legislative bodies throughout the world, and to-day nearly all the States of this Union have departments of labor or labor bureaus and have commissioners whose duties are to investigate into the causes of strikes, into the dullness of the times, and into all the questions which are constantly arising. In many States bills have been passed creating arbitration commissions and thus responding to the demands of the laboring classes themselves. This bill is a movement in that direction.

As I said, the number of people engaged in agriculture, either as owners or as laborers upon the farms, is, in round numbers, 8,000,000. Those engaged in all the other industries, such as manufacturing, mining, transportation, and other services, swell the total number of laborers in this country to something over 17,000,000, which is 50 per cent. of all the people of the country above ten years of age. Certainly it is not too much to ask that the interests of this vast multitude of people shall have an executive department here fully equipped, and with appropriation sufficient to enable it to carry on its investigations in such directions as the interests of our people may seem to demand.

Engaged directly in manufacturing industries there are over three million laborers. They produced, as the record shows us, in 1880 over $5,000,000,000 worth of products, and they received in wages in round numbers $950,000,000. We know that the laboring people in this country are in a far better condition than are those of any other civilized nation, but never in the history of our country has the unrest of our people and the friction between labor and capital been so great as at the present time. Within the past year or two we have seen the industries of large sections of our country entirely paralyzed by great conflicts between labor and capital, and within the past few weeks a strike in the city of New York became at one time of such vast proportions that it threatened entirely to paralyze the commerce of that great metropolis. It is not believed by the committee that this department, if created, could prevent all strikes, or that it could command at all times harmony between labor and capital.

But the question now involved and now confronting the people in regard to this conflict is a new one. It requires careful consideration and study. We must not forget that two centuries have not yet passed in the history of the world since the time when substantially all labor was performed by slaves, and even in our own country twenty-five years have not passed since four million laborers, who were also slaves, have been taken from that position, and put into the position of governing-citizens. To-day the destinies of our country are in the hands of those who earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow. I have repeated, and I repeat again, that laborers of all kinds in this country amount to seventeen million, or 50 per cent. of all our people above ten years of age.

Mr. President, we do not believe it possible that this department should in a day, or in a year, or perhaps in ten years, by its own operations bring about a solution of all these difficulties, for some of them are as old as the human race and will undoubtedly continue with it through all its pilgrimage; but by the wise management of a department here in Washington, which shall bring together all that shall be collected by the different States and which shall present these great questions in all their importance to all of our people, it is believed that with such an authority here very much might be done to bring about a better state of feeling, and very much might be done to prevent the most disastrous wars which are constantly taking place between capital and labor in our own country; and having created a Bureau of Labor, it was thought wise that it should be taken from the Department of the Interior and put into this, which heretofore has been called the Department of Agriculture, and that the two together, combining the great interests of all our people substantially, would create a department which should be second in its importance to none of the Executive Departments of this Government, and which from the beneficial results that we hope will come from it shall be second to none in the Government.

It is not believed that the department of agriculture and labor, so organized, can do everything for the improvement of agriculture. We know that for its great results it must depend upon the individual efforts of our farmers, but they are scattered abroad over the entire surface of our country. As a class they have the least of organization, the least of concerted action of any of our people. The labor organizations are to be found principally in our larger cities and larger towns, and there by their closer contact they are enabled to thoroughly organize and to present to the Legislatures of our various States and to the legislative body here their particular wants and necessities; but the agriculturists of our country, as I have said, are scattered over the entire surface of the country and have little of organization. While they compose so large and important a portion of our people, they have up to the present time asked very little in the way of legislation, and they have up to the present time had very little control in the councils of our States or in the councils of the nation. If you go over the list you will find that of all our people the agriculturists have the fewest number of members in our Legislatures and the fewest representatives in our national councils, and this has been so from the very beginning of the Government. They have been petitioning here year after year for more than twenty-five years for the organization of this great department in order that they might receive, together with all of our citizens, the benefits which follow from this our central Government.

Mr. President, in my judgment no more important measure can come before the present Congress than this, and it is chiefly because of the unrest of which I have spoken, which prevails among the laboring people of this country, not only mechanics and those engaged in manufacturing establishments, but it has extended also to agricultural laborers throughout the length and breadth of our country; one and all they are demanding this measure.

It seems a small measure of relief; it is a small measure of relief. The committee feel that the bill does not contain perhaps all that it should; but at this late day in the session of this Congress it was thought wise not to amend the bill to any greater extent than the committee has done, and to leave to future Congresses, after having once established this executive department, to go on and add to it, taking from the other Departments these various bureaus which should be taken from them, and perhaps adding to this other and newer powers; for, Mr. President, there is no more striking thing in the public life of our people to-day than the fact that the powers and functions of our Government are rapidly increasing.

No matter how much we may fight against it, no matter how much we may oppose a paternal government, no matter how much we may stand upon the theory of State rights, yet it is true that our people are demanding that the Government shall do more and more for the people, that it shall increase its functions, and go into new departments. We may stand in the way of it here for a year, or for ten years, or for a quarter of a century, as the Congress of the United States has stood in the way of a measure of this kind, but the time is rapidly approaching when the governing powers and those who control and make legislative bodies will see to it that if their wishes are not granted men shall take our places who will grant them. I trust that when we come to a measure of this kind we shall pause and not interpose any of the objections which have defeated such a measure during the years which have passed and gone; that we shall be willing to meet the demands of the vast majority of our people, and give to the laboring classes of this country a fair representation in the Executive Departments of the Government.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand there are some amendments to be offered to the bill, and it can hardly be finished to-night. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for a moment. I have a bill which I ask the consent of the Senator from New York to have considered by the Senate. It will require no time beyond simply reading the title.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. CALL. I ask——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I rose to discuss the Agricultural Department bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas will be recognized as entitled to the floor on that bill.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to yield to me for the consideration of Senate bill 3300.

FLORIDA LAND GRANTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks consent to lay aside the pending bill informally and proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3300) to provide for the judicial determination of the rights of the United States in lands granted to the State of Florida for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, under an act of Congress approved May 17, 1856, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I have yielded to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senate to take a recess at 6 o'clock until 7.30 p. m.; that will give us an hour and a quarter for executive session, and then a recess until 7½ o'clock, in order that we may consider important bills this evening.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we have done enough for one day. I only yielded to the Senator from Florida to consider his bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FRYE. Has that bill been considered by a committee?

Mr. CALL. It comes from the Committee on Public Lands. There is no objection to it on the part of anybody.

Mr. FRYE. Unanimously reported?

Mr. CALL. Unanimously reported. Everybody is satisfied.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to say that I see the bill is reported from the Committee on Public Lands, but I think I was engaged before the Commerce Committee on the river and harbor bill and was not present when it was considered.

Mr. MILLER. This bill came up earlier in the day and I objected to it then on the ground that I understood my colleague [Mr. EVARTS] was opposed to it, and was out of the Chamber. The Senator from Florida tells me he has seen my colleague since and he makes no objection to the bill. The objection I made then I withdraw.

Mr. CALL. I submitted the bill to him. He read it carefully, and makes no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3300) to provide for the judicial determination of the rights of the United States in lands granted to the State of Florida for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, under an act of Congress approved May 17, 1856, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for a term of court at Duluth, Minn., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

VIRGINIA FOURTH COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield to the Senator from Virginia and I give notice that I will not yield any further.

Mr. MAHONE. There is a bill before the Senate reported by the Committee on Commerce defining the customs districts of Yorktown and Norfolk. It is very important that it should be passed in order that it may go to the House. It is Order of Business 2267. There is no objection to the bill anywhere, and I should like very much to have it considered. It will only take a moment.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3268) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce, with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 10, after the words "along the" to strike out "coast" and insert "south shore;" and in line 11, after the word "Bay," to strike out the words:

To Back River Light-house; thence to a point south of Old Point Comfort midway in the channel of Hampton Roads; thence in a southwesterly direction to Pig Point Light-house.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

To Fortress Monroe; thence along the east shore of Hampton Roads to Newport News Point; thence directly across James River to the west bank of Nansemond River.

So as to make the section read:

That an act entitled "An act to amend section 2552 of the Revised Statutes, and to change the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia," approved June 15, 1882, be, and the same is hereby, further amended so that it shall read:

"That the district of Newport News shall comprise all the waters and shores from the point forming the south shore of the mouth of the Rappahannock River, along the south shore of the Chesapeake Bay to Fortress Monroe; thence along the east shore of Hampton Roads to Newport News Point; thence directly across James River to the west bank of Nansemond River; thence along the south shore of James River to a point on the peninsula formed by the James and York Rivers opposite Williamsburg, and thence across said peninsula to the south bank of the York River, so as to embrace in said district, in addition to the ports heretofore included, Hampton and Newport News; in which Newport News shall be the port of entry, and Yorktown a port of delivery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "waters," to insert the words "including Hampton Roads;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That section 2 of the said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read:

"The district of Norfolk and Portsmouth, to comprise all the waters, including Hampton Roads, and shores within the State of Virginia southward of the district of Newport News, as above described, and not included in the districts of Petersburg and Richmond; in which Norfolk and Portsmouth shall be the sole port of entry, and Suffolk and Smithfield the ports of delivery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 2:

Provided, That any vessel destined for or departing from any interior customs district of Virginia, or any vessel destined for or departing from Newport News, shall have the right of passage through or anchorage in the waters of Hampton Roads, as though the waters of Hampton Roads were wholly embraced in such customs districts, or of the Yorktown district, as herein defined, and in no respect shall be subject to the customs jurisdiction of the Norfolk district: And provided further, That there shall be stationed at Old Point Comfort a deputy collector of the Norfolk district, with authority to enter and clear all vessels anchoring in Hampton Roads for orders or in distress, and not bound to any Virginia port; and to such deputy collector the master of any vessel so anchoring in the waters of Hampton Roads shall report, as provided in section 2774 of the Revised Statutes, and comply with the requirements thereof, and for any neglect so to report and comply with such requirements of the said section, shall be liable for the penalty prescribed by the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have not seen the bill before, and if there be no objection I should like to have it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. MAHONE. This bill is to define the customs districts of Yorktown and Norfolk. It is agreed to unanimously by the Committee on Commerce, and by all parties interested.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Committee on Commerce may have reported it——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia object to its present consideration?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not like to do that, but I should like to ask my colleague how it suits the people of Norfolk?

Mr. MAHONE. As I stated, it suits all parties in interest, the city of Norfolk and all the commercial interests relating thereto.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Very well, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Pending that motion, I move that the Senate now take a recess until 7 o'clock.

Mr. CAMERON and others. That you can not do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to take a recess has priority.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the motion will be voted down, and that we shall come to a vote on my motion for an executive session.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the motion to adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—21.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Blackburn, | Harrison, | Miller, | Walthall, |
| Bowen, | Hoar, | Platt, | Whitthorne, |
| Brown, | Ingalls, | Ransom, | Williams. |
| Cameron, | Jones of Arkansas, | Riddleberger, | |
| Gibson, | Jones of Nevada, | Sherman, | |
| Hampton, | McMillan, | Teller, | |

NAYS—29.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Allison, | Cullom, | Harris, | Sawyer, |
| Beck, | Dawes, | Kenna, | Spooner, |
| Berry, | Dolph, | McPherson, | Vest, |
| Blair, | Evarts, | Manderson, | Voorhees, |
| Call, | Fair, | Morgan, | Wilson of Md. |
| Chace, | Farwell, | Morrill, | |
| Cheney, | Frye, | Payne, | |
| Cockrell, | Gorman, | Sabin, | |

ABSENT—26.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Eustis, | Maxey, | Sewell, |
| Butler, | George, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Stanford, |
| Camden, | Gray, | Mitchell of Pa., | Vance. |
| Coke, | Hale, | Palmer, | Van Wyck, |
| Colquitt, | Hawley, | Plumb, | Wilson of Iowa. |
| Conger, | Jones of Florida, | Pugh, | |
| Edmunds, | Mahone, | Saulsbury, | |

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to take a recess.

Mr. CULLOM. If that is voted down the motion to go into executive session will be next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will. What hour does the Senator from New Jersey name?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Until 7 o'clock. I am asked by several Senators about me not to press the motion to take a recess to-night, but I give notice now that I shall press it to-morrow evening in order that we may dispose of the business on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I withdraw it.

Mr. CULLOM. Now I ask that my motion be put.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withdraw his motion.

["No, no!"]

Mr. CULLOM. I shall not withdraw any more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 24 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 23, at 12 o'clock m.

Uriel M. Tobey, to be postmaster at Sauk Centre, in the county of Stearns and State of Minnesota.

Edith Love, to be postmaster at Wellington, in the county of Sumner and State of Kansas.

Ella L. Kempe, to be postmaster at Montevideo, in the county of Chippewa and State of Minnesota.

Peter N. Cottrell, to be postmastsr at Fort Howard, in the county of Brown and State of Wisconsin.

William H. Foreman, to be postmaster at Benicia, in the county of Solano and State of California.

Ezra A. Glover, jr., to be postmaster at New Richmond, in the county of Saint Croix and State of Wisconsin.

John S. Preston, to be postmaster at Shelbina, Shelby County, Missouri.

George G. Rodman, to be postmaster at Washington, Washington County, Iowa.

Alexander Charles, to be postmaster at Cedar Rapids, in the county of Linn and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of Alexander Charles to be postmaster at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, vice William M. Smith, suspended, reports:

That an examination of the papers and documents in the case discloses nothing as a cause for the suspension of Mr. Smith that reflects on his personal or official integrity. His suspension seems to have been on account of political reasons.

The proofs in the case show that Mr. Charles is a proper and competent person to discharge the duties of the office, and the committee recommend that his nomination be confirmed.

James N. Davis, to be postmaster at Knoxville, in the county of Marion and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of James N. Davis to be postmaster at Knoxville, Iowa, in the place of William W. Craddick, suspended, have considered the same and report:

That there seem to have been no causes for the suspension of Mr. Craddick other than of a partisan character. He is not charged with anything affecting his integrity as a man or as an officer. Mr. Davis appears to be a person qualified to discharge the duties of the office, and the committee recommend that he be confirmed.

Alice H. Groves, to be postmaster at Afton, in the county of Union and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of Alice H. Groves, to be postmaster at Afton, Iowa, in the place of Charles K. Ingham, suspended, have considered the same, and report:

That there seems to have been no cause for the suspension of Mr. Ingham other than of a partisan character. He is not charged with anything affecting his integrity as a man or as an officer. The nominee appears to be a person qualified to discharge the duties of the office, and the committee recommend that she be confirmed.

William H. Merritt, to be postmaster at Des Moines, in the county of Polk and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to which was referred the nomination of William H. Merritt, to be postmaster at Des Moines, Iowa, vice John Beckwith, suspended, reports:

That on examining the papers in the case as communicated to the committee from the Post-Office Department, it appears that sundry charges had been made against the suspended officer. These were to the effect that he has made, or allowed to be made, political assessments on employés in his office for the benefit of the Republican party; that he had permitted undue influence to be used in the affairs of the office by at least one person not connected with the office. Several other charges of like character and of partisan significance were also found in the papers.

The committee communicated all of the charges to Mr. Beckwith, in order that he might make such response thereto as he might deem proper. The result was a response which was sweeping and complete. There is nothing of substance left of the charges. The entire case sought to be made against the suspended officer appears to have been of a disreputable partisan character. He was a faithful, competent, painstaking officer. His office was one of the best managed during his administration to be found in the State of Iowa, and, indeed, in the entire country. There was no cause for his suspension than a desire to change the office from the possession of a Republican to that of a Democrat. Mr. Beckwith does not object to this, now that the committee has given him the opportunity to show to its satisfaction that there was no other cause for his suspension.

The nominee is a man competent to discharge the duties of the office, and of good character and standing in the community in which the office is located. The committee therefore report a recommendation that the nomination of William H. Merritt be confirmed.

George P. Neal, to be postmaster at Columbus Junction, in the county of Louisa and State of Iowa.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of George P. Neal, to be postmaster at Columbus Junction, Iowa, in the place of Charles M. Fulton, suspended, have considered the same and report:

That there seems to have been no cause for the suspension of Mr. Fulton other than of a partisan character. He is not charged with anything affecting his integrity as a man or as an officer. Mr. Neal appears to be a person qualified to discharge the duties of the office, and the committee recommend that he be confirmed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 22, 1887.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

GROUNDS OF BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in reference to the acquisition of an addition to the grounds occupied by that bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional list of judgments by the Court of Claims against the United States presented for payment since February 1, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ASSAY OF COIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Mint in relation to amendment of laws governing annual assay of coin; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

LOSS OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS AT IQUIQUE, PERU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State in relation to the loss by fire of Government funds at Uquique, Peru, and renewing the recommendation for the relief of the United States consul from liability therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS FOR 1886.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report by the Director of the Mint upon statistics of the production of precious metals for the year 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, NATCHEZ, MISS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to complete the road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF STEPHEN H. MYERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the opinion of that court dismissing the case of Stephen H. Myers, administrator, &c., against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. JULIA DE QUINDRE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre, said bill having been returned from the Senate with a message that the Senate non-concurred in the amendment of the House, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. PALMER.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will insist on its amendment and agree to the conference requested.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. LOVERING, Mr. TAULBEE, and Mr. MORRILL as conferees on the part of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. COOPER, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness in his family.

WILLIAM WATKINS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of William Watkins.

DEATHS OF REPRESENTATIVES ARNOT, BEACH, AND DOWDNEY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair discovers that the House omitted to direct the Clerk to communicate to the Senate the resolutions adopted by the House in relation to the deaths of Messrs. Arnot, Beach, and Dowdney, late members of the House from the State of New York. If there be no objection, an order will be made directing the Clerk to notify the Senate of the action of the House. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

JOHN W. FARRIS.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6136) granting an increase of pension to John W. Farris, with the veto message of the President. Having been sick and absent from the House I have not been able to call it up at an earlier period. I think it will take but a few minutes to dispose of it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John W. Farris, late first lieutenant and adjutant of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, for disease of eyes, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for the reading of the report.

The veto message of the President was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval a bill originating in the House of Representatives, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Farris," which bill is numbered 6136.

The claimant mentioned in this bill enlisted in the month of October, 1861, and was mustered out of the service in August, 1865.

In 1881, sixteen years after his discharge, he filed an application for a pension, alleging that he was afflicted with chronic diarrhea, contracted in the army, and in 1885 his claim was allowed, and he was granted a pension for that cause.

In September of the same year, and after this pension was granted, he filed an application for an increase of his rate, alleging that in 1884 his eyes became affected in consequence of his previous ailments and the debility consequent thereupon.

The ingenuity developed in the constant and persistent attacks upon the public Treasury by those claiming pensions and the increase of those already granted, is exhibited in bold relief by this attempt to include sore eyes among the results of diarrhea.

I am entirely satisfied with the opinion of the medical referee, who, after examining this case in October, 1885, reported that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted to be a result of chronic diarrhea."

On all grounds it seems to me that this claimant should be contented with the pension which had been already allowed him.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 21, 1886.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

Claimant enlisted in Company K, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, being at the time only fifteen years of age. September 8, 1864, he was promoted to be second lieutenant of his company, and was afterwards promoted to be first lieutenant and adjutant of his regiment, and was mustered out August 16, 1865. On September 9, 1881, he made application for a pension, alleging chronic diarrhea and general debility. January 16, 1885, this application was approved, and pension allowed for "chronic diarrhea and resulting general debility." It is shown in the evidence that he contracted measles in the service, from which he had not fully recovered when he engaged in the battle of Shiloh, where he received a gunshot wound in his head, but did not leave the field; that from the effects of the measles and the exposure at said battle he contracted chronic diarrhea, from which he has suffered ever since, and for which he is now receiving a pension.

September 4, 1885, claimant filed an application for increase of pension, alleging "that since the granting of said certificate, affiant's general condition has grown worse; that in July, 1884, he was taken with sore eyes, and that said sore eyes resulted from the long and aggravated general debility contracted in the army." February 16, 1886, the application for increase was rejected, on the ground that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted as the result of chronic diarrhea."

It will be noticed that in his application for increase he alleges that the disease of his eyes was the result of the general debility contracted in the army; the medical examiner, if your committee understand his language, denies that the disease of the eyes can be the result of chronic diarrhea. The following evidence was submitted in support of his claim:

Dr. James McComb, a reputable physician of twenty years, testifies under date of January 27, 1886:

"I have frequently treated him for chronic diarrhea, and have known for many years that he was a sufferer from that disease; that in 1884, when he was first attacked with conjunctivitis, I, in connection with my partner, Dr. Billings, treated the claimant until he went to the city of Saint Louis for treatment by Dr. Michel, professor of ophthalmology in Missouri Medical College. That in my opinion his impaired vision and protracted eye disease is the result of a chronic constitutional disability."

Dr. James M. Billings, of Lebanon, Mo., testifies January 27, 1886:

"I have often treated claimant for chronic diarrahea, with which he was afflicted; that in 1884, when claimant was attacked with sore eyes, Dr. McComb and myself treated him until he went to Saint Louis for treatment by an oculist; that at the time I first treated the claimant for sore eyes, I attributed said disease to constitutional causes, and I am now, and ever have been from that time, of the opinion that his impaired vision and protracted eye disease is the result of a vitiated constitution."

Dr. Charles E. Michel, oculist, of Missouri Medical College, certifies "that he has been treating Senator J. W. Farris for chronic conjuctivitis with granulation since January, 1885, and that I am satisfied that a vitiated constitutional condition is to blame for his impaired vision and prolonged eye affection."

The examining board of surgeons at Lebanon, Mo., report October 21, 1885:

"We find the conjunctiva of both eyelids thickened, and in a state of chronic inflammation. There is an opacity of the cornea of both eyes, resulting from ulceration, which is of the nebulous variety. The vessels of the conjunctiva of the cornea are very much enlarged. The opacity of the left cornea extends over the pupil, and almost completely obstructs the vision. That of the right eye is less extensive, about two-thirds. He can not distinguish the largest test type with the left eye, but with the right eye can distinguish it at a distance of 17 inches. He is totally incapacitated for manual labor. He is, in our opinion, entitled to a second-grade rating for the disability caused by chronic diarrhea and resulting general debility and sore eyes."

This evidence was carefully discussed and weighed when the case was considered by the committee.

Upon the committee are two able physicians of long and extensive practice. The evidence was submitted to them and they were requested to decide upon the merits of the question as to whether disease of the eyes would be a natural result of long-continued chronic diarrhea and general debility. They decided, after a careful consideration of the matter, that it would be, and recommended a favorable report in the case.

Dr. JOHN SWINBURNE, a member of this House, one of the most noted physicians of this country, a gentleman who for forty years has had a large and varied practice; who was himself a distinguished army surgeon during the late war, and afterwards at the siege of Paris, expresses himself as follows:

"My experience is, that where any inflammation occurs while one is suffering from any exhausting disease, such as chronic diarrhea of years' standing, and especially those involving the eyes (conjunctivitis), the disease becomes chronic, and does not yield so long as the diarrhea continues; also that persons suffering from chronic diarrhea or other exhaustive ailments are more liable to contract low forms of inflammation, and particularly the eyes (conjunctivitis)."

Your committee, in considering this case, had before them the evidence of five physicians, men known to be skilled in the practice of their profession—one of them a distinguished oculist, and a professor of a well known medical college—who, after a personal examination of claimant and months of acquaintance with him, declared that they were satisfied that his disease of the eyes was the result of his "vitiated constitutional condition." Three other able physicians who had examined the evidence declared that the conclusions reached by those who had examined the claimant were logical and reasonable.

On the other hand was the statement of the medical examiner that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted as the result of chronic diarrhea," and this was formally approved by the medical referee. Neither of them had ever seen the man, nor can your committee discover that they had any evidence before them except the affidavits of the five physicians which are set forth in this report. It was simply a question whether the opinions of two men who had never seen a patient should weigh more than those of five just as able and as skilled who had personally examined him, with the judgment of three more added who had given the case just as careful thought and attention as the two had.

But there are other matters which enter into a full and fair consideration of this case. Your committee in considering the bills that have been referred to them have labored under the impression that they were not wholly restricted to the consideration of cases that could properly be allowed in the Pension Office, nor were they confined to the rules and regulations of that Bureau, but they have assumed that they had an enlarged jurisdiction, and that upon them devolved the delicate duty of meting out justice and equity in cases where adequate relief could not be afforded under existing laws. They do not, therefore, deem it absolutely essential that it should be proven with mathematical certainty that this claimant's loss of sight was entirely the result of his military service. It is probably beyond the power of human skill to trace unerringly the connection between his present disability and the days and months lengthened into years that he passed in camp and on the march or the terrible ordeals of the battlefields and the hospitals.

It is shown that this man enlisted early in the war, when a mere lad; that he served nearly four years, though much of the time a constant sufferer from the terrible disease which has clung to him ever since; that he was a brave and gallant soldier, and so distinguished himself by his fidelity and bravery that he won two commissions before he was twenty years of age; that he came out of the service diseased and broken down, justly entitled to a pension which he proudly refused to accept until worn and weakened by his disability incurred in the service; that for sixteen years he cheerfully surrendered to the Government that pension to which he was justly entitled; that he has now entirely lost the sight of one eye, and that of the other is very seriously impaired. In a few more months he will probably be forever shut out from the light of the sun, and for him during the remainder of his years on earth there will only be one endless night. If this brave boy had not enlisted in the military service of the United States he would have been now at the age of forty years in the prime of manhood, instead of being an almost helpless wreck. That Congress has the power to grant the relief asked for no one questions. That it is its duty your committee, without a dissenting voice, believe. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. Would it be in order to raise the question of consideration?

The SPEAKER. It would not, the House having entered upon the consideration of the bill and debate having been had upon it. The report was read in the time of the gentleman from Missouri who now has the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. Is a postponement in order?

Mr. BLAND. It will take but a short time to dispose of the bill.

This is a case, Mr. Speaker, arising under a difference of opinion among medical gentlemen—a difference of opinion that I shall not undertake to discuss further than to state the mere facts, and also that I am well acquainted with the three medical gentlemen whose certificates are appended to the report, and who testify as to the result of chronic diarrhea and its probable effects under certain conditions upon the eyes. Dr. McComb is a physician who resides in the town in which I live, and I have known him for twenty years, and I know him to be a gentlemen of high character and eminent in his profession.

Dr. Billings, who also certifies, is a gentleman that I have known for many years as one eminent in his profession. Dr. Michel, of Saint Louis, who is a specialist in his profession, is the professor of the Medical College of Missouri, of national reputation in his profession, and a man of high character. These are the only medical gentlemen who testify in this case, except the examining board at Lebanon, Mo., and they give as their opinion, from a personal examination and treatment of the claimant, that the eyesight has been affected as a sequence to an impaired constitution resulting from chronic diarrhea contracted while in the service. These constitute the only medical testimony in the whole case.

The medical examiner of the Pension Department takes a different view, not founded upon the testimony in the case, but upon his own theory as to the effects of the disease, and upon his opinion and idea this veto is based. Now, sir, if this House is to be guided by the weight and the preponderance of testimony, then there are but three medical gentlemen testifying in the case who have ever seen the claimant, and each and every one of them gives it as his opinion that the disease of the eyes was the result of this diarrhea contracted in the service.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States in his veto message makes some reference to the opinion that this would be an attempt on the part of claimants to place themselves upon the pension-roll in a manner characterized by the President as a raid upon the public treasury. In regard to this claimant I may say, sir, that his attorney sent the papers to me after the claim had been rejected in the Department, and I introduced a bill which went to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and was reported back favorably and passed the House without a dissenting voice, and also in the Senate, and the claimant did not know his bill was pending in the House until it had been introduced by myself.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the proceeding was not a motion on the part of the claimant himself to get a pension, but by an attorney?

Mr. BLAND. Only as his attorney was representing him.

Now I have known the claimant for the past twenty years. He has served as circuit and county clerk in the county in which I reside. He has also served as State senator in the State of Missouri. He came home from the army and located in the county in which I reside today, bringing with him none of that vindictive spirit which has animated others, but, on the contrary, he showed that disposition and liberality in his intercourse with those against whom he had been engaged, that he was by their suffrages elected to the positions he occupied in the county and in the councils of the State. I know him to be a gentleman of high character and that he would not impose himself upon the Government unless he felt in his own conscience that he had a just claim. He is now drawing a pension at the rate of about $12 a month. This bill simply proposes that the Secretary of the Interior shall place him upon the pension-roll under the provisions of existing law, thereby giving the benefit of that increase arising from impaired eyesight; and I state of my own personal knowledge that he is blind to-day in one eye and the other one is nearly so. He is incapacitated from attending to any manual labor or even to his own correspondence, but requires the aid of an amanuensis in all his business, and his physician states that the result of this disease no doubt will finally culminate in total blindness.

In view of these facts, Mr. Speaker, I do claim that if there is any bill pending in this House or which has been pending that deserves the consideration of members of this body, it is the bill now before us, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

My attention has been called to the fact that some members of this House desire to ascertain whether this bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. There is a unanimous report in favor of its passage over the veto of the President, which report has just been read in the hearing of the House.

I now yield what time he desires to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] who made the report.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no desire to go into any extended discussion on the merits of this case. It was very fully and carefully examined by the Committee on Invalid Pensions when the bill was first referred. There were some points of striking merit in the case.

This soldier enlisted in the army for the defense of his country at the early age of fifteen. He served gallantly for nearly four years, being only nineteen years of age when discharged. During that time, by his courage, his bravery, his fidelity, he won two promotions, and was discharged when nineteen years of age as first lieutenant and adjutant.

He abstained from applying for a pension as long as he could obtain a subsistence for himself, and not until 1881 did he make an application for a pension, although the proof is strong, absolute, and convincing that he incurred the disability in the service, and suffered during all those years with that disability up to 1881.

The pension was granted in the Pension Office for chronic diarrhea and resulting disability. The evidence is strong that during all those years he had suffered from that disease and the resulting consequences. The application for an increase was refused on the ground that the disease of the eyes could not be admitted to be a result—not that it could not be a result, but that it was not a natural sequel to the disease of chronic diarrhea. Five physicians have testified that it often follows as a result from chronic diarrhea. Two physicians of eminence and skill are members of that committee and have both decided that it might naturally follow as a result of the disease contracted in the service.

Your committee, after the fullest investigation, recommended the passage of the bill. Again, when the bill was returned to them with the message of the President, they carefully examined all the papers in the case, and, without a dissenting voice, after full investigation, recommended that the bill be passed, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

This seems to me one of those cases where simple justice to this brave young fellow who enlisted when he was a mere lad, who fought gallantly for four years, who contracted in the service a disease which ruined all his prospects of life, and made him an invalid ever since—it seems to me that simple justice requires that this pension should be granted, and that a generous Government can afford to do that justice to this soldier.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] if this is not the first case he has seen which has such merit that it should be passed over the President's veto?

Mr. BLAND. I expect every gentleman to vote according to the dictates of his own conscience. This is the first case of the kind which is within my own personal knowledge, where I have personal knowledge of the facts and of the claimant, and where the evidence was known to me personally, and where I, on my own individual responsibility, could say in my own conscience I believed the soldier deserved what was claimed for him.

Mr. STEELE. Then you expect every member to vote on what you say?

Mr. BLAND. I do not expect to trade votes with any gentleman. I expect every one to vote according to the dictates of his own conscience. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill? The Constitution requires that on this question there shall be a vote by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 94, not voting 93; as follows:

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I was temporarily absent from the Hall when the roll was called; if present, I would have voted "ay."

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. O'FERRALL, is detained at home by sickness.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. COOPER, is absent on account of sickness in his family; if present, he would vote "ay."

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. BOUTELLE with Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL.

Mr. WELLBORN with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. SADLER with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, and Mr. GROSVENOR were announced as paired until Tuesday next.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. PERRY with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. CROXTON with Mr. REED.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. PETTIBONE.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. STEPHENSON.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. WALLACE with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. WINANS with Mr. ELY.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. FUNSTON.

The SPEAKER. Upon this vote the yeas are 132 and the nays 93. Two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the House, upon reconsideration, refuses to pass the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that somewhat late on yesterday afternoon an order was made by unanimous consent permitting gentlemen having bills or resolutions to present for reference, to hand them to the Clerk. As some gentlemen may not have been present at the hour when the order was made, if there be no objection, they will be allowed to file their bills this morning.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Under the foregoing order bills were introduced as follows:

STERLING H. TUCKER AND OTHERS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 11223) for the relief of Sterling H. Tucker and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

J. J. EVANS, A. G. WILSON, AND OTHERS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. 11224) for the relief of J. J. Evans, A. G. Wilson, and James Boyd, trustees; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEASING INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (H. R. 11225) to authorize the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations of Indians, respectively, to lease lands within their respective boundaries for mining purposes, and to validate leases heretofore made for said purposes by the proper authorities of any of said nations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS OF BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (H. R. 11226) granting relief to employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ABINGDON, VA.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 2539, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same.

That the House agree to the Senate amendment numbered 1 with the following amendment: at the end of said amendment No. 1, add the following: "but nothing in this act shall be construed to require an exchange of site;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

C. P. SNYDER,
BERIAH WILKINS,
W. W. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM MAHONE,
JOHN C. SPOONER,

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House in the conference upon the disagreeing votes of the Senate and House of Representatives upon H. R. 2539 authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property, present the following statement to accompany said conference report in explanation thereof:

The bill as passed by the House authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the property purchased by the Government as a site for a public building at Abingdon, Va., for more suitable property at no additional expense. The Senate passed the bill with amendments providing that the new site should not be located east of that now owned by the Government, and also making an additional appropriation of $25,000 for the erection of a suitable building on said site.

The Senate amended the title of the bill to conform to the text thereof as amended.

The effect of the action of the conference committee is to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building aforesaid $25,000, and to leave the change of site discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury.

C. P. SNYDER.
BERIAH WILKINS.
W. W. BROWN.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman to yield for one minute.

Mr. RANDALL. For a statement?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire whatever to interfere with or obstruct public business. I ask that to-morrow night be set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Labor. I will state on behalf of the committee that we do not desire at this stage of the session to take up the time of the House in discussion; and if we cannot order the previous question on any bill we will abandon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that a recess be taken to-morrow at 5 o'clock p. m. until half past 7 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Labor. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. That does not include the educational bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. HATCH. Will that include what is known as the "Blair educational bill?"

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It will not.

Mr. RANDALL. If there is to be discussion on this proposition, I do not want to lose time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. DUNN objected. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes. The pending question is on amendment numbered 245, in which the Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK] moved to concur. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2565 insert the words "the court is open for business or;" so as to read: Nor shall any part of any money appropriated be used in payment of a per diem compensation to any attorney, clerk, or marshal for attendance in court except for days when the court is open for business or business is actually transacted in court, and when they attend under sections 583, 584, 671, 672, and 2013 of the Revised Statutes, which fact shall be certified in the approval of their accounts.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN said: In the opinion of the Chair the motion to concur is not agreed to.

Mr. BUCK. I call for a division.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire the Committee of the Whole to understand that this question is on the motion to concur, and the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. BUCK. The House ought to know that this is an amendment which affects the fees and per diem of marshals and district attorneys.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 28, noes 93.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment 246:

After the words "for fees of United States commissioners and justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, $50,000," strike out the following: No part of this appropriation shall be expended in the payment of more than $800 per annum to any commissioner for services in the examination of criminal charges, or at that rate for any time less than a year and more than one month. But this provision shall not apply to commissioners in cities of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants. No part of any money hereby appropriated shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made, or other fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless the prosecution has been approved by the attorney of the United States and of the collector of the internal revenue in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, or that the prosecution is by indictment.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am exceedingly weak to-day, hardly able to stand up; and I trust I may have the attention of the Committee of the Whole, and more particularly that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] who has charge of this bill.

I have direct information in regard to what will be the operation of the provisions of this paragraph; and this information, I think, ought to be imparted to the committee, a portion of whose members will have charge of this bill in the conference. There are already seventy commissioners who earn $800 a year each, making $56,000, being $6,000 in excess of the amount here proposed to be appropriated. This does not embrace a considerable number of commissioners who earn less than $800; I do not know the exact number. There are also justices of the peace who act as commissioners.

Now, I invite attention to another matter. I believe that the first two clauses of the provision, as now framed, will operate very harshly and unjustly upon many commissioners. You will recollect, Mr. Chairman (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), that we had this matter under consideration in the Judiciary Committee, and after full discussion were unable in the time we could allot to it to agree to any plan which would be satisfactory to all parts of the country.

I now come to another matter which I regard as of far greater importance, and I invite attention to the third clause of the amendment. I recollect distinctly when this provision was offered as an amendment by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who sits behind me. It was hastily gotten up and put through; and I then made no objection to it because the principle involved in it met to a large degree my approbation. I did not at that moment realize the objection which I now desire to present.

It will be recollected that in the Indian country there are in operation two classes of revenue laws. The first class, called the intercourse laws, prohibits absolutely the introduction of liquor of any kind in the Indian Territory; and the duty of the light horse in the Indian country is to destroy liquor wherever found—to knock the heads out of the barrels, &c. When the United States marshal finds liquor being sold by any person in that country he is required to seize the liquor, take it to a Federal court and sell it, the proceeds being paid into the Treasury of the United States. The liquor is absolutely contraband in the Indian country; yet any one found selling liquor without a license may be indicted and punished for the offense under the general revenue laws just as a person offending in the same way in a State would be. Now, observe how the last clause of this paragraph will operate. A United States marshal comes upon a party in the very act of selling liquor without authority, or a party who has in his possession liquor in violation of law—in violation of both the intercourse law and the internal-revenue law. In such case the marshal, under this provision, will lose every cent of fees for the arrest, unless before making it an affidavit is filed, to be approved by the collector of internal revenue and the district attorney, and a warrant issued upon such affidavit.

These men dealing in liquor in the Indian country are parties having no local habitation. They are fugitives from justice. They are the worst outlaws which can be found anywhere in this country. The marshal is called upon to arrest these men wherever he finds them—to seize them upon the spot, and take them at once to court. Now, if you take away these fees from the marshals for the arrest of persons thus engaged in this illicit traffic of liquor in the Indian country the consequence naturally will be they will not make these arrests. Two mornings ago I read in the paper from my own town that a marshal going through the Indian Territory, having already a prisoner in custody, found a man with jugs of liquor strapped upon his horse in the Territory, doubtless for sale to the Indians, and he called upon him to halt, which was answered by a shot from his revolver, and the marshal replied by drawing his six-shooter, and they fought it out there upon the highway, the marshal seeking to make the arrest under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope I will not be cut off right here, but will be permitted to explain this matter so the gentleman from Pennsylvania may understand just exactly what it is we desire to have done in order that the administration of justice may be promoted rather than obstructed in the Indian country.

Mr. REAGAN. I will take the floor, and yield my time to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. I thank my friend from Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have already said repeatedly, the Indian country is the city of refuge for the worst criminals from every State in this Union, and unless we can exercise the full vigor of the law in dealing with these parties we cannot do it successfully at all. Therefore I say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that this last provision of this paragraph, which requires every marshal when they come upon a party who is violating the law in selling liquor in the Indian country without license, as is done every day in the year in all parts of the Indian country, by which he is compelled to go back to Fort Smith and there obtain the approval of the district attorney and then return to arrest the party, will result in preventing the arrest of any one of these traffickers in liquor. And it would be just as impossible for the marshal after he had obtained the approval of the district attorney and returned to the Indian country to find the party and arrest him as it would be to catch a jay-bird in the prairies of Illinois. I want my friend from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to understand it thoroughly, so that when he goes into the committee of conference he may so arrange this matter as to secure the efficient administration of the law in the Indian Territory.

Mr. RANDALL. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I have interlined in my copy of the bill, to come in after the word "used," in line 2581, the words "except in the Indian Territory;" so it will read:

That no part of any money hereby appropriated shall be used, except in the Indian Territory, to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made, &c.

And I want to say further to the gentleman from Arkansas that this amendment did not come from the Committee on Appropriations, but was inserted in the House on the motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I know that. And I wish to state one other fact, and that is as to the last part, where it is provided "that no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks, &c., unless the prosecution has been approved by the attorney of the United States and by the collector of internal revenue in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, or that the prosecution is by indictment."

I say, Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as an indictment before a commissioner, and that part of the provision ought to be stricken out.

Mr. RANDALL. It was drawn by a very eminent lawyer.

Mr. ROGERS. Of course, I know that; but the insertion of these words is an inadvertence, and they out to be stricken out.

Mr. CABELL. Prosecution relates to an indictment found in a court, and a commissioner is merely an inquiring officer.

Mr. ROGERS. If my friend from Virginia will examine he will find this paragraph provides:

That no part of any money hereby appropriated shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks unless a prosecution has been approved by the attorney of the United States and of the collector of the internal revenue.

Of course it is not intended that where indictment is found by a grand jury and the accused are apprehended and tried, that the marshals, clerks, and attorneys shall be deprived of fees. But that is what this provision does, for there can be no indictment without a grand jury, and they are not prosecuted before commissioners.

I submit the last part of this section was inserted inadvertently.

But again, the fees ought to go to the officers where they arrest these parties found in the Indian Territory engaged in the illicit traffic in liquor, for there liquor is absolutely contraband.

But I wish to call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania to another matter, and to ask to it his careful consideration. In reference to the technical violations of the internal-revenue law I think it unwise, if my friend will give me his entire attention, to place the prosecution of those who violate that law in charge of anybody else than the judiciary and its officers. I think a lawyer or judge should consider these matters, and they should not be placed in the sole charge of an internal-revenue collector, who has not, perhaps, ever read a page of law in his life.

Mr. RANDALL. But he may be a man of good sense and business capacity.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, this internal-revenue collector in Arkansas is a man of high character and good business capacity. But he is not a lawyer, and I think it unwise to put him over the judge and district attorney. It discredits the courts. It tends to shake the confidence of the people in the courts, and it will be a sad day when we lose confidence in the judiciary.

Again, suppose there is a conflict between the district attorney and the collector of the internal revenue, the one a lawyer and the other not a lawyer, then the prosecution is at an end, and the whole proceeding is at once stopped. In that way if this language be retained in the section the administration of justice would be very seriously hampered. I can not think such a course wise, or consistent with legislation affecting the courts.

Mr. CABELL. That does not prevent the district attorney from acting, because application may be made to the collector of the district, and that is done for the convenience of the occasion. The collector, it is presumed, understands the law under which he is acting; and it requires no further knowledge of the law than that necessary for the execution of the duties committed to his charge.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agreed to the resolution of the House providing for the printing of 15,000 additional copies of the report on commerce by William F. Switzler, of the Bureau of Statistics.

Also, that the Senate insisted upon its amendments on the bill (H. R. 10399) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, and agreed to the further conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. GORMAN as managers on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 2636) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ROGERS. If I have any time left I yield to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to occupy a moment of time to say that I do not believe the law has ever been strict enough for the issuance of warrants for the prosecution of men charged with the violation of the internal-revenue laws. I believe no warrant should be allowed to issue unless the collector or deputy collector of the district in which the offense is committed indorses the prosecution, and this should be done before the issuance of the warrant.

I find this state of affairs in my own neighborhood: The Commissioners of the United States court issue warrants against parties who have complied with the law in the matter of distilling apple brandy or whisky, or in the sale of either; and the deputy collectors have made known to these commissioners the facts that the charge is without foundation, and have exhibited to them the records showing that these parties had paid the taxes due to the Government and were not violating the law.

Notwithstanding that assurance the commissioners have forwarded the affidavits to the district attorney, and on representations made to him by letters from the commissioners the suits were made up, warrants were issued, prosecutions had, and the fees made; and under the prosecutions these parties have been subjected to great annoyance and expense by such suits; and not only that, but the Treasury itself has been largely depleted thereby. Now, we find deputy collectors are not interested in these prosecutions in that no fees accrue to them by reason of such prosecutions, but with the special bailiffs and deputy marshals and the United States commissioners, it is a matter of business with them; and where the collector through abundance of caution, for he is doubtless himself presumed to know the facts and circumstances better than the commissioners or deputy marshals, whenever he withholds his indorsement from the prosecution, they still go on and prosecute; and hence by such means hundreds of innocent people are dragged from home and forced to go 300 miles to the Federal courts, and there, at great expense to themselves and to the Government, are kept until the questions are settled of technical infractions of the internal-revenue laws.

These matters have been called to my attention, and I have called the attention of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to them, as well as the Attorney-General in cases where frauds have been perpetrated upon the Treasury to the amount of thousands of dollars, when the commissioners themselves declared openly they could not believe the parties had violated the law. Yet they based their action upon ex parte affidavits, evading the main question that the taxes had been paid, and not setting forth the fact whether or not the parties had complied with the law in the matter of the payment of taxes.

The proper thing to do, Mr. Chairman, for the correction of such abuses would be for Congress to investigate them carefully where the Department declines to do it through their revenue agents; and I am satisfied that in my district enough facts could be proved by one month's investigation through an intelligent agent of the Internal Revenue Department to send fifteen or twenty of these men to the penitentiary—men who are now holding Government positions. I regret to have to say this. I regret that such a state of affairs exists in my country, tending as it does to slander the reputation of these people, who are frequently alluded to as "moonshiners" and violators of the internal-revenue law. But I saw after my return to my home last summer, and before getting back to this House again, much which has induced me to form the opinion I have expressed upon this question, and I have learned from deputy collectors in the country some things that would surprise the members on the floor of this House. I am in hopes that the committees of the House and the House itself will insist upon throwing around such prosecutions every possible safeguard, especially that will prevent these deputy marshals and special bailiffs, many of whom are men of bad character, many of them men charged with murder, and perhaps many of them guilty, from going on and in the manner I have stated to make fees by a pretended execution of the law, making out their claims against the Treasury, summoning crowds of witnesses, and I regret to say that in many cases tacit agreements are had between the prisoners, the crowds of witnesses, and the officials that there shall be a fair "divide" of the proceeds of the trial.

In one case, in a county adjoining my district, in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. MCCREARY], a suit was instituted before a justice of the peace by the prisoner for his part of the proceeds of the guard and witness fees under a contract that he claimed had existed before the institution of the prosecution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Senate amendment 247, in which the committee recommended non-concurrence, was read, as follows:

In line 2594, after the word "aid," insert "and transportation to place of conviction;" so that it will read:

"For support of United States prisoners, including necessary clothing and medical aid and transportation to place of conviction," &c.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to invite the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to this provision which I think ought to be concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL. Perhaps it will be in conference. We desire to know more about it.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to call attention to the effect of this provision. For a series of years all the convicts from my own court have been sent to Detroit, Mich., hundreds of miles away. They are now being sent to some place in Illinois, also several hundreds of miles from home; many of them are being sent for misdemeanors, many of them for felonies. I think it very wrong to have these men turned loose when their sentences have expired, on a town in Illinois without a penny. The Government having sent them there to a reformatory institution should provide for returning them to their homes. I think, therefore, the Senate amendment is a very proper one. Even to those who have been confined in State penitentiaries there is given a sufficient amount of money to enable them to reach their homes. That is a proper and humane thing to do in view of the fact that the penitentiary itself is a reformatory institution, intended to reform the morals of these people and teach them what is right. I hope that amendment will be concurred in by the conference committee.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Senate amendment 248 was non-concurred in, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Senate amendment 249 was read, as follows:

In line 2597 strike out "$50,000" and insert "$60,000;" so that it would read: "For rent of United States court-rooms, $60,000."

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give me his attention I wish to explain another matter. For rent of United States court-rooms, $50,000 was the sum the House granted. The Senate have inserted $60,000.

My attention was called, at the Department of Justice, to the exact condition of things with reference to the rent of United States court rooms. The actual leases already executed and now in operation foot up $62,716. Since that time the Congress of the United States has created the southern district of California, and the marshal of that district is authorized to rent buildings which incurs a necessary expense of about $3,000 additional, and makes a total of $65,716. If the House adheres or the Senate concurs in the House view of the situation there will be a deficit of $15,716 upon leases actually made.

But since this bill passed the House and came from the Senate the Congress has already created two additional courts, one in the eastern district of Michigan and the other in the southern district of Mississippi, at Vicksburg; and before Congress adjourns the probability is we will still have other courts being established; so that the Department of Justice will be unable to comply with the law, and a deficit of from $15,000 to $18,000 will ensue.

Now, I can not see for my life why it is when we come to make these appropriations—why we can not go and get the leases and ascertain precisely the amount the Government will be due at the end of the fiscal year, or why we should undertake to cut the amount down below the actual amount of the leases entered into by the Government.

Mr. LONG. I suggest to the gentleman that by non-concurrence we will have an opportunity of raising the amount even higher than that of the Senate amendment, if that should be found necessary.

Mr. ROGERS. I am not asking the committee to concur. I am merely giving the history of this matter, which shows the wisdom of what I am about to suggest. I hold in my hand a document from the Treasury which shows the deficits of 1887, 1886, and 1885, amounting to over $20,000 on these items. What is the necessity for making these appropriations below the contracts already made and then six months hence come in with a deficit and take up the time of Congress and of committees with doing what should have been done when the bill was before the House. I hope when this matter is in conference the committee in charge of this bill will take the practical view and give the Department of Justice the amount necessary to enable it to discharge its duty under the law.

Mr. RANDALL. The information which came to the Committee on Appropriations, and which was considered in connection with the deficiency bill of the current year, made the exhibit that $62,716 was the amount of leases of United States courts. If that be true, disconnected from any other matter, then the sum fixed by the Senate in this amendment is not sufficient and it should go into conference. But there is still another matter to be considered in this connection. That is, that quite a number of courts sitting at the places mentioned in that schedule in connection with the deficiency have or will have public buildings provided for, so that in those cases there will not be a necessity for a further appropriation of money to comply with the terms of the leases. The gentleman from Arkansas, I presume, understands what I mean.

Mr. ROGERS. I catch the idea.

Mr. RANDALL. I instance Council Bluffs, Iowa; Oxford, Miss.; Aberdeen, Miss.; Greensborough, N. C.; Leavenworth, Kans.; Jackson, Tenn.; Dallas, Tex., and Waco, Tex. There are ten or twelve perhaps more of these points where the courts are held and where we are renting buildings but where we will have very soon public buildings belonging to the Government. That consideration of course must play some part in connection with this matter and necessitate a further investigation. The Committee of the Whole will see even after what the gentleman from Arkansas himself has stated that a non-concurrence is the advisable course, because it may be necessary on a fair consideration of the subject to give even more than the Senate suggests.

Mr. ROGERS. There is another suggestion that I desired to make, which I was about to overlook. I was about to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] if he has specific information as to whether any one of those public buildings will be completed within the next fiscal year? I know that at Jackson, Miss., the Government officers have been occupying the public building, and I do not think they have been renting at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. No.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the same is true of Richmond.

Mr. RANDALL. The fact that the places I have designated have asked for appropriations for the completion of the approaches to their public buildings would indicate that those buildings will soon be available for use.

Mr. ROGERS. It may be that the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. RANDALL. That is my judgment, but I do not undertake to say that I am certain about the matter.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not question the fact. I am not informed about it. There is one other suggestion that I was about to omit. On page 101 of the bill the House struck out the appropriation for rent for the marshal's office in Alaska upon the supposition, as I understand, that there was a public building there. That is a mistake. There was some misapprehension on the part of the committee about the item; they understood that one of the department clerks had indicated that the Department desired the item struck out. That is true; but while the Department wished it struck out of that section, they desired to have it incorporated in the general appropriation providing for the rent of buildings throughout the country. The committee struck out from one place without inserting it in the other; so that now if we decline to make the appropriation provided on page 101, then $500 more should be added to the general appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. There was no real reason why Alaska should have been provided for separately. It should have been included in the general provision.

Mr. ROGERS. I agree with the gentleman.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 251 was read, as follows:

(251) Botanic Garden: For constructing storehouse for plants and for steam-heating for same, repairing greenhouses, for extending concrete walks, and for general repairs to conservatory and propagating-houses, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $5,700.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee recommend non-concurrence in that because it is provided for in the legislative bill.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 252 and 253 were non-concurred in.

The amendment numbered 254, in which the committee recommended non-concurrence, was read, adding $27,000 to the appropriation for public printing, binding, &c., making the total appropriation $2,027,000.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to concur in that amendment, and I make that motion in order to obtain some information from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In a communication from the Public Printer, under date December 4, 1886, he claimed that the current general expenses of the office would amount to two millions per annum, and in that same communication he calls attention to the fact that that is sufficient, provided that there are to be no "extraordinary" expenditures; although at the same time there are, according to his own recommendation, "extraordinary" expenditures considered. He gives a tabulated statement of those "extraordinary" expenses, which amount to $159,000. He claims that expenses proper of the office are to be two millions, but that, to enable him to make other expenditures and repairs which he says are to be "undertaken in the direct interest of safety and economy," he needs $159,000 more.

The general average expenditure of that office is about two millions and a quarter a year, and it has been customary, as far as I know, to come into this House with deficiency bills to meet the expenditures. Now the question I desire to put to the chairman of the committee, is this: How far does this item of two millions and twenty-seven thousand dollars provide for the ordinary expenses of the office, and the "extraordinary" expenses as asked for by the Public Printer? Because I think it is proper that the House should be informed of that now, instead of being called upon later for deficiencies.

Mr. RANDALL. This item covers the aggregate amount required. The next paragraph provides for the distribution of that amount; and, if the gentleman will examine the Senate amendment in the distribution paragraph, he will find that they have increased the amount of expenditure $37,000 instead of $27,000. So that if the Senate amendments in the distribution paragraph are to prevail, then this item must be $37,000 instead of $27,000. That is why the committee have recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then, having got that explanation, I wish to ask another question. Preceding this amendment the paragraph reads "for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work," and then comes the amount, two million and twenty-seven thousand. Does that appropriate sufficient money to cover both the ordinary and the "extraordinary" expenditures asked for by the Public Printer in his letter of December 4?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to enter into a discussion of the past management of the printing office——

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do not ask the gentleman to discuss it; I only put the question in order to get the information for the benefit of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANDALL. As I have said, I do not mean to enter upon a discussion of the past management of the Government Printing Office; but in making these recommendations as to amounts, the committee feel that there can be a very large saving in that office.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, no motion is submitted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Amendments numbered 255 to 257 (in which the Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence) and amendments numbered 258 to 262 (in which the committee recommended non-concurrence) were read, and no separate vote being demanded, the recommendations of the committee were agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent to go back and insert an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the matter proposed to be inserted as a substitute for Senate amendment 55, the following:
"Public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.: For completion of the building, $32,148."

Mr. RANDALL. This I offer on my own motion, because, since the adoption of the amendment to which this is a further amendment, it has come to my knowledge that the bill in relation to the public building at Santa Fé has been signed by the President and has become a law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back to consider this amendment?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not object; but I desire to stay back long enough to have adopted another amendment of similar character to which I wish to call my honorable friend's attention.

Mr. RANDALL. Let this amendment be voted on first.

There being no objection, the amendment of Mr. RANDALL was considered and adopted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I now ask consent to insert in the bill, after the amendment just adopted, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office and custom-house at Portsmouth, Ohio: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $12,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the bill for the erection of that building become a law?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is in precisely the same position as a number of other bills, having passed both Houses and being in the hands of the President. There is very little doubt about its becoming a law.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order on this proposition. It seems to me that under the circumstances stated it would be improper now to make the appropriation.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the bill should be signed, as I think it will be, this provision ought to be made. If the bill be vetoed, the provision I now propose can do no earthly harm. My amendment merely provides for a contingency which is likely to arise—the signing of the bill. Does the gentleman from Tennessee insist on his point of order?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not think it would be well to make an appropriation under the circumstances, in anticipation of a bill becoming a law. The gentleman had better wait until the bill becomes a law and then the provision can be inserted in the Senate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the bill should not become a law, this provision can be struck out, and no harm will be done.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it can be inserted, if the bill should become a law.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there not an apparent absurdity in providing an appropriation for a building, the construction of which has not yet been authorized by law?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That "absurdity," if it exists, obtains in regard to a number of other items in the bill; and why should we make "fish of one and flesh of another?"

Mr. RANDALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I think he is mistaken as to there being in the bill other items liable to the same objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. Within a few moments past I have realized, as I did not before, the situation of this bill: that these amendments will go into conference and the bill will not be again considered in the Senate. Hence I see that the remedy which I suggested to the gentleman from Ohio can not be applied. I do not wish to stand in the way of the gentleman's proposition; and upon the understanding that, if the bill referred to should not become a law, the gentleman will be vigilant in seeing that this appropriation goes out, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. RANDALL. If there are in the bill any items in the same situation as this, it ought to be known. I am not aware of any. But I am perfectly willing that this amendment should be adopted, leaving to the conferees the option of striking it out if the bill should not be approved.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then, objection to my proposition is withdrawn, as I understand.

There being no objection, the amendment of Mr. BUTTERWORTH was considered and adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with sundry recommendations.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote be demanded upon some of the recommendations of the Committee of the Whole, the vote will be taken in gross.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand a separate vote on the amendment making an appropriation for education in Alaska. Upon the other propositions the question can be taken in gross upon agreeing to the recommendations of the Committee of the Whole for concurrence, non-concurrence, or concurrence with an amendment, as the case may be.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will will report the amendment on which a separate vote is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Education in Alaska:
For the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska without reference to race, $25,000.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union recommend concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 83.

Mr. SPRINGER demanded tellers.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 143, nays 104, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—143.

So the Senate amendment was concurred in.

During the roll-call, the following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. BUCHANAN, for the rest of the day.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. MORRILL, for the rest of the day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon agreeing to the remainder of the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union upon the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to make a privileged motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is; but the gentleman from Georgia rises, as the Chair understands, to make a privileged report.

Mr. HERBERT. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HERBERT. Is it competent to raise the question of consideration in favor of the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Or in favor of the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia rises, he says, to make a privileged report. He has made no motion and has not yet submitted any report.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to take up the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill, and the House will proceed regularly with the business before it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to know whether it is necessary before going into committee on the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill to reserve all points of order, or whether the point of order may be raised on an amendment as it is reached in committee?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question for an occupant of the chair in the House, but is as one always presented to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The present occupant of the chair, however, has expressed the opinion frequently it is not necessary.

Mr. BURROWS. If necessary, I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. No motion has yet been made about considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to reserve all points of order. And I make the further point that these amendments of the Senate must have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can not the question of consideration be raised at this time?

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendments go to the Committee of the Whole House upon the state of the Union, provided the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan is well taken. The Chair has not yet looked at the amendments, but will now examine the bill. [After a pause]. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. My motion is to go into Committee of the Whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can put but one motion at a time, but will state that it makes no difference which motion prevails, as the committee after it is formed can determine what bill it will consider.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to inquire of my friend from Georgia whether the amendments to this Post-Office bill have been printed?

Mr. BLOUNT. They have been in print for several days.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. To consider the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills, which is the only motion allowed under the rules of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We go into Committee of the Whole without reference to any particular bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee was formed on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, and the Senate amendments to an appropriation bill would naturally have preference.

The CHAIRMAN. The House went into Committee of the Whole to consider appropriation bills generally; and it is for the committee to determine when each bill is reached in its turn whether it will consider that bill or not.

The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a suggestion in the nature of a point of order, so that it may be determined whether the Committee of the Whole House will give preference on going into committee to those appropriation bills which have passed both Houses and which are now pending before the committee on Senate amendments in preference to bills not considered by either House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to be heard for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. We ought to have a ruling on that point.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think so, too; and it does seem to me that it is clear from the language of the rule itself, and from the debate upon it, that the change of the rules did not require amendments of the Senate, which were subject to the point of order, to go to the Committee of the Whole just as an original appropriation bill goes; and hence these amendments stand as privileged before the committee for consideration.

It never was the intention of the rule to put the amendments of the Senate in the exact condition of general appropriation bills. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] early in the session reported to the House and had passed the sundry civil bill, which came back here with the Senate amendments, and was taken up as a privileged matter.

Mr. HERBERT. I submit this question is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. This is on a question of order, and debate upon it is in the discretion of the Chair. The Chair will indulge gentlemen briefly upon the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But no point of order is made.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order for the purpose of getting a ruling upon this subject, that the Senate amendments to appropriation bills shall have preference over bills that have not passed either House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that the bill first standing upon the Calendar belonging to the class of general appropriation bills should be first reported, and then the point of order made whether it is entitled to priority. I ask, therefore, that the first bill be reported. I submit, sir, that the naval appropriation bill and the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government stand first on the Calendar. They stand on the Calendar in advance of the report now made by the gentleman from Georgia, and I think these bills in their order are entitled to priority.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I was about saying when I was taken off the floor by other persons, at the beginning of this session reported the sundry civil appropriation bill which passed through the House, was passed by the Senate, and came back with certain amendments, and was a privileged matter. My friend from Indiana claims that under the rule requiring an amendment of the Senate to go to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of consideration, that it thereby loses its privileged character, and it comes in as a general appropriation bill to be considered in its order on the Calendar. In other words, the sundry civil bill, according to the doctrine of my friend from Indiana, when reported to the House with Senate amendments, comes and takes its place at the bottom of the Calendar, at the foot of every other appropriation bill preceding it, and must there remain until they are first disposed of except by unanimous consent. You can not reach it for consideration; you can not get it back to the Senate; it must be postponed and go over, giving way to everything else before it on the Calendar. Now, sir, I can not believe this was ever the purpose of changing the rules. When the Senate amendments came back to the sundry civil bill, these amendments became a privileged matter, and the gentleman had the right to ask the consideration of the House.

That bill had priority over other business, and the simple change of the rule requiring the amendments to go to the Committee of the Whole was not designed to take away and destroy their privileged character. It was simply to give to those amendments free debate and nothing more.

I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania has seen fit to raise this question. It has never been here before, and I trust the Chair will give such construction to this rule as will not destroy the privileged character of this bill and postpone the consideration of the Senate amendments to this bill until every other appropriation bill on the Calendar has been considered.

One word more. I regret that the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Alabama have seen fit to make this struggle. When the rules were changed it was predicted that these very struggles would occur. There was but one escape from it, and that was to conform to former precedents. The gentleman from Indiana has seen fit now to raise that struggle. I trust that harmony will be created here by the establishment of the precedent that the bills will be taken up in their order as they are reached on the Calendar, and if one of them should be returned to this House with a Senate amendment, or amendments, a privileged bill, it shall not be robbed of that privilege by reason of the House letting it go to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of free debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit there is but one rule of the House bearing on this subject.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What rule is that?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not cite it by its number; but it is the rule that requires that appropriation bills shall be considered in their order as they stand upon the Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman from Indiana mean to say that that provision had in contemplation a Senate amendment to an appropriation bill, when he well knows that before the rule requiring a Senate amendment to go to a Committee of the Whole was adopted the rule he invokes now was in full operation, and it never was understood to be the intention of the House to change its practice as to Senate amendments to appropriation bills?

Mr. HOLMAN. So far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned there is no difference between an appropriation bill—all of which is to be considered—and Senate amendments which are to be considered. They stand, it seems to me, upon exactly the same footing. They stand in their order upon the Calendar. A bill is reported on the 3d of February, and goes to the Calendar; another is reported on the preceding first day of the same month; another to-day. They stand in their respective order on the Calendar in Committee of the Whole for consideration as to the matters referred to the Committee of the Whole.

In the past two instances the whole bills go to the Committee of the Whole; in the latter only certain amendments made by the Senate. But for the purposes of the Committee of the Whole they stand upon exactly the same footing, the matter to be considered in the one as well as the matter to be considered in the other.

I therefore submit, these bills are to be taken up in their order. If the gentleman from Georgia appeals to the argument of necessity I submit to the Chair that it is manifestly ordinarily much more important that a general appropriation bill which has never been considered at all should be first considered rather than one that has already been considered in both Houses and is in a state of great preparedness and forwardness for final passage. On that point the argument is certainly against my friend; while the argument based on the rules as to Committee of the Whole is certainly in favor of the general proposition that the bills must be taken up in their order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, the assertion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that this rule was not designed to have the effect which it does have is entirely gratuitous and unsupported by any fact whatever. The true rule is that all laws—and rules are nothing else but laws of action for this body—all rules are intended to effect what they do effect whenever the result follows plainly. Now the rule puts these bills upon the Calendar and we take them up one after another in their order. It is a simple question whether or not this Committee of the Whole will pass by the naval appropriation bill and then pass by the other appropriation bill below it and come to and take up first in order this Post-Office appropriation bill. That Post-Office bill has been through the House; it has been through the Senate; it is nearly completed. There is nothing to do but to agree or disagree to the conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is not a conference report. If it was it would stand on a different footing.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, it is on the road to the question of agreeing or disagreeing to these Senate amendments. My assertion is that this bill is nearly completed. Now, if the House is to do what will contribute to the completion of its business within the few days left to us, what is it best for us to do? Ought we not to take up and finish here first these bills that have never been passed upon either by the House or by the Senate? Is it not fortunate that this committee has the opportunity to do just what the rules say it shall do, take up and consider these matters in their order, unless for some good reason apparent to the committee (which has not yet been shown here) precedence ought to be given to this Post-Office appropriation bill. The reasons, it seems to me, are all in favor of taking up these new bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, when I was on the floor before I had not at hand Rule XX, to which gentlemen have been appealing in this discussion. I have it now, and I will read it, premising, however, that prior to the adoption of Rule XX, whenever the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills it was the rule and practice of the committee to take up the bills in their order. But that is not the case at this time, for we are now operating under Rule XX, which I will read:

> Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

I arose with a report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of a bill known as the Post-Office appropriation bill, with four amendments made to it by the Senate. I was recognized for that purpose. The first amendment did not involve any charge at all upon the Treasury. I had the right to have that amendment considered without going into Committee of the Whole. That was no time to make the point of order, and if I had had a hundred amendments on that bill which were not subject to the point of order under the rule I could have gone on with their consideration, and these gentlemen could have had no hearing at all. But when I reached an amendment that was subject to the point of order, then any gentleman had the right to raise the point and require the consideration of that matter in Committee of the Whole, and I should have been compelled to proceed in that way. That was the object of the rule, Mr. Chairman, nothing more; and we are now in Committee of the Whole not considering general appropriation bills in the sense in which the rule contemplates, but we have gone into Committee of the Whole to consider two or three amendments to this bill that were subject to the point of order. That is all.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does not the whole bill have to be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BLOUNT. The whole bill has been considered and agreed to, except four amendments, and you can not touch the bill except those amendments.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. You can touch all the amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. You can not, because they are not all subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] suggest to the Chair a rule or a ruling under which the Chair would be justified in recognizing a bill coming back from the Senate with amendments before a bill which stands ahead of it on the Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will answer the Chair as best I can. I will say, in the first place, that there is no rule in reference to Senate amendments, no rule that involves the point of order, except Rule XXI. It stood isolated and alone. It was simply a declaration on the part of the House to this effect: Whenever there is proposed by a Senate amendment upon an appropriation bill legislation which we do not allow on such a bill when it originates in the House, then any gentleman can secure free and full debate on that amendment, and on no other, by raising the point of order. But the whole bill does not go to the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. When a bill comes back from the Senate, under what rule does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] hold that it stands prior to an appropriation bill reported on a day prior to that on which the bill with the amendments was referred to the Committee of the Whole and took its place on the Calendar?

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not here admitting the terms used by the Chair, nor admitting the terms used by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], nor admitting the terms used by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], that the bill has its place on the Calendar. It has not gone to the Committee of the Whole except on a point of order on a single amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not the other bills go there in the same way?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; they went there under the rule of the House which requires that general appropriation bills shall have their first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does the gentleman contend that if the House had entered upon the consideration of the Senate amendments, and had considered those which he says are not subject to the point of order, we could then have raised a point of order on those which had not been considered?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Would not the objection have been made at once that the point came too late? And now does the gentleman claim that we must go back into the House without entering upon the consideration of amendments not subject to the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will answer the gentleman by reading from the rules a statement of what it is that takes an amendment of the Senate to the Committee of the Whole:

Any amendment of the Senate—

Not all amendments, but—

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Does the gentleman understand that these terms mean something? Did not the House understand itself when it declared in this rule that a Senate amendment to a bill should go to the Committee of the Whole only when liable to the point of order, and not otherwise?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I do not believe any interpretation of the rule is correct which requires the House to consider a part of the amendments and the Committee of the Whole to consider the remainder.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman may believe that or not. This is a question of construction; and I read plain, clear, simple language declaring in effect that when in considering Senate amendments to a House bill we reach one which if it had originated in the House would be subject to a point of order, that amendment shall be considered in Committee of the Whole. I do not assume anything beyond what this language warrants. The purpose of the House in adopting this rule was simply to allow free debate in Committee of the Whole on an amendment of that character—nothing else.

The difficulty about this question, Mr. Chairman, lies in our habits and in the fact that we are disposed to apply to an amendment which stands in its own distinct class, a ruling in reference to general appropriation bills which was never designed to reach it. As has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], a former Speaker of this House, and a learned parliamentarian, this is a new question. I do not believe it proper that where Semate amendments have come to us in connection with appropriation bills a point of order should take them to the foot of the Calendar, so that they must be postponed until every laggard bill in the House, no matter how long delayed, shall have been considered and disposed of.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That could not happen, because this is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the committee, which can pass by one bill after another in order to reach a particular bill which it desires to consider.

Mr. BLOUNT. That may be very true; but we are considering the reasonableness of the rule. A combination of three or four committees with reference to three or four bills might bring about, under the construction contended for, a very undesirable result, and one which could never have been intended.

Mr. SPRINGER. The question of order here presented is, it seems to me, a very simple one. How did we get into Committee of the Whole? The Speaker entertained a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. He refused to entertain any other motion than that. Being now in Committee of the Whole, clause 4 of Rule XXIII applies:

In committees of the Whole House business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence.

The rule further provides:

When objection is made to passing over any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, &c.

We are now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under a motion to consider general appropriation bills. Those bills must be considered as we find them on the Calendar. What does the Calendar show? If you take it up, you will find that it reports the title and number of the bill, but gives no indication of the contents of the bill, no indication how far the House has proceeded in considering it. The idea of separating a pending amendment from the bill to which it relates is absolutely preposterous. The amendments and the bill are inseparably connected. No amendment has a status in this House except as it stands with the bill to which it is an amendment. It runs with the bill; it walks with the bill; it lies down with the bill. [Laughter.] We are here to consider general appropriation bills; and the rule requires that the first bill of this character on the Calendar shall be first considered, unless the House shall lay that bill aside and take up the next bill. Gentlemen will remember when, at the last session, the oleomargarine bill came back from the Senate with amendments, a point of order was made, just as it has been here, that those amendments must first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Upon that point the bill and amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider revenue bills. On going into Committee of the Whole, one bill after another was laid aside in order to reach the oleomargarine bill. It appeared for a time that we should never be able to lay aside all the bills which stood in the way of the one which the Committee of the Whole desired to reach. The enemies of that bill were of opinion that they had it completely blocked. But by persistence it was finally reached and disposed of. That is just the situation in which we are here now.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the views of the gentleman from Georgia are correct, the bill to which the gentleman from Illinois has just referred was first on the Calendar, with the exception of the revenue bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SPRINGER. When we go into Committee of the Whole to consider these bills we proceed according to the Calendar. When the Clerk announces the bills on the Calendar he reads, first, the title, not of the bill last referred, but of that which was first referred. It seems to me this is a very plain case, not calling for any excitement, but demanding simply deliberation on the part of the committee and dispassionate judgment on the part of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the question here presented is whether a motion can be made to go into Committee of the Whole to consider an appropriation bill with Senate amendments; and, if not, whether the remedy is then lodged in a choice between consideration of such matters in the House and their consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Post-Office appropriation bill having been returned from the Senate with amendments, the point of order was made under Rule XX (which the Chair will have read) that it must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order was made and sustained, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole, and took its place upon the Calendar in the order in which it went to that committee. Under Rule XXIII, clause 4, which the Clerk will report, the order in which this bill shall be considered is laid down.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be observed this clause prescribes the order in which the bills shall be considered, but excepts from that order bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors. They are excepted from the other class of bills; but the Chair does not think the exception is broad enough to justify him in changing the relation which these bills bear to each other on the Calendar.

The Chair knows as a fact, it is customary or frequently done, whether customary or not, to consider amendments adopted by the Senate on motion in committee where objection is not made. But here the point of order is made that these bills on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union must be considered intheir order.

The Chair, while sympathizing with the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and feeling there may be justness in a rule which would prescribe this bill, having been considered in committee and then in the House, gone to the Senate and returned to the House, should have precedence, but he knows of no rule which would justify him in giving these Senate amendments consideration before bills on the Calendar which precede them.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will suspend for one moment. Under the clause which has been just read it will be observed the remedy against the order therein prescribed is retained in the hands of the committee, and if the committee does not wish to consider the bills in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar, any member by objecting to the consideration of any bill as it is reached can have that question submitted to the action of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand, then, that the way to proceed to the consideration of the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill is to object to the legislative appropriation bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled these bills must be considered, under the rule which has been read, in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar, and in order to prevent the operation of that rule it is necessary to object to the consideration of a bill when it is reached, when the committee will have to rise and report the objection to the House.

The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask to have that bill laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; I object to its being laid aside.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that bill will be laid aside, so that we may proceed to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having under consideration appropriation bills, and having reached a bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, objection was made to passing it over, and under the rule the committee rose and reported that fact to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the Committee to pass the bill over?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 28.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not desire to take up the time of the House, and will not call a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to, and the committee was directed to pass the bill over.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that that bill be passed over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will not be done. I object to passing it over.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration appropriation bills, and having reached on the Calendar a bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, the motion was made that it be passed over, which was objected to, and, under the rule, the committee rose and reported that fact to the House.

The SPEAKER. Will the House direct the committee to pass the bill over?

Mr. HOLMAN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 24.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum, but I will not consume the time of the House in making that point.

The SPEAKER. The committee is directed to pass the bill over.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the Senate has adopted four amendments to this bill; the first relates to what is known as the rent for a suitable building for station C, in this city. Perhaps I had better explain, as I proceed, these amendments. It is well known in the bill proper there are appropriations for the rent of buildings, and also that the Department may lease a certain class of buildings for post-offices, but in the city of Washington it so happens that a general statute was passed in the deficiency appropriation bill prohibiting it, and hence it is necessary to insert this provision. The second amendment is in reference to the rent of a building for the Washington city post-office.

There was no provision of law for the rent of such a building, and it being necessary in this way by reason of this same statute to provide specially for the Washington city post-office, the sum of $5,000 was put into the bill by way of an amendment in the Senate.

Again, as to the third amendment, a provision is inserted, as follows:

That no boxes for the collection of mail matter by carriers shall be placed inside of any building except a public building—

That is the law now—

or a building which is freely open to the public during business hours—

That is an addition to the present provision—or a railroad station.

While the terms of this section seem to be restraining in their nature, it is but an addition to the present law of this language:

Or a building which is freely open to the public during business hours.

It so happens that there are many enormous buildings in which several thousand persons are engaged during certain hours of the day, and it was thought advisable to have legislation by which a box could be put in a suitable place in such building so as to permit parties who occupy the building to deposit mail matter in it, as well as to allow it to be utilized by the public, who would have free access to the box. In all these the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have recommended concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Amendment number 4 relates to what I may say, without desiring to be discourteous, is the substitute feature in reference to the foreign mail service.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is all that need to be said in general debate at this time, and I move therefore that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting general debate on the bill unless I may have consent to fix two hours.

Mr. BURROWS. My friend means, I suppose, that this time shall be equally divided.

Mr. BLOUNT. Of course I mean an equal division of the time.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to test the sense of the House upon that, and shall object.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HAMMOND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills, and pending that, that all general debate on the bill and amendments be limited to two hours.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Georgia by striking out "two" and inserting "three." I did think of asking the House to grant four hours for debate, but I will say three hours, one and a half on each side; and upon that I wish to be heard briefly, for the purpose of informing the House of the importance of this amendment.

As stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the only amendment of the Senate about which there will be any serious controversy is the one which provides for the extension of our mail service with the South American republics and the Empire of Brazil. This amendment is of vast concern to all the people of this country, and it is of such transcendent importance that it challenges and ought to challenge the serious consideration of every member of this House. And let me say to the House that the amendment proposed by the Senate is entirely different from the one proposed by that body at the last session of this Congress. The amendment then proposed to appropriate $800,000——

Mr. REAGAN. I feel compelled to make the point of order at this stage of the session, that the gentleman can not discuss the merits of the proposition on the pending motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has not been demanded or ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I supposed I had the right to state the merits of the proposition to that extent.

Mr. REAGAN. That belongs to general debate, and not to the question now presented.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This enables us to determine how much time we want.

Mr. BURROWS. I was alluding to the importance of this question and stated that at the last session of Congress the Senate appropriated $800,000 for our whole foreign service, permitting the Postmaster-General to contract for the Pacific mail, the trans-Atlantic, and the trans-Pacific service. The amendment now proposed by the Senate eliminates the Pacific mail, eliminates our trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific service and simply appropriates——

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. I can not yield to my friend now.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to say to him, with the utmost frankness, that if he proposes to take his hour now I will move to limit general debate to ten minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. That will be an entirely proper motion for my friend to make when he desires to do so; but I think I do not transgress any rule of the House when I refer to the importance of this proposition. I do not intend to discuss its merits at all at this time.

This amendment of the Senate restricts the appropriation to mail communication with the Empire of Brazil, the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay, and other Central and South American countries.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to the question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand that a motion to limit debate on a bill in Committee of the Whole is a debatable motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows of no rule that limits debate on any question unless the previous question is ordered by the House.

Mr. BURROWS. I am proceeding in good faith to bring before the House the importance of this question without seeking now to discuss its merits. The chairman of the Post-Office Committee took occasion to say that this matter was discussed in the first session of this Congress, and I desire to answer that it has not been discussed at all. It is a new proposition. It provides that these steamers shall run from New York city, and also one mail line shall be established from New Orleans or some port in the Gulf of Mexico to the republics of South America, and appropriates the sum of $500;000, to be used in the discretion of the Postmaster-General for this purpose, so that the House will readily understand the question is entirely different from the one presented in the former session of this Congress.

It is not my purpose to discuss the merits of the proposition, but simply to direct the attention of the House to its importance.

To show that the matter has attracted national attention I refer to a communication which I hold in my hand, one of a series of petitions presented by citizens of the country from different localities directed to the Postmaster-General calling his attention to the importance of opening mail communication between the ports of our Atlantic seaboard, the States of the Gulf, and the Mississippi River and the Central and South American countries. This petition is signed by gentlemen from New York, from Minnesota, from Maryland, and from Louisiana. I will not stop to read the petition at this time. Upon reflection, possibly I will, as it is very brief.

To Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS, Postmaster-General of the United States:

We, the undersigned merchants and manufacturers, having an interest in the trade with South America, desire to call the attention of the Postmaster-General to the great importance of regular direct mail communication between this country and the Argentine Republic and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay. With neither of these countries lying south of the equator, and having a soil and climate almost unequaled, have we direct mail communication. Our mails and a large percentage of our exports to those countries go via Europe except that portion which goes by the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company once a month, via a Brazilian port and reshipped from Rio Janeiro.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it competent for the gentleman from Michigan to discuss the merits of a bill which is in Committee of the Whole and not before the House at all when there is simply a motion made in the House to limit the time for debate on the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan to say he would not discuss the merits of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I said so. If the Chair thinks I have been transgressing proper limits, I will desist.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have understood that this motion has been uniformly held to be non-debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to hear the rule under which it would be so held.

Mr. BURROWS. I was reading a letter addressed to the Postmaster-General bearing on the importance of this subject. But if the Chair thinks I am trespassing upon any rule of the House, I have no desire to do so. I will omit part of the petition and come to another portion of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the Chair ruled on my point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has requested the gentleman from Georgia to point out the rule under which he raises the question of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Clause 6 of Rule XXIII provides, as follows:

The House may by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate).

Mr. BURROWS. That is the rule when we are considering a bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. So I understand. But the principle laid down here is in accordance with the practice of the House and the uniform ruling. Otherwise there would be the abuse of a gentleman discussing the merits of a proposition on a motion to limit debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The difficulty with the Chair is that this bill is not being considered by sections under the five-minute rule; but the proposition before the House is to limit general debate to two hours. To that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] proposes an amendment striking out "two," and inserting "three," and no motion for the previous question has been made on the motion to limit the debate to two hours.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if the Chair holds that under that motion, the previous question not having been ordered, it is competent for a gentleman to take the floor and argue upon the merits of this bill for one hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already stated to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that the Chair did not think it was competent for the gentleman to argue the merits of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. And the gentleman from Michigan is proceeding to do that, and the Chair must take cognizance of the fact.

Mr. BURROWS. I beg my friend's pardon, I am not discussing the merits. I called the attention of the Chair to the fact that petitions signed by a large number of people in different portions of this country had been sent to the Postmaster-General directing his attention to the importance of this question, and I would have been through long before this if my friend had not interrupted me. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, I want to know whether he is proceeding by consent of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state again that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] can not proceed upon the merits of the bill by consent of the Chair.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I shall be obliged if, the moment I transgress the rule in the opinion of the Chair, the Chair will call me to order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the Chair will comply with the gentleman's request.

Mr. BURROWS. I certainly hope so. Now, Mr. Speaker, to resume and to show the House the importance of this subject, upon the receipt of these numerous petitions, directed to the Postmaster-General, he called the attention of this House and of Congress to the importance of this subject, in his annual report at the opening of this session in December last, and in that report he used the following language——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, at the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], calls him to order. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Chair hold that I can not call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Postmaster-General has recommended this legislation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds.

Mr. BURROWS. Then, Mr. Speaker, in further argument upon the point of the importance of this question, I desire to say that the President of the United States, Mr. Cleveland, in his annual message sent to Congress at the beginning of the present session, called attention to the importance of the question upon which I now desire some little time for debate. The President in his message used this language——

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the Chair will kindly comply with the request of the gentleman from Michigan, and call him to order. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the request of the gentleman from Michigan, the Chair again calls him to order.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Chair hold that the language of the President of the United States in his message to Congress, calling attention to the importance of this subject, may not be read in an argument to show the importance of the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Speaker, have I the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to ask—for I do not wish to trespass upon the ruling of the Chair—will it be in order, upon the point which I wish to impress upon the House, namely, the importance of this question, to state that the President of the United States has called the attention of Congress to this subject? I desire to know just what the ruling of the Chair is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair means to say that as the Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] he is arguing the merits of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I am not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair misunderstands the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. I am not arguing the merits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the Chair you are.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I ask that the Chair have stricken out what the President says, if it is not in order. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is out of order.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me state to the Chair that the President does not argue the merits of the proposition, but refers to the fact of petitions being presented in relation to this subject, and suggests that Congress take it into consideration, and I will ask the Chair——

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman go on violating the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know. The Chair has stated three times that the Chair regarded the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] as out of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not hear clearly what it is that the Chair does not know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled three times already that the gentleman from Michigan was out of order.

Mr. BURROWS. Very well, I bow, of course, to the decision of the Chair, but I really thought that in presenting the question of the importance of this matter I had the right to proceed as I have proceeded. I sincerely supposed I had the right to state that the chief executive officer of this country had called the attention of the American Congress to the importance of this question, and I supposed that if I established that fact, and also the fact that the Postmaster-General in his annual report had asked the attention of Congress to the subject, those facts would commend the subject to the attention of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion (for I do not wish to trespass upon the attention of the House) permit me to say that the time proposed by the gentleman from Georgia—one hour on each side—for the discussion of a proposition like this, involving, as it does, the whole question of our commercial intercourse with the South American countries, seems to me much too limited; and I submit that the time I have asked—an hour and a half on each side—is not extravagant. I shall therefore insist on my amendment to strike out "two hours" and insert "three hours."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, to-morrow is set apart for the consideration of the fisheries question; the next day the veto of the general pension bill will come up. We are now getting quite close to the end of the session. Gentlemen about me urge that one hour is ample for the present discussion. This bill is not one of detail. The last House voted upon the question whether or not it would sudsidize steamships; and that is the only essential question presented here. The House voted more than two to one against the proposition. The mind of the House is, in my judgment, made up at this moment. My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] need not warn the House of the magnitude of the question; for it is a subject on which members generally are not less informed than himself. I wish to allow reasonable time for debate; but I believe the judgment of the House will justify me in asking that the discussion on a question which has been already so fully debated be concluded in two hours. I ask the previous question on my motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, and pending that motion he has moved that all general debate on the bill in Committee of the Whole be limited to two hours; which motion the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] moves to amend by striking out "two" and inserting "three." The first question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 75.

Mr. BURROWS. I dislike to retard the progress of business; but this is so important a question that I think we should have a fuller expression of the wish of the House upon it. I therefore make the point that no quorum has voted, and demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BURROWS and BLOUNT were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 89.

So the amendment of Mr. BURROWS was rejected.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. BLOUNT to limit general debate to two hours, it was agreed to.

The question then recurring on the motion of Mr. BLOUNT that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. BLOUNT. In view of the fact that the fourth amendment of the Senate is really the only point of disagreement, I ask unanimous consent that we act first on the three preceding amendments, after which the general debate shall begin upon the fourth amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I trust the suggestion of my friend from Georgia will be acceded to. Three o'clock to-day has been set apart as the hour for eulogies on the late Senator Pike; and as there is very little time to devote to this question to-day, I would like very much if, after considering the first three amendments, we should not take up the other question until we can proceed with it without interruption.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not like to go further than I have stated. The indication of the wish of the committee has been in favor of going on with the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not make objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia that general debate shall not begin until the first three amendments have been disposed of? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, after line 16, insert:

"And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building for use of the branch of the Washington city post-office known as Station C, at a rate not exceeding $1,000 per annum, until further action of Congress."

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee recommend concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, after the last amendment, insert the following:

"To pay rent of building for use of the Washington city post-office, at a rate not exceeding $5,000 per annum, $5,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee recommend that this amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "for free-delivery service, $5,522,500," insert:

"Provided, That no boxes for the collection of mail-matter by carriers shall be placed inside of any building except a public building, or a building which is freely open to the public during business hours, or a railroad station."

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

The fourth and last amendment was read, as follows:

After line 22, on page 3, insert the following:

"For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American republics, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress. One of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River."

The CHAIRMAN. The committee recommend that this amendment be non-concurred in. The question is on agreeing to that recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BURROWS. I move the committee concur in this amendment. Mr. Chairman, is 3 o'clock fixed for eulogies to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the order of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, there have been repeated efforts in recent years to improve our foreign mail service and provide for the carriage of American mails in American bottoms. The Forty-eighth Congress appropriated $400,000 for this purpose. The Postmaster-General, however, declined to make use of this appropriation. In the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress the Senate appropriated $800,000 for our whole foreign mail service. The House refused to concur in that appropriation. At this session this bill comes back to us from the Senate with an amendment providing $500,000 for the carriage of our mails to the Empire of Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the other countries on the Plate, as well as all the republics of Central and South America.

It will be observed that this provision eliminates the Pacific Mail and all other trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific American lines, and restricts the service to the countries of Central and South America, one line of which at least shall enter and depart from some port in the Gulf of Mexico or from the Mississippi River. To a thorough understanding of the necessity and purpose of this amendment it will be necessary to review the law restricting the Postmaster-General in his contracts for carrying the mail, both foreign and domestic. By the first article of the Federal Constitution, section 8, Congress is empowered "to establish post-offices and post-roads." In the execution of this power Congress has declared what shall be "post-roads." In the further exercise of this power the Postmaster-General is clothed with authority "to establish post-offices at all such places on established post-roads as he may deem expedient."

After the establishment of post-roads and the post-offices thereon, it is made the duty of the Postmaster-General to provide for the carriage of the domestic mails "on all post-roads as often as he may think proper."

It is again provided that all contracts for carrying the domestic mails must be made by the Postmaster-General. Section 3941 declares:

Before making any contract for carrying the mail, the Postmaster-General shall give public notice by advertising once a week for six weeks in one or more newspapers, not exceeding five, describing the route, the frequency of carriage, &c.

Touching the railroad service, the Postmaster-General may contract with railroads for carrying the mails without advertising for bids. For the steamboat service on our coast and inland waters, the Postmaster-General may contract without advertising for proposals. The star-route service is let under general law by advertisement. These are the general provisions relating to the manner in which contracts for carrying our domestic mails may be entered into.

Touching the matter of compensation, the price for carrying the mails on railways is regulated by weight and distance; on steamboats, both the coastwise and inland service, the price is determined either by competition or the Postmaster-General is at liberty to contract without advertising for this service, limited only in price to that paid for the same service the preceding year. On the star-route service the compensation is regulated by the lowest amount offered by a responsible bidder. This statement is sufficient to show how our domestic service is contracted for and the limitation upon the compensation to be allowed.

Touching our foreign mail service a different rule prevails, and the Postmaster-General is governed entirely by sections 4007 and 4008 of the Revised Statutes, which are as follows:

SEC. 4007. The Postmaster-General may, after advertising for proposals, enter into contract for the transportation of the mail between the United States and any foreign country whenever the public interest shall thereby be promoted.

SEC. 4008. The mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, shall be transported in steamships, but the Postmaster-General may have such transportation performed by sailing vessels where the service can be facilitated thereby.

These two sections, it will be observed, provide the manner in which the Postmaster-General may contract for the foreign service.

Section 4009 places a limitation upon the compensation which the Postmaster-General may allow for such service. That section is as follows:

SEC. 4009. For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and inland postage; and if by a foreign steamship, or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

It will be understood that sea and inland postage is the full amount of postage on the mail carried. To illustrate: The postage on a letter from the United States to the Argentine Republic, or to any of the countries of South America, is 5 cents, the domestic postage being 2 cents and the foreign postage 3 cents. So that under this limitation the Postmaster-General can pay only 5 cents for carrying a letter to any foreign country by an American steamship, whatever the distance, or whatever the advantage of the service.

At the time of the enactment of this statute postage on all foreign mail matter was very much in excess of what it is at this time. By international agreement and understanding postage between this country and nearly all the countries on the globe has been reduced to the uniform rate of 5 cents. I submit herewith a table showing the rate of postage on foreign mail matter in 1858 and in 1864, which is as follows:

An examination of this table will disclose what hardship results to American steamships by restricting mail compensation to the sea and inland postage, and at the same time reducing the postage from 45 cents to most of the South American countries to 5 cents. The practical workings of this law results in paying to the American lines an amount sometimes below even the actual cost of the carriage of the mails. For instance, we paid the line from San Francisco to Hawaii, for twenty-four trips, 4,158 miles each, only $2,369, or about 4½ cents a mile. From New Orleans to Key West and Havana, forty-one trips, 744 miles each, the sea and inland postage amounted to $212, or 2½ cents a mile. From San Francisco to Mexico, twelve trips, 3,040 miles each, $208.82, or 1.6 cents a mile. From New York to Havana and Mexico, fifty trips, 2,348 miles each, $4,134.13 a year, an average of 3½ cents a mile. From New York to Cuba, seventy-one trips of 2,348 miles each, the postage yielded $2,348, or 1.6 cents per mile. From New York to Venezuela, thirty-four trips, 6,132 miles each, that line earned $1,392.94, the sea postage a half centa mile and the sea and inland postage 1.8 cents a mile. The Brazilian line from New York to Brazil, making thirteen trips of 10,304 miles each, received $4,210.24, the sea postage being 3.1 cents a mile, the sea and inland postage but 4.3 cents. The line from San Francisco to Japan, twelve trips of 12,180 miles each, was paid but $2,243.77, or 1½ cents a mile on the basis of sea postage, and on the basis of sea and inland postage 3½. This is sufficient to show the practical workings of the rule of compensation of sea and inland postage, and how in many cases the amount received must be far below the actual cost of performing the service.

Contrast this for a moment with the amount paid for the carriage of our domestic mails. In 1886 our mails were carried over railways an aggregate distance of 165,699,389 miles, for which we paid $15,495,191, an average payment per mile of 10.45 cents. On our star routes the mails were carried an aggregate distance of 83,227,721 miles, for which we paid the sum of $5,352,181, being an average cost or rate per mile of 6.43 cents. Our mails were carried on coastwise and river steamers an aggregate distance of 3,117,595 miles, for which we paid $446,419, being an average cost per mile of 14.32 cents. The average amount paid for carrying our coastwise mails is 57 cents per mile.

The practical workings of this policy restricting compensation for carrying our foreign mails to the sea and inland postage has driven the carriage of our mails to foreign bottoms, so that our whole transatlantic mail service is performed by foreign lines, and of the $475,000 appropriated for foreign service for the fiscal year, it is not too much to say that $400,000 of it will go into the pockets of foreign ship-owners. It seems to me that the time has come to abandon such a suicidal policy. England and other foreign countries have long since deemed it to their advantage to pursue a different course. It was once proposed in the Parliament of England to surrender the carriage of the English mails to foreign lines, when Sherman Crawford exclaimed: "Now, what I desire to do on this occasion is to protest in the name of the interest of the country and of commerce, and in justice to our own companies, against the ships of any foreign company being employed in the conveyance of our mails. You may carry the principle of economy too far. Such a course of proceeding would be free trade gone mad."

Foreign countries deem it of sufficient importance to establish mail communications with other nations, to enter into contracts for such service upon such terms as will induce the building of ships, and the establishment of regular mail communications.

The superintendent of foreign mails, in his annual report for 1886, at page 837, gives the following table of compensation paid by foreign countries for the carriage of their foreign mails:

TABLE XII.—Subsidies paid to steamship companies.

| Countries. | Amount of subsidy per annum. | Countries. | Amount of subsidy per annum. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. France | $5,152,388 98 | 7. Netherlands | $101,975 60 |
| 2. Great Britain | 3,206,766 67 | 8. Austria | 43,106 55 |
| 3. Brazil | 2,223,958 10 | 9. Denmark | 32,469 54 |
| 4. British India | 350,724 42 | 10. Portugal | 23,964 61 |
| 5. Japan | 241,250 00 | 11. Argentine Republic | 6,229 07 |
| 6. Belgium | 134,793 32 | 12. Roumania | 984,87 |

From 1850 to 1860, during a period of ten years, England paid the Royal Mail Steamship Company for carrying her mails to Brazil $1,350,000 annually, thirteen millions and a half in ten years. Spain has just consummated a contract with a company to pay $556,939 annually for twenty years for the carriage of her mails to this country. Brazil pays a steamship line 200,000 milrees, or $108,000, annually for a monthly mail service to the United States, while we pay about $2,500 annually for mail facilities with Brazil and about $1,400 for like service with the Republic of Venezuela. In 1840 England contracted with the Cunard Steamship Company to carry the English mails between England and America for an annual compensation of $413,000. The next year, the company complaining that the amount allowed was not sufficient to meet the sharp American competition, the sum was increased to $550,000 annually, and in 1846 the sum was again increased to $705,666. In 1840 the Oriental Steamship Company, established to East Indies, China, and Japan, was paid for carrying the mails $1,121,500 annually for a monthly service, and in 1841 this service was increased to semi-monthly trips at a compensation of $2,243,000 annually.

In 1850 the Royal Mail Steamship Company was paid for postal service to the West Indies and Brazil, under a contract with that Government, to be continued for ten years, an annual compensation of $1,350,000, and the same year the Pacific Steam Navigation Company was paid for the establishment of a line on the west coast of South America the sum of $225,000 annually upon a contract to carry a monthly mail.

It will be seen, therefore, that England alone paid these four lines a total sum of $4,523,666, and these same lines at the same time were paid by other governments a further sum of $1,500,000, making a total amount received by these lines for the carriage of the mails, $6,023,666.

In paying these enormous subsidies England had in view not only the establishment of mail communications but the building up of her foreign trade and the establishment of her merchant marine, and, as the result of it, the steam tonnage of England between 1860 and 1868 increased 400 per cent. The official report of the post-office department of Great Britain for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1880, shows that England was paying then for ocean postal service to foreign countries the sum of $3,708,618. In 1880 the Empire of Brazil paid English lines for carrying their mails $950,000, while other South American countries and the United States paid to English lines about a million dollars more, thus paying to these English lines in a single year for mail service between Europe and this continent the enormous sum of $5,658,618.

Now, the Senate amendment under consideration proposes to abrogate the old rule of sea and inland postage so far as the Empire of Brazil, the Argentine Republic, Paraguay, and Uruguay, and the republics generally of Central and South America are concerned, and place in the hands of the Postmaster-General $500,000, to be used by him in facilitating our mail communications with these countries, restricted in its application to the lowest responsible bidder and to American steamships carrying the American flag and to a compensation not exceeding 50 cents a mile each way, and the further restriction that one of these lines shall connect with some port in the United States on the Gulf of Mexico.

The following is the Senate amendment:

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF FOREIGN MAILS.

For transportation of foreign mails, $450,000.

(4) For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American republics, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress. One of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River.

We are met at the outset with the charge that this is a subsidy. Wherefore is it a subsidy? I submit that there is no element of subsidy in it. There is no portion of this money appropriated to any designated line. It is not a bounty given to any service. It simply abrogates, so far as this service is concerned, the unjust rule of sea and inland postage, and permits the Postmaster-General to contract for this service the same as he now contracts for the star-route, the coastwise, and river service. Is it a subsidy because we may possibly pay more for the service than we receive from the postage on the mail carried? Is that the test of a subsidy? If that be so, then every star route upon which we pay more than the postage collected is a subsidized route. Every railroad and every steamboat which receives more than is collected from the mails transported is a subsidized line. Because it costs us $415,828 more to deliver the mails in the gentleman's own State, the State of Georgia, than we receive from the mails is the State of Georgia the beneficiary of a subsidy system? There are but eight States in the whole thirty-eight to-day that pay the cost of their own mails; but the mails are nevertheless carried into these States at a large expense over and above the amount received, and yet no one thinks for a moment of calling this a subsidy. We have just contracted with a steamship line to carry the mails from Tampa and Key West to Havana, for which we are to pay the sum of $54,000 annually, and yet it is a distance of but about 200 miles. The law was amended in 1885 to bring the port of Havana, which was a foreign port, and for the carriage of the mails to which we could pay only sea and inland postage, within the domestic service, that it might be contracted for as we contract for the inland service, for the reason that the sea and inland postage was insufficient compensation.

Why do not gentlemen denounce this as a subsidy? Now, the amendment of the Senate proposes to permit the Postmaster-General to do in regard to these great South American countries what you have authorized him to do touching the service with Cuba. Upon what principle will you permit the Postmaster-General to contract for a foreign service that is only 200 miles away and deny him the right to contract for service that is 2,000 miles away? Upon what principle will you allow only sea and inland postage to Brazil and the countries of South America and permit $54,000 to be paid from Tampa to Havana, a distance of only 200 miles? I do not criticise in any manner the service from Tampa to Havana, but I only ask that the same rule shall be applied to other service of equal importance. This increased compensation to Havana was recommended by the Postmaster-General in the following language:

The establishment of this new line, furnishing, as it does, greatly increased facilities, will, it is belived, have a very beneficial effect upon commercial intercourse between this country and the island ot Cuba. Heretofore the mails from any part of the United States to Cuba had first to be transported to New York and thence by steamship to Havana. This method entailed great delay in the transmission of intelligence. Through the agency of the fast line running from New York to Tampa the mails from any point in the United States can be concentrated on it and carried to Tampa, whence they will be dispatched via Key West to Cuba. The amount paid for this service for the contract term is $54,456.

Mark the language of the Postmaster-General in favoring the establishment of the service to Havana, wherein he says that such service will "have a very beneficial effect upon commercial intercourse between this country and the Island of Cuba." If the amendment of the Senate is adopted by this House I affirm that the result will be "to benefit our commercial intercourse" with the countries of South America.

But it is also said that this service is of no advantage except to the steamship companies. That is not true, as I showed when a similar question was under discussion in this House a year ago. A manifest of a Brazilian steamship showed that she was carrying from this country to Brazil in a single cargo products from twenty-seven States. I affirm that to establish mail facilities with Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the republics of South and Central America generally will, in the language of the Postmaster-General, "have a beneficial effect upon the commercial intercourse" between us and these great countries south of us. That swift, established, and regular mail facilities promote commercial intercourse is the concurrent testimony of all nations.

Sherman Crawford, to whom I have referred, said in a great debate in the British Parliament when the proposition was before Parliament to renew the mail contract with the Peninsula and Oriental Company:

Wherever postal communication has been extended there commerce has invariably been attracted. In fact, the conveyance of the mails has proved a most efficient agency for increasing our trade in all parts of the world.

I for one hold that there are considerations to be taken into account in this matter which are wholly apart from the question of the profit and loss arising upon the accounts of the post-office. This difference is not considerable, but whatever it is that difference represents the whole cost to this country of the means by which not only the commercial but the social and political connection between this country and the world is kept up.

Again, Sir Charles Wood wrote to the secretary of the Post-Office in October, 1867:

It has been the perception of the bearing of increased postal communication on the wealth and progress of the country that has induced statesmen of late years to consent to fiscal sacrifices for the purpose of obtaining it. There can be no doubt that increased postal communication implies increasing relations, increased commerce, increased investment of English capital, and from all these sources the wealth and prosperity of England are greatly increased.

The statesmen of our own country in former days expressed themselves in as strong terms touching this matter. Mr. Polk in a debate in Congress, said:

It is strange, sir, that men who are presumed to embody the wisdom of the land should have to be reminded that they are pandering to British power—that they are forgetting American interest and losing sight of that greatness and grandeur which attaches to this American Government. I stand upon the floor of the American Congress and find men who are willing to measure our greatness by the circumference of a dollar—a dollar, sir—measure American prosperity, American greatness, by a round dollar, and thus pander to British interests, to bow the pliant knee and say to the power that assailed us at Lexington, that flashed the first guns from Bunker Hill, that fought us upon sea and land in 1812, that has been jealous of our prosperity and greatness ever since: "Good mother, won't you carry our mails for us?" Why, sir, I scorn, I despise this anti-American feeling and sentiment. The men who stand battling upon these principles are behind the age. They are behind the progress of their country; they know nothing of its power or its influence, and are contributing to a combination of foreign policy designed to overslaugh us.

In the light of the importance of the service, the testimony of our own and foreign statesmen, is it not worth our while to make an effort to increase our mail facilities with Central and South America, particularly the flourishing republics on the Plate?

To a full comprehension of the importance of this service it is necessary to glance a moment at some of the countries with which it is proposed to establish mail facilities. Take the Empire of Brazil. It has an area of 3,218,166 square miles, equal in extent very nearly to the whole thirty-eight States of the American Union, with a population of 13,000,000 of people, and a capital city of 300,000, with free public schools established throughout the empire, and a commerce aggregating $200,000,000. Her annual imports are $90,000,000. She is without manufactories.

In 1883 she bought of Great Britain $15,778,098 worth of cotton goods, and the same year bought of the United States but $612,828 worth. Is there any reason why we, with our great cotton fields, and with a line open from the Gulf States to the ports of this empire, should not supply her people with the fabrics of our looms? The same year she bought of Great Britain 95,613 hats and caps; of the United States but 119. Great Britain sold her of iron and steel in 1883, $5,674,407 worth; the United States but $1,034,678 worth. She bought of manufactured leather of Great Britain $1,000,000 worth; and of the United States but $36,000 worth. Of woolen goods she purchased of Great Britain $1,618,000 worth, and of the United States but $2,142 worth. Of her wearing apparel she purchased of France $1,250,000 worth, and of the United States but $17,000. And to summarize the matter, in the last twenty years Great Britain alone has sold to the inhabitants of Brazil $630,000,000 of manufactured products, while the United States in the same period has sold her but $138,000,000 worth.

Now, why is it that we have so little of this Brazilian trade? Simply because we have no adequate communication with her people. We have but one steamship line of three ships, making monthly trips between New York and the ports of this empire, and at the same time there are three English lines having 55 steamers, the French lines having 19 steamers, German lines with 15 steamers, aggregating 89 steamers from these three countries, holding regular direct communication with the ports of this empire. All these lines are paid liberal compensation for carrying the mails, Brazil herself paying a million dollars to aid in the establishment and maintenance of these communications. If we adopt this amendment will it not, in the language of the Postmaster-General, "have a beneficial effect on our commercial intercourse with the Empire of Brazil?"

Go down farther, to the Argentine Republic, a republic fashioned after our own, with a president, two houses of Congress, and all the machinery of government modeled after this great republic. It has a population of 3,000,000 of people; its capital city, Buenos Ayres, has a population of 500,000, 40,000 of whom are English speaking, while the annual immigration is over 100,000. In 1884 this republic purchased $94,000,000 of manufactured products, for she, too, is without any manufacturing industries. Of this sum Great Britain sold her $30,000,000, France $17,000,000, Germany $9,000,000, Belgium $7,250,000, the United States $7,500,000, Spain $5,000,000, and Italy $4,000,000, the United States furnishing her only a trifle over 8 per cent. of all her imports. In the last twenty years the United States has sold her but $40,000,000 worth, while Great Britain has sold her $254,000,000 and France $313,000,000. In 1883 England sold her in cotton goods alone $9,000,000, while the United States furnished her but $150 worth. There is not a cotton mill in the Argentine Republic, and will not be for years to come.

Why should not we, a great cotton-growing country, furnish the cotton goods for the people of this Republic?

In 1883 England sold $2,169,000 worth of woolen goods to this people, while the United States sold but $7,500. She bought of England in iron and steel $6,725,000 worth, while at the same time she purchased of the United States but $500,000. Europe, in other words, gets 90 per cent. of her trade, while the United States has secured less than 10 per cent. of it.

The following table presents a striking exhibit of the trade of the Argentine Republic and its distribution among the different commercial countries.

The following table shows the distribution of this commerce for the year 1883:

Now, what explanation can be given for this dearth of trade with this wealthy and growing people? There is but one answer. We have no steam communication whatever with the Argentine Republic, and an American minister appointed to-day to that court would be compelled to go to Liverpool and take passage on an English steamer in order to reach the port of his destination, or else take passage on the Brazilian line to Rio and take his chances on some foreign steamer to be transported the remainder of the way. It is a shame to this great nation that to-day we share no part of this great trade, and, substantially sharing but a trifling part in the ports of Central and South America, we permit foreign countries to come under our very nose and take it from us, because we deny decent, fair compensation to American lines for opening facilities for commercial intercourse.

Go to the River Plate to-day and you will find there twenty-one foreign lines connecting European ports with the great countries bordering thereon. In 1884 there arrived at the harbor of Buenos Ayres 3,626 steamships, not one of them carrying the American flag. The same year 3,775 sailing vessels anchored in that harbor, and to-day 200 splendid ocean steamers are plying between Buenos Ayres and European ports. Of this total shipping 34 per cent. is under the British flag; 16 per cent. under the French flag; 9 per cent. under the German flag; 24 per cent. under other nations, and this country has the miserable representation of 2 per cent. only of the sailing vessels. In 1862 there was no direct line of steamers between Europe and the Argentine Republic. These lines have all grown up since that date. Now there are from forty to sixty steamships from Europe arriving at Buenos Ayres every month. There are thirty European mail steamships arriving and departing every thirty days from the harbor of this city, and over one hundred steamers, English, French, German, and Italian, carrying the mails and passengers, enter and leave her port every thirty days. All these lines are paid liberally for carrying the mails.

How easy it is for us to push the Brazilian line, if you please, now reaching down the eastern coast of Brazil below Rio on to the River Plate. But the only offer we make to this line, if they enter upon this enterprise, is 5 cents for each letter they carry, or if they carry a hundred letters, which might lay the foundation of an immense trade with this Republic, we, under the law, can pay but $5 for the service.

Again, take the Republic of Uruguay, with its capital, Montevideo, having a population of 100,000. The commerce of this nation aggregating $50,000,000, her imports $26,000,00C. With this country we have no communication. She bought of cotton goods in 1884 $3,000,000 worth, but only $580,000 of us. She bought of England of iron and steel $1,269,000 worth, and of the United States but $98,000 worth. By reason of lack of direct communication with the United States the merchants of Montevideo can make no order for goods with any certainty as to when the order will be filled, nor when the goods will be received. Europe is connected with countries of the Plate by a submarine telegraph.

The orders from this country are telegraphed across the sea, but a merchant desiring goods from the United States must wait from five to nine months. The South American Commission states in its report that a merchant at Montevideo ordered three hundred harvesters from the United States, which were readily sold. Subsequently he made another order of three hundred, but it was seven months before they were received. The harvest was over, and one merchant declares that an order was delayed one hundred and twenty-five days. The result is that they purchase only such goods of us as they can not buy elsewhere.

Permit me here to submit a table showing the imports in 1885 to this country from the four countries of England, France, Germany, and the United States. It is as follows:

I have thus endeavored to present in outline the importance of this trade, and in this connection permit me to say that the people of the Argentine Republic are exceedingly anxious that we should enter upon this legislation. The president of that republic, in a recent message to his congress, said:

> The interests of our country will be benefited by a more intimate contact with the great nations of North America, in whose markets we will be able to find industrial products, and where the Argentine Republic products may find easy and abundant sale.

And the president stated to the South American commission personally that he was authorized to say "that if the United States Government would grant a subsidy to assist such enterprise, his government would vote an equal amount, and he thought that $100,000 from each government would be sufficient."

In conclusion, permit me to say that I indulge the hope that this amendment will receive the approval of this House, backed as it is, not only by the intrinsic merit of the proposition, but by the recommendation of both the Postmaster-General and the President of the United States. The Postmaster-General, on page 30 of his last annual report, urges this matter upon the attention of Congress in the following language:

> Petitions, numerously signed by well-known and enterprising merchants and manufacturers of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Saint Paul, Minneapolis, and other places, have been presented to the Department for the establishment of direct and regular mail communication with the Argentine Republic, the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and for a semi-monthly service to the Empire of Brazil. These petitions represent that within a few years past the Argentine Republic has increased in population and wealth with greater proportionable rapidity than any other country on the globe; that our manufactures, particularly machinery and coarse cottons, are in demand there, but our trade is limited by the lack of direct mail facilities and direct passenger and freight lines; that our direct monthly mail service to Brazil has increased our exports of manufactures to that Empire; and it may be confidently expected further advantageous results would follow the solicited enlargement of mail communication.
> No authority of law exists of which the Department can avail itself to meet this request. The statutes now give power to employ only such vessels as may be intending voyages to foreign ports in the course of their trade. It has been a constant study to secure by such means the greatest possible frequency and celerity of dispatch, and every opportunity afforded by the sailing of any vessel promising any such advantage has been promptly seized, so that, at the present time, the Department enjoys the best methods for the transportation of its mails to foreign ports which the existing establishments of lines of ships or the occasional sailings of vessels foreign-bound render possible. No gain in regularity, frequency, security, or speed can be attained unless other ships shall be put upon the seas by private adventure or by foreign powers, or other provision shall be made by the Congress.
> The particular application of these petitioners appears to me to be entitled to serious consideration. There is now direct mail communication between this country and no port south of Rio de Janeiro. To the latter the ships of the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company afford but one dispatch a month. To more northern ports of the Brazilian Empire somewhat greater frequency is attained by the occasional use of other vessels; but the sailings of these are not regular, and the gain by their employment is but moderate. It is not to be doubted that the extension of direct service to the southern republics of the continent and regular semi-monthly service to the Brazilian metropolis would be valuable and desirable, measured by the principles which should alone govern sound postal administration.
> This application suggests the augmentation of existing service and the creation of new with the particular states, in both aspects desirable; the purchase of mail facilities which do not exist, and can not be expected soon to exist in the ordinary manner. The requisite expenditure would be for something worthy of expenditure, and within the general usage and the sound principles of the postal service. It should ever be regarded as wise administration to keep postal facilities rather somewhat in advance than in anything lagging to the rear of all the proper requirements of intercourse excited by the ties of blood or race, popular education and enlightenment, trade and commerce. Upon this footing very many domestic routes are maintained at a cost many times beyond their immediate and direct returns, but undeniably to the great increase of the country's general welfare; and whenever the substantial need of intercourse by the mails arises provision for such communication is promptly made.
> These considerations suggest inquiry whether there be the need of such mail communication with the mentioned countries of the southern continent, whether that need be worthy of special effort to meet it, and whether it can be supplied at a cost justifiably adequate to the present and prospective value of the proposed intercourse. The determination of these inquiries rests with the Congress, and the Department is privileged, and by its information able, only to express the general opinion that such service would be highly useful and is fairly demanded by the interests of the country, and its early establishment should be attempted; and I respectfully suggest that you invite the attention of that body to the subject in such terms as shall commend it to careful consideration. Should the recommendation meet with favor in its general aspects, the Department might be authorized to solicit proposals as for the performance of such a service as the Congress should deem desirable, with limitations as to cost prescribed by its judgment of the probable resulting value to the country or otherwise.
> There is good reason for the expectation that such an invitation, open to fair and general competition, for a service of a sufficient duration to warrant the requisite provision of vessels, would result in proposals that would enable a desirable contract to be made and a system of communication to be established of great and lasting advantage to the United States. The rapid development and growth of the countries in view, their lack of manufacturing establishments of their own, the desirable character of their products for exchange, and the advantages of extending the fields of enterprise of our citizens, as well as of creating firmer ties between the peoples of our continent, invite the extension and enlargement of our postal facilities by every just, reasonable, and economical method, in consonance with sound principles.

From this it will be observed that the Postmaster-General holds that the same reason which actuated Congress to relieve the service from Tampa to Havana from the unjust rule of sea and inland postage operates with greater force in the effort to establish service with the countries south of us.

The recommendation of the Postmaster-General was supplemented by the President of the United States in his message of last December, in the following terms:

> Petitions have, however, been presented to the Department by numerous merchants and manufacturers for the establishment of a direct service to the Argentine Republic and for semi-monthly dispatches to the Empire of Brazil; and the subject is commended to your consideration. It is an obvious duty to provide the means of postal communication which our commerce requires, and, with prudent forecast of results, the wise extension of it may lead to stimulating intercourse and become the harbinger of a profitable traffic, which will open new avenues for the disposition of the products of our industry. The circumstances of the countries at the far south of our continent are such as to invite our enterprise and afford the promise of sufficient advantages to justify an unusual effort to bring about the closer relations which greater freedom of communication would tend to establish.

This, gentlemen, is a great national matter. It is not a party question. It belongs to no party and to no section, but to all parties and to our whole country. We are one people, one in origin, one in purpose, one in destiny, and in the name of this triune spirit let us do all that in us lies to promote commercial intercourse with these great and growing republics south of us, and so assert and maintain our commercial supremacy on the seas of this hemisphere. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

At 3 o'clock the committee rose in pursuance of the special order; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill with the Senate amendments, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that demand for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now ask unanimous consent that we have a session to-morrow evening for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Labor.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent. The Clerk will read the special order.

DEATH OF SENATOR PIKE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, February 22, 1887, at 3 o'clock p. m., be assigned for the consideration of resolutions relative to the late Austin F. Pike, late a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

REMARKS OF MR. HAYNES.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolutions of the Senate transmitted to the House in relation to the late Senator Pike.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has learned with deep regret of the decease of Austin F. Pike, late a member of this body from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, that appropriate tribute may be paid to the high character and distinguished public services of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect, the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask the consideration of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep sorrow of the death of Austin F. Pike, late a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That the business of the House be suspended, that appropriate honors may be paid to the memory of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Speaker, it is peculiarly appropriate that eulogies on Austin F. Pike, late a Senator from New Hampshire, should be spoken in this Hall, where he once held a seat as a member of this body. There are but few here who were his associates as members of the House. They will remember him as one who while rarely taking part in debate and wordy controversy, still left his impress as being of superior mental mold, intellectual culture, and strength of character. He was not of those who in the current interpretation of the phrase of the day are "popular idols."

There was in his mien and bearing a natural reserve that forbade easy familiarity upon short acquaintance. Not that he was unapproachable even to the humblest who might seek him, but even with his intimates there was an understanding that he was a busy man, with whom the time for useless words and social compliments should be carefully chosen. With a heart warm as the sunshine to his friends, ever ready with kindly words and assistance, even impulsive in his desire to serve those he liked, still he had none of the outward manifestations of a "hale-fellow-well-met," and for this reason was misunderstood in his social character and feelings by many of the people of his native State.

No man was honored in a greater degree with the respect due to the highest personal integrity; but few held in equal estimation for superior talents; but his natural reserve tended to the close intimacy only of those of his own choice, and the genial side of his character will never be fully appreciated except by a comparatively limited circle.

It was in the line of his profession that he achieved his greatest distinction. He fairly won title to a position in the front rank of the New Hampshire bar, in a State which has contributed to the law many of its brightest ornaments. I do not feel competent to undertake a close analysis of the special traits of mind and character which made him famous as a lawyer.

He was a close student; his industry was proverbial; it seemed as if he never tired and never rested; and he possessed a professional pride which assured the most faithful work in any cause in which he might be enlisted, for the sake of his own professional reputation as well as for the success of his client. I have thought, too, that his early and intimate association with Webster and other master minds of the last generation may have had much to do with training his powers in a direction which led to subsequent distinction.

It was, I think, his average strength rather than brilliancy in any special direction which made him a leading figure in the courts of his State. Others were his superiors in glittering rhetoric. Many had greater art to please the ear with finely worded phrases and gracefully rounded periods. In presenting his case to a jury he never got down among its members with that air of deep privat econfidence and personal intimacy which many advocates assume so effectively.

He plead his cause to twelve men as though he were talking to twelve thousand, not with rapid utterance as when thoughts are crowding for expression, but deliberately, sometimes even hesitatingly, but with great self-possession, and rarely uniting the salient points of his argument with wordy bridges of glittering generalities. His arguments were arguments in fact. There was no waste timber in them. He was not prone to address himself to the emotional side of human nature. I doubt if juries ever wept over efforts of his to depict the woes of "my unfortunate client." And yet his rule of careful preparation, his studiously acquired knowledge of law and of precedent, and the directness of his methods made him a foeman worthy of the best steel, whether before the untrained petit jury or the bench of learned law judges.

Senator Pike had none of that milk-and-water weakness which would have deemed it an offense to call him a politician. From the organization of the Republican party he was one of its most devoted adherents and trusted leaders. But he had little of the faculty of finesse or taste for management of details in political movements. His was not a familiar face at party headquarters, even in the most heated campaigns. But when, as in the famous counting-out of State senators in 1876, weighty questions of constitutional law and construction were in issue, he was a tower of strength to his party associates. His services as a partisan were in the direction of his special training as an advocate of principles and measures rather than a planner and director of campaigns. He was a cabinet officer rather than a general in the party organization.

He was by no means insensible to or careless of political preferment; but he was devoted to his profession, and in its practice he found a more congenial sphere than in the race for official position. Prior to his election to the United States Senate he had been the presiding officer in either branch of the New Hampshire Legislature, and had represented the second district in the Forty-third Congress. To the performance of his official duties he brought the indomitable industry characteristic of the man.

As chairman of the Senate Committee on Claims, I have heard it remarked he gave to every case intrusted to him the careful study and critical examination which mark the highest legal training and experience. He had no slipshod or superficial methods. His close application to his official duties in the earlier part of the present Congress was a matter of grave concern to his friends. It had then become almost certain in their minds that his life hung suspended by a thread, and that prudence dictated rest and cessation from his arduous labors.

It is more than probable that he too appreciated his danger, notwithstanding that at times he expressed his disbelief in the diagnosis made by physicians, the correctness of which was soon to be so sadly confirmed. I know, and others know, how bravely he looked death in the face, and it was not until the first session of the present Congress was well advanced that he could be persuaded to leave his duties here and seek in the quiet of his home the rest his condition so imperatively demanded.

But even then he could not wholly abandon his habits of industry. The last time I saw him in life was in the city of Portsmouth, whither, accompanied by his devoted wife, he had come upon professional business; and my heart warms toward his memory when I recall his hearty greeting, his generous interest in my own personal affairs, and his impulsive proffers of service and assistance. He was in the most perfect apparent health, and in buoyant spirits, and yet but a few short weeks elapsed ere the tidings came, startling but not unexpected, that he had fallen in his tracks as he stood, stricken down with a suddenness which permitted not even a parting word, only a momentary glance, and a slight gesture of the hand, which told in that swift passing his realization that the great change had come.

In my pride of section I would point to Austin F. Pike as a grand type of the native New Englander. Born in the shadows of our rugged granite hills, without special advantages or opportunities, by his own efforts and force of character he rose to fame and distinction. Starting on his career in modest circumstances and with modest surroundings, he acquired by honest methods and the exercise of thrift and industry a handsome competency for his family. His domestic relations were pleasant, his domestic life beautiful in the affection of wife and children.

The rugged strength of Puritan ancestry was transmitted in finer strain in unswerving adherence to his convictions of right and duty. But while thus firm, he was broad and catholic in his views, and in his nature appeared not a taint of narrowness or bigotry. He was honest, he was faithful, he was true in every relation.

To the coming generations may well be cited as an example for emulation the honored son of New Hampshire, whe rests in dreamless sleep amid the scenes he loved so well in life, by that spot of surpassing natural loveliness where the Pemigewassett from the mountains and the Winnepesaukee from the lakes join in the meeting of the waters.

REMARKS OF MR. LONG.

Mr. LONG. I do not rise, Mr. Speaker, to enlarge upon Senator Pike's political or professional career. That matter is sufficiently touched by those more familiar with it. In that respect it is enough from me that his life was, as has been portrayed, one of faithful service and perfect integrity, and that honors were never paid to a man of more genuine worth or honest record.

I rise rather because during his senatorial residence in Washington we lived under the same roof. Almost daily I saw him, and was in converse with him, and I came to know something of the deeper inspirations and treasures of his life. To the world at large our lives here are lives of official routine. But to ourselves, as the days go by, bringing us closer together, familiarizing us with each other's faces, with the grasp of each other's hands, and with the sound of each other's voices, suddenly it comes that we are no longer perfunctory associates, but friends and companions. There is in each indeed the conventional discharge of his duty, but beneath that and far more impressive on our consciousness is the recognition of qualities that mark not so much the statesman as the man—the characteristics of the individual. Out of the unrelieved mass of the representative population which we face when we enter here there steadily emerges on us in clearer outline, each day we stay, traits of individual character, personalities of individual men, the opening of the treasures of the individual human heart, and the expression of those affections, tastes, ambitions, devotions, purposes, or ideals which make each one of us a distinct individuality, yet subtly intimate with every other. And when one goes from us, say what you will, recite never so eloquently the story of his public achievement, the one sincere chord that thrills in the breasts of those who remain is that of the regard he had won in their hearts. And the measure of that regard is the measure of the response to his memory.

In this respect I recall Senator Pike with a reverent tenderness I can not express. From the time we both entered the Forty-eighth Congress I recall meeting, almost daily each session, a sweet, grave, benignant face—more like the picture of Rufus Choate, a graduate of the same granite State, prolific of great men, than any other that occurs to me. I recall a gentle, almost pathetic smile, significant of the sweet and gentle spirit from which it sprang—a man ripe in years, delicate in health, yet suggestive of something of a certain rugged New England plainness, intent on duty, going about his work in the simplest and most exemplary way, and absolutely free from all entanglements of selfish strategic maneuver. He had not been long enough in the Senate to take, if ever he would have taken, foremost part in its greater questions and debates. But there was the most diligent, painstaking, careful, and thorough attention to the details of the cumulative work which the chairmanship of his laborious committee threw upon him. To this work he brought not only patience and assiduity, but a sound judgment, an intelligent comprehension, and the trained mind of a good lawyer and a wise man. Of such a character it may seem a little thing in the way of eulogy, but to me who was near him it is a very grateful thing to recall the simple genuineness of the man's nature—even the kind tones of his voice, his encouraging interest in younger men, and the gracious words to children, which, together with a certain benignity in his face, drew them to him. It is a grateful thing to remember that among all who came into companionship with him, there was an unspoken but unquestioned recognition of him as a true man, an honest man, a good man, with all that those fundamental terms mean; that to all who came to him in his official relation, no matter how humble the applicant or small the petition, there was a genuine response; and that if one may touch the sacred altar of the domestic circle, he was its very benediction!

By reason of an affection of the heart his life was continually trembling in the most sensitive balance. And if I dwell on these personal traits, it is because he seemed to me to be conscious all this time that the angel of death walked at his side, ready at any moment to take his hand and lead him away; and that with that consciousness there came to him not only the brave spirit of resignation, but the braver spirit of doing his duty to the last, to the last letting only sunshine radiate from his face, only helpfulness from his hand. When our friends die we say God rest their souls. But God rested his while he yet lived in the very face of death. No soldier ever faced it in the sudden and soon-over flash of battle more heroically than did he with a serenity that was proof against its more appalling because constant and silent close impendence.

It was the fitness of poetic justice that, not here in Washington, but in his own New Hampshire home death claimed him—amid the incomparable beauty and glory of the New Hampshire autumn sunshine—in the open air of that paradise of mountain and forest and lake and farm and field to which every New Hampshire heart is loyal, and on the acres won and cultivated by his own hand. There, as peacefully as his own blameless life had run, as serenely as his kind face beamed, came the end. The angel, who is even tenderer and gentler than her sister Sleep, had indeed walked at his side so long that he recognized her as the blessed angel of man's succor and peace. She had waited till their walk that bright day over the pleasant fields and under the blue sky gave the opportunity happiest for her and for him. Then she gathered her arms about him. His head fell upon her shoulder even as he went. And lo! he was at rest in the mansions of his Father's house.

REMARKS OF MR. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen who enjoyed an extended acquaintance with Senator Pike have spoken in appropriate terms of his public services and personal worth. I can only speak of Senator Pike from a limited acquaintance; but limited as it was it so impressed me with his excellent qualities of head and heart that I was deeply grieved at the announcement of his death.

My acquaintance with Senator Pike was very slight during his service in this House in the Forty-third Congress, but I became better acquainted with him after he came to the Senate and met him daily for many months.

Senator Pike did not seem to me to be specially wedded to public life or devoted to politics; but he was a gentleman of positive convictions, tenacious of his opinions, and well informed in the public affairs of our country and the current intelligence of the age. He impressed me as being more a lawyer than a politician, more devoted to the science of law than to the wider field of statesmanship. I observed that he uniformly took a judicial view of public measures, respected usage and precedent, and was little controlled by the demands of expediency. He loved his own section of the Union, was proud of his native State and the grand historic events associated with its mountains and valleys, and yet he took a broad and comprehensive view of the duties of a Senator of the United States.

But I was especially impressed with the moral qualities he displayed. He was a conscientious and honest man, a lover of justice and truth. He was a pleasant, unassuming gentleman, as considerate and approachable, I am sure, when here as a Senator, as little affected by official dignity, as when at home among his old friends in the Granite State. He listened patiently to the stories of disappointment and grief so often poured into the ears of Senators and Members of this House by the unfortunate, who, hoping against hope, urge year after year real or imaginary claims against the Government or struggle to obtain or retain places in the great Departments. They touched his sympathies and often secured his best efforts for relief. He was a kind, considerate, merciful gentleman who did not forget in his exalted station as Senator the right of the poor and unfortunate to a hearing and to justice and relief.

Senator Pike did not strike me as a gentleman specially adapted to, or in love with, public life, and yet he devoted himself with unusual fidelity to his public duties. He had qualities that made him eminently respectable as a Senator; the unassuming dignity, the love of justice, the high sense of public duty which recognized the claims of the friendless and unfortunate as equally entitled to just consideration as the great demands of the powerful, which distinguished Senator Pike, were qualities of which any State might well be proud in her Senators, and yet, while Senator Pike filled well his place in the Senate and performed the duties of that high position with fidelity, it seemed to me that in his domestic and social relations he found his chief enjoyment. He loved his friends, and he was devoted to his excellent wife and affectionate children.

It became apparent to his friends during the last session of Congress that he was suffering from a fatal disease; that his life was ebbing slowly but surely away. I think he was fully conscious of the fact, but while his strength permitted he continued in the cheerful performance of his Senatorial duties. As his strength failed he longed for the accustomed scenes of his native State and the sight of his home and the voices of the friends of his youth, and with his devoted wife and daughter he left this capital in the midst of his career as Senator, left it never to return. The State of New Hampshire has lost a faithful servant, the nation a just and upright Senator. A good man is dead. Peace to his ashes, a tear to his memory.

REMARKS OF MR. GALLINGER.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, death is a necessary and inevitable condition of life, and before its mandate all classes and conditions of men must bow; yet, strange as it may seem, no one is ever fully prepared for the summons. "Life is sweet," and life's duties and cares so engross the mind as to keep it unprepared for the great change that sooner or later comes to every human soul. Surrounded by loved ones, in the enjoyment of home and of the tender associations that have grown around him through a lifetime of struggle and toil, what wonder is it that the man of mature years still wants to live to enjoy the fruits of his labors. And yet death comes as "the liberator of him whom freedom can not release, the physician of him whom medicine can not cure, and the comforter of him whom time can not console." Or, as Swift expresses it, "It is impossible that anything so natural, so necessary, and so universal as death should ever have been designed by Providence as an evil to mankind."

And as death is universal, so, too, is sorrow. When our own homes are invaded and our own hearts desolated—when death comes to us like "the flight of some poor bird across some dark cliff, over some narrow valley, for a while sunlight falls on its wings, a moment more and all is dark again"—we are apt to feel that our grief is exceptional and our sorrow greater than that of others. But it is not so. In the beautiful poem, "The Light of Asia," it is told that the good Lord Buddha was wandering on the earth, helping the poor and sorrowful as our blessed Lord used to do, when he met a fair young mother with her little dead baby in her arms. And she could not believe her baby dead, and begged the holy man to give her or tell her where she could find some remedy to bring the light to his eyes and the color to his cheeks. Buddha lifted the cloth tenderly from the little face, saw that the baby was indeed dead, and then said to the mother: "Go into the town yonder with this little cup and fill it with mustard seed, but the seed must only come from houses in which no one has died." And she went eagerly away, only to return at sundown with an empty cup. All had been willing to give, but all had lost some friend. Then Lord Buddha said:

This is the only balm I had to give thee. Yesterday thy baby slept dead upon thy breast; to-day thou knowest that the whole world grieves with thee; perchance the knowledge of this universal suffering may make thy sorrow less.

And, while it did not take away the dull ache, it did cause her heart to turn lovingly and helpfully towards the sad and suffering, and in soothing their grief her own grew less.

Lord Buddha's lesson of universal sorrow and universal sympathy is what I would bring to the hearts of those who mourn the loss of him whose memory we would embalm in words of fitting eulogy to-day.

Austin Franklin Pike was born in Hebron, N. H., October 16, 1819. He was one of New Hampshire's ablest and best men. From very humble beginnings, and with a comparatively limited education, by indomitable energy and remarkable industry he worked his way up to the very head of his profession, and to membership in the highest legislative body in the world.

He was the son of a farmer, and at the age of fifteen had only the limited means of knowledge that the district school afforded. Then he attended a year each at the academies at Plymouth, N. H., and Newbury, Vt., boarding himself because of his scanty means, his limited expenses being met by the proceeds of teaching during the vacation periods. He often spoke of his early struggles for an education, saying that his parents could only give him his time and clothes, but that he always had their hearty good wishes, and their kind and loving encouragement. After leaving school Mr. Pike entered the law office of Hon. George W. Nesmith, in the town of Franklin, where he ever afterward resided.

Judge Nesmith is a man of remarkable integrity and accomplishments, and under his direction the young student made rapid progress in his studies. Franklin is but 2 miles from the place where Daniel Webster was born, and but 3 miles from the farm this noted man owned and occupied during a considerable part of his eventful public career. Judge Nesmith and Mr. Webster were devoted friends, and through a long period of years Mr. Pike came in frequent contact with Mr. Webster, for whom he had a great admiration, and he enjoyed nothing better than to relate incidents in the life of this illustrious statesman.

At the age of twenty-six Mr. Pike was admitted to the bar, and soon gained prominence and distinction in his profession, being regarded as a safe counselor and a remarkably strong and able advocate. As my colleague has said, he was not a brilliant man, but he was diligent and conscientious in his work, and always true to his client. While not possessed of great oratorical gifts, he had a sturdy strength and force of expression that carried conviction to those who listened to his well chosen words, and he soon became known as one of the most successful lawyers of the State, a reputation he held until the day of his death.

Mr. Pike became interested in political affairs in early life. In the years 1850, 1851, and 1852 he was elected to the State Legislature, where he was recognized as a strong debater and leading member. In 1857 and 1858 he was a member of the State Senate, being president of that body the latter year. He was again elected to the State Legislature in 1865 and re-elected the next year, serving with great ability as speaker both those years. In 1858, 1859, and 1860 he was chairman of the Republican State committee, and in the latter year was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia which put in nomination General John C. Frémont, to whom the electoral vote of New Hampshire was given in that memorable contest. Mr. Pike was an earnest and uncompromising Republican, but singularly free from partisan bitterness or political prejudice.

Mr. Pike represented the second Congressional district of New Hampshire in the Forty-third Congress, and although suffering from illness much of the time he made a record for intelligent and faithful service, and was recognized by his colleagues as a man of marked ability and rare legal attainments. From the close of that Congress until 1883 he attended to his professional work, but in that year, after a political struggle unparalleled in the history of the State, he was elected to the United States Senate for a term that will expire March 4, 1889. It soon became evident to Mr. Pike's friends that he was in declining health, and when it was known that he had angina pectoris little hope was entertained of his recovery.

In May last he came from the Senate Chamber to the House, and, seated at my side, with a pathos and tenderness that will never be forgotten, said that he was going to his New Hampshire home, where he hoped, from the invigorating air and out-door exercise, to gain renewed strength and energy. With a slow and measured step he left the House, and on the next day he started for his home, never to return to the Senate. The appropriate words of eulogy that were spoken there one week ago eloquently testify to the hold he had gained upon the respect and confidence of his Senatorial associates.

In every position to which Mr. Pike was called he acquitted himself with great distinction. His profound knowledge of law and habits of industrious research made him an exceedingly valuable man for the public service. His clear and analytical mind, and conscientious desire to act justly toward all, peculiarly qualified him for the chairmanship of the Committee on Claims, which he held in the Senate, and which he filled with rare ability. It has been said of him that he brought to the consideration of claims before his committee the same degree of earnestness and the same careful research that he would have employed had it been an important case to be tried before a jury.

Even when he was suffering extreme pain he would go to his committee-room and patiently examine claims, sifting the evidence and applying to each case the strong tests of his judicial mind. The amount of work he performed during the winter of 1886 was really marvelous, much of which must have been done during hours of physical suffering and mental anxiety.

The domestic life of Mr. Pike was more than ordinarily happy. He was twice married, his second wife and three children surviving him. His home was a beautiful one, where his friends always received a cordial welcome, and where many public men shared his hospitality. He was happy in his home, devoted to his family, and true to his friends. Those who were nearest and dearest to him may well say:

> The dusky strand of death, inwoven here
> With dear love's tie, makes love itself more dear.

On the 8th day of October last Mr. Pike went a short distance from his home to show to an intended purchaser a piece of land he owned. On that very day I inquired of his son-in-law and business partner the condition of the Senator's health, and the reply was, "He is much better, and is thinking of trying a case in court soon." At that very moment Senator Pike was dead! Reaching the field, and raising his hand to point out its limits, he passed the boundaries of time, and entered the limitless realms of another world. His death was instantaneous. In the twinkling of an eye life's anxieties and duties were forever laid aside, and the gates of eternity opened to receive his spirit.

> Low was the message that called him away,
> Swift as the thought of a child in its play,
> And in the grandeur of silence he lay,
> Dropped dead!
> What did he whisper, O poet, to thee?
> Joys of an infinite glory to be,
> Dreams of a soul by the shadowless sea,
> Dropped dead!

Mr. Speaker, for the twelfth time in the life of this Congress we have paused from the business of legislation to speak words of loving appreciation of our dead associates. The Vice-President of the United States, three Senators, and eight Representatives have passed away since the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress. The list is an unusually long one, and serves to call our thoughts vividly to the uncertainty of life, the certainty of death, and the great question of immortality. They were all good and true men, and loving friends and associates have told, in fitting words, the story of their fidelity and worth. Among them all no man possessed a larger measure of unostentatious goodness and genuine graciousness than he in whose memory our words are spoken to-day.

In this winter time of the North the grave of Austin F. Pike is covered with a thick mantle of snow, but soon the balmy days will come and the beautiful spring flowers will blossom over it—the anemone and the violet—shedding their fragrance on the air. In the hearts of the bereaved ones in the home he so recently left is the cold chill of poignant grief; but in the reunion in a better world will be compensation for the sorrow and the tears that death inevitably brings. They have to-day consolation in the thought that the life-work of him whom they mourn was made up of noble endeavor, honest effort, and conscientious fulfillment, and that among his associates in the Senate he is remembered as a man of ability, industry, integrity, and spotless life.

New Hampshire will greatly miss him, but his memory will be enshrined in the hearts of her people, and his fame be added to that of the galaxy of great names that adorn her history, and in the years to come the faithful service he rendered his State and the nation will be regarded as the most precious legacy that he could possibly have left behind him.

The form and face of Austin F. Pike we shall see no more. His soft and plaintive voice is forever hushed. His anxieties and ambitions are alike over, and his busy life is exchanged for repose and rest. But it must not be forgotten that—

> There is no death;
> The stars go down to shine on a fairer shore,
> And bright in heaven's jeweled crown they shine forever more.

When life has been truly lived; when we can look upon the grave of a dead friend and feel that the years he spent on earth were not in vain; when we know that to him "Life, death, and that vast forever is a grand, sweet song," it helps to lift us out of the rut of our own weakness, and to enable us to say, "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." And happy will it be for us all if when the dread summons comes we can meet the great change with the same calmness and uncomplaining gentleness that marked the last days of the dead Senator.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN, OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I believe there will be a general agreement by all who speak to-day of the character of Austin F. Pike that he was a man who felt profound concern for the Republic. There was that anxiety and that purpose written in his face which told the world that he was desirous of serving his constituency for their good and for the good of the whole people. My acquaintance with Mr. Pike began when I first came to the Congress in 1883, and I became at once better acquainted with him than with any other New England Senator. I soon felt that I might approach him with greater ease and confidence than any other Senator with whom I had business relations or friendly intercourse.

The story of Senator Pike is one that has been a thousand times told in the history of successful men in this country. He was the son of a farmer, reared in New England and among the hills of New Hampshire, where a struggle was then required to make a start in the world. His father was poor, and all the children were taught to labor. Among those in this frugal family who became ambitious to make himself felt in society and in the community was young Austin. He early manifested a desire to obtain an education, and he was not only willing to be sent to school, but he was willing to pay his own way while he was in school. That is a good indication in any boy. I have yet to note the career of a boy who grew up with an earnest desire to improve his mind who did not, if he possessed moral worth, in after life make himself felt wherever he went. It is the boy who goes grudgingly to school, or the boy who is unwilling to sacrifice for what he may acquire in school, who is quite likely to fall out by the way when he enters upon the real conflict of life.

Austin F. Pike was blessed with the noble ambition of which I have spoken. Like many a farmer's boy, when he first entered a courtroom he was fascinated, and he early resolved to make the law his profession. Having once settled upon a course, he held to his resolution with unwavering determination all through life. Whatever he did in the way of politics, or in any other field outside of his chosen profession, was merely incidental and a surrender of his own to the people's will. The law was his calling, his business, to the end of his life, and, as a matter of course, he was successful.

Success in the law, as in any other vocation, depends more upon the vigilance, the energy, and the determination of the man than on intellectual endowments. To become a good lawyer demands work—hard, continuous drudgery, and that is what Austin F. Pike did throughout his career. But I knew him less as a lawyer than as a man. It was my good fortune to know him in his home life, as we learn of each other here in Washington. That knowledge of him left in my mind the impressions so aptly described by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], and when that gentleman had described the characteristics of the dead Senator, as developed among those he met in social and familiar intercourse, I felt that he had said exactly what I desired myself to say.

I, too, had observed that kindly expression in his eyes and in his whole bearing which invites approach and confidence. It was this that drew me toward him at once, and soon I felt proud that I was permitted, as I believe I was, to number myself among his friends. It seemed to me that Senator Pike always felt much more concern as to how he should live than as to how or when he should die, though he must have known and felt that death was very near. The anxiety that clouded the brow of his beloved wife in this regard never appeared in the face of Austin F. Pike. He was concerned only in acting well the present hour. He was concerned for the fortunes of the Republic, and I think I never knew a man who manifested greater anxiety that our legislation here should be to the credit of the Congress and for the weal of the State.

Whatever may be said of others, we know it is true of Senator Pike that he was here with an honest and high purpose to do his duty to the constituency he immediately represented, and at the same time to enhance the glory of the whole country.

Because he had honorable ambition in his boyhood, because out of his early struggles he compelled success, because he was true to his calling and faithful to its obligations, because he served his country with sincere devotion to her interests, and because of his kindly nature, generous heart, and Christian manhood I shall hold sacred the memory of Austin F. Pike.

REMARKS OF MR. ALLEN, OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I should feel guilty of a lack of respect to the memory of an old friend of my father were I to neglect this opportunity of saying a few words, to express, in a poor way, I am sure, the great respect in which Senator Austin F. Pike was held by all who came in contact with him, either in his professional life or in his official capacity. So close have always been the relations between our New England States, from those stirring days when the foundations of our great Republic were being laid, when the men of those States stood shoulder to shoulder in the great struggle for human rights and legal representation, down through the varying fortunes of the nation, the boundary lines have been purely imaginary, and the most conspicuous men have been regarded as New Englanders more than as representing any particular State. So it is that Senator Pike was widely known in certain parts of Massachusetts, and wherever known his conspicuous qualities brought respect and esteem.

The barren soil, the cold fogs and east winds, the short and uncertain seasons of the somewhat inhospitable New England climate, while they seem at times to nourish a somewhat frosty and forbidding exterior, yet they have done much to build up a sturdy independence and undying love of country, of respect for laws and obedience to authority, and from nowhere, more that those beautiful blue hills and rugged mountains of New Hampshire have sprung a race of men whose devotion to principle, whose love of justice, whose unyielding allegiance to their country, has done so much to lay strong and deep the foundations upon which our most enduring structures of civil liberty have been reared.

Of such a race was Senator Pike; reared to habits of industry, thrift, and prudence; with wonderful activity and perseverence; denied most of the aids now deemed essential, he boldly carved for himself, and by his own efforts, a name and a fame which will long be cherished and respected not alone in the State to which he belonged, but by the nation as well, to whose welfare his last and ripest years were given.

He brought to his official duties in Washington a wonderfully well-equipped mind, stored with a rich and varied scholarship, disciplined by years of constant active work, worn smooth by attrition with the great minds which shine in the list of men who have made the bar of New Hampshire a wonderful record of historic names. Possessing a fund of common sense and sound judgment which stood him in good stead in dealing with the deversified questions upon which he was continually called upon to pass, his reports and arguments, and his official papers, as they appear from time to time, all bear witness of hard work and earnest thought, ripe scholarship, and a profound and exhaustive knowledge of the subject he had in hand. With all these intellectual qualities, he had, in addition, a simple sincerity of purpose, and an honest effort to do just what was best for his country. Bounded by no narrow or partisan purposes, his decisions came to command the confidence of all.

In his firm convictions, his devotion to his work, his heroic belief in the present greatness and the grand future of his country, in his unyielding devotion to the true principles of civil government, his life seems to have been a "light to the feet" indeed, in these often-time days of groping and feeling about in the uncertain ways of doubtful legislation. He reminds one of that family of patriots of old, who once having set their faces to the sun, found no duty too severe, no hardship too great to bear, which should turn them aside in the least degree from the line of progress they had marked out, and which was to lead to the building up on this continent the free Republic which we today enjoy.

To him public office brought great responsibilities and duties, yet he never shirked them. The business of national legislation was but the town meeting exemplified in its widest application. Such men are rare in this or any land, and with his generation are passing away a race of men who by their example of industry and perseverance, their rising to success over obstacles apparently insurmountable, have served and will continue to serve as an example and inspiration to us all. We do well to-day to turn aside from the bustle and activity of this life of great earnestness to contemplate as we pass along this figure of an honest and upright man. With his simple manners and intense earnestness he could not fail to impress all with his sincere purpose to serve his State and his country to the best of his ability. New Hampshire has many names upon her historic roll which shine with great brilliancy, but among them all none shall be found written in firmer characters or shining with a steadier light than the name of her late Senator, Austin F. Pike.

We speak of him as gone, but where? After all, how great are the limitations of human knowledge. We mourn the dead when we should rejoice; in our selfishness our own loneliness bids us mourn our own loss, while we forget the gain.

How little we know. We stand on the bridge at moonlight and watch the beautiful glimmer of the water, when suddenly from out the shadow skims a boat; we catch the sheen of the light on the oars as they rise and fall; for a brief moment the boat moves across the moon-lit path and is gone beyond our sight into the shadow on the other side, yet if we listen intently we still think we hear the measured beat of the oars. The boat has gone from our vision; yet we know it is speeding its onward way. We recline at length, on some sun-lit summer day and watch the fleecy clouds chase each other across the blue sky; we see a bird fly from the woods on yonder side and with joyous note speed its flight over our head.

We see it only long enough to catch the color of its plumage, to hear its song, and it is gone from our sight into the cover beyond, yet we know, though we see it not, that it is winging its way to its home beyond. So it is with those we love. They are with us a day, to bless us with their sunshine and their song, and are gone, yet perhaps sometimes we can catch the music of celestial notes which remind us of the lingering harmony of their lives, and we know they have not been given us for naught.

Rather let us think of them not as lost, as ended, but just as the early morning star, twinkling and sparkling in wonderful brilliancy, charms and delights us; yet as we watch in wonder the first flush in the east of coming dawn causes its brilliancy to fade and fade away, until it disappears from sight in the glorious beauty of the rising sun. So it is with these noble characters. They are not gone when we lose sight of them, but like the morning star, though lost to our sight, yet in their beauty and usefulneas they are glittering and sparkling to delight and make bright the darkness elsewhere.

When Senator Pike passed away the nation suffered a great loss. But if we profit by the life he lived and the example he bequeathed us we shall all be better and stronger men. And now his body rests in that beautiful town in New Hampshire by the Falls of the Pemigewassett, whose eternal music shall sing the song of rest and quiet. About his tomb arise the mountains he loved so much and whose cool breezes soothed and comforted him—mute monitors, in their bold and rugged beauty, to the character he represented. And when about those hills the evening sun shall cast its wondrous shadows lingering about them, so shall the soft memory of his virtues linger like these twilight hues.

Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace.

REMARKS OF MR. DINGLEY.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had no personal acquaintance with Mr. Pike until he took his seat in the Senate as Senator from New Hampshire. From that time, however, circumstances brought me much in association with him, and the longer I knew him the more highly I esteemed him.

Senator Pike's position as chairman of the Claims Committee of the Senate, before whom I was called upon to appear in several cases, gave me an opportunity to appreciate his practical ability, industry, good common sense, and fitness as a legislator. I am sure that if his failing health had not compelled him to avoid as far as possible the excitement of parliamentary labors he would have taken a very prominent position in the Senate. But even with the drawback of ill health he impressed himself on his colleagues in the Senate as a legislator of great merit.

For the last two years of Senator Pike's service in the Senate I lived under the same roof with him in this city, and came to know him intimately. His fine social qualities, his charming frankness, his kindness, his elevated principles, and his solid and substantial character made him respected and loved. He was a type of that strong New England character which has impressed itself on the nation and so largely molded our institutions.

If it be true, as I have no doubt it is, that the physical features of a country have a large influence in shaping and determining the character of its people, then I can understand how it has happened that New Hampshire has given to the nation so many men of the strong, sterling character of Senator Pike. On my way to and from Old Dartmouth, my alma mater, I have often paused to admire the grandeur and beauty of the natural scenery opened to view from a point in the town of Franklin, where Mr. Pike resided, and in the neighborhood of which was born and reared the greatest statesman which this country ever produced—the great expounder of the Constitution, Daniel Webster. In one of his speeches Webster has eloquently described the grandeur of mountain and the beauty of intervale and river; but even the matchless rhetoric of that unrivaled master of language fails to do justice to the scene. No wonder that such physical surroundings have molded men of strong character.

In the last few months of Senator Pike's life—perhaps before—he came to realize that the heart disease which was preying upon him was soon to bring to an end this mortal life. On one occasion he intimated to me that he knew that he was approaching the end, and that death might come suddenly and unannounced. He seemed to live in the conviction that every day might be his last. But although realizing that he was facing death every hour, he did not seem to lose any of his accustomed cheerfulness. The abiding faith which he possessed that this life is only the vestibule of a life beyond—that all that is real and valuable, the soul, is immortal—seemed to sustain and support him day by day. To him the lines of America's greatest poet seemed but a faint embodiment of the grand truth proclaimed by the Gospel:

> There is no Death! What seems so is transition;
> This life of mortal breath
> Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
> Whose portal we call Death.

Some would-be wise men—but oh! how weak—tell us that there is only a foolish myth in the faith which looks forward to a life beyond this which will never end; only an idle dream in the faith taught us from the Book of Books on our mother's knee, that our loved ones who have passed away are not gone from us forever, but that when our life-work is done we may meet them on "the other shore."

But even if only a "myth" or "dream," I pray that no one may take away from me the comfort and solace which come from such a faith, unless he can give something better. But the Senator whose memory we honor to-day and millions of others who "have joined the redeemed" knew in Whom they trusted; and the faith on which they so confidently leaned in life, I doubt not, has been realized beyond conception.

And now I add my garland to the wreath which we would twine in memory of him in whose honor we have turned aside. Honored Senator, faithful public servant, useful citizen, beloved husband and father—farewell!

REMARKS OF MR. CUTCHEON.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, once more we stand in the presence of the great mystery of mysteries.

Death is the great mystery only because life is the greatest mystery of all.

Life is the one great substantial thing; death, as we call it, is but the shadow. Life is activity, stir, worry, noise. Death comes and brings a pause, surcease from activity, quiet, silence.

I have stood in the midst of a New Hampshire manufacturing town, with its mile-long factories, and listened to the roar of its vast machinery, the clash-clash of its thousand looms and the whirr of its million spindles. The day is verging to its close; the black columns of smoke roll up from the towering chimneys; the lights flash out from hundreds of windows; busy hands ply warp and woof and web, and restless feet fly hither and thither amidst the constant and unceasing roar.

Such, I said, is life!

It is full of rush and roar and clash and hurrying feet and flashing lights, and the web of life is rolled up from day to day, and laid away.

But after a while there comes a sudden subsidence; the roar runs down through a minor cadence, and, with a moan, dies out. The clash of the thousand looms and the whirr of the million spindles cease; one by one the lights go out in the many rooms, and, with a shiver, the great mill stands still—dead.

Such is death. The machinery stops; the pulsation of the engine ceases; the lights are out; the windows are darkened. It is the resting of the brain, the folding of the hands, the stilling of the voice. It is the one, great, universal fact—the correlative of life.

The path of life may wind hither and thither, sometimes in the quiet of the valleys, "in the green pastures and beside the still waters;" sometimes over the storm-swept mountain heights, where tempests have beaten, and frosts have seared, and lightnings have scarred. Sometimes by the quiet homestead on the hillside, and sometimes through camps, and courts, and palace halls; but, wherever the path may wind throughout its progress, it has but one ending—it comes at last to the door of a sepulcher.

One week ago we paused in our public duties to lay our garlands upon the tomb of Logan, the intrepid soldier, the impetuous orator, the fearless statesman, the honored Senator. To-day we linger for an hour to pay a willing tribute to one who was in all things his contrast. As Logan was the type of the new, strong, impulsive, ambitious West, so Senator Pike was a good substantial type of the older, staider, and more conservative spirit of the East. Logan brought with him the wind of the prairies, the mighty roll of the Mississippi, and the stormy voice of our great Western inland seas.

Our friend whom we mourn to-day bore about with him the quiet of his native New Hampshire valleys, and reflected in his life the placid flow of the lovely and romantic Merrimac, or the bright and unvexed lapse of the Pemigewasset. And yet he had in his character the solid and inflexible substratum of his own New Hampshire hills.

Austin F. Pike was a type and representative of the standard New England boy of the best class.

Born to that most favorable lot for the development of manly character which entails neither grinding and pinching poverty upon the one hand nor wealth with its enervating luxuries and exemption from the necessity for effort upon the other, he grew up from childhood to know what it meant to work for whatever of comfort, competence, or education he possessed.

I never knew Senator Pike personally until I met him here at the Capitol in December, 1883, but he was one of the very first of the Senators with whom I became acquainted. The fact that he came from the same county in which I was born, and in which I spent all my boyhood days, and within whose soil sleep three generations of my ancestors, drew me strongly to him, and he greeted me with the warmth and heartiness of an old acquaintance.

His conversation was redolent of names and places and associations, which were deeply woven into the woof and warp of my young life. It woke the slumbering memories of the years long gone, as he talked of the hills and valleys of old Merrimac County, and the beautiful river of the same name, or the headlong Pemigewasset, which turned the busy mills of Franklin village, where the Senator spent most of his manhood life. Hard by, looking out over the green intervales, and shadowed by the great brooding trees, was the old Webster farm, where the great Daniel, whose fame as lawyer, statesman, and orator still stands unequaled in the great American pantheon, grew from boyhood to manhood.

Just here below the village is the little island which has been read of by almost every American school boy of the last generation, where the heroic mother, Mrs. Dustin, slew her savage captors, in the early and troublous days of New England. To the westward, a few miles distant, old Kearsarge Mountain, a magnificent lift of primeval rock, with its bare back of uncovered granite, shoulders up against the clouds, the very picture and embodiment of "the everlasting hills."

Away to the north and east rose the towering summits of Washington and Adams and La Fayette, the solemn and majestic sentries of New Hampshire's northern frontier.

It was among scenes and associations like these that Senator Pike spent all the days of his boyhood and manhood. Here he learned the gospel of work, and the divine decree, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto it shalt thou return."

His youth was spent in the usual struggle of the New England boy for a living and an education.

The scanty and not over-fertile soil of New Hampshire, ground down from the upturned granite mountains by the frosts and snows, the suns and rains, the Titanic forces of a million years, does not yield its rewards except to hard blows and strenuous effort.

I believe it was Charles Mackay who said of the Western prairie that you can "tickle it with a hoe and it will laugh with a harvest." But it is not so with the rocky hills of New Hampshire. Sweat and back-ache are necessary fertilizers on her hill-side farms.

With steady step, however, he went forward, from the school to the academy, from the academy to the college, thence, reluctantly turning before his course was completed, to the law office, where he came under the tuition of Judge Nesmith, whose name, in my boyhood days, was linked with that of Webster as intimate friend and neighbor, and with whom afterward Senator Pike became associated in the practice of the law.

Senator Pike was first of all and above all a lawyer. He accepted public office as a duty, because his neighbors called him to it, and he felt that in this land, where the people rule and where the citizens must administer the affairs of state, every good citizen ought to contribute his share to the public weal by bearing his proportion in the labors, cares, and responsibilities of public station.

He was often called to office because he was trusted. His fellow-citizens had confidence in his fidelity, his industry, his intelligence, and his unswerving honesty. He first entered public official life in 1850, as a member of the State Legislature, and in 1851 and 1852 was speaker of the house.

I well remember that in 1851, being then a pupil in the military institute in my native town of Pembroke, within sight of the capitol, I attended the opening of the Legislature when Senator Pike was first elevated to the office of speaker. How little I then dreamed as I sat a boy in the gallery and saw him assume the gavel of the house that after more than thirty years—most eventful years—we should meet in this Capitol. Little did I think that in that military school, in the quiet valley of the Merrimac, I was unconsciously preparing for the part I was to act in a very great drama upon a very wide stage. And yet the very next time I ever saw the late Senator was when we met in this Capitol, after the lapse of a generation, and after the tempestuous waves of a great war had swept over our land.

A few years later, in 1857 and 1858, Senator Pike served in the senate of his State, but without intermitting his practice of the law. His residence, only a score of miles from the capital and on the direct line of railroad communication, made it possible for him to serve the State and his large clientage at the same time.

Again, the people of his district claimed his service in the National Legislature in the Forty-third Congress, where he acquitted himself with credit.

In the memorable Senatorial contest of 1883, after a long and somewhat embittered struggle, the representatives of his State turned to him as the solution of their difficulties; and so he came to the national capital as United States Senator, as he had to the Legislature of his State, not because he sought office but because he was willing to serve.

Of his service in the Senate I need not speak. He had scarcely completed the half of his term when he was called away. He was not conspicuous except for his sterling sense and his firmness and fidelity to duty as he understood it.

When he returned to the Senate in the Forty-ninth Congress he was conscious that the dread shadow was creeping over his life. He was weary and restless amid the gaieties and whirl of this capital, and he longed for sunny hills, the quiet nooks, the clear streams, and the green intervales of his own Merrimac valley.

He went back once more to look upon the friendly faces of the Sentinel Mountains, and to rest his tired body on the breast of the everlasting hills.

There, in the scenes of his boyhood, in the midst of the friends of his manhood years, patiently waiting while the shadow turned upon the dial of life, on the 8th of October last, at the age of sixty-seven years, he quietly, painlessly, passed through the shadow and into the brightness of the everlasting day.

Fit time to pass away!

The woods had put on the glory of the dying year; the birds of passage were seeking their Southern homes; the apples hung ripe in the orchard or fell over-ripe to the ground. The soft, dreamy haze of the evening of the year hung upon the distant hills, and all things admonished that it was the time of "the sere and yellow leaf." He passed with the passing year. Let us pause to-day and pay honor to the man of sterling qualities; the man who made his own way in the world by honest work; the man who commanded the confidence of his fellow-citizens; the man who rose by solid merit and enduring worth, step by step, to the highest office in the gift of the people of his State; the man true to his State, true to his friends, true to right.

Such a man was Austin F. Pike.

Mr. HAYNES. I now move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and accordingly, in pursuance of the last resolution, the House (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 23, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DONATION OF UNSERVICEABLE MUSKETS.

Mr. CONGER. I notice from the reading of the Journal the indefinite postponement of two bills reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Missouri [Mr COCKRELL]. I wish to have those bills placed on the Calendar. They are the bill (S. 2885) donating fifty unserviceable muskets and bayonets to Wallace Brown's Post, No. 190, Grand Army of the Republic, of Birch Run, Mich., and the bill (S. 3006) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to send to Wallace Brown's Post, No. 190, of Birch Run, Mich., fifty unserviceable muskets and accouterments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the order by which the bills were indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and they will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee. The Chair hears no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of Andrew Crawford Post, No. 6, Grand Army of the Republic, at New Philadelphia, Ohio; a petition of Watkins Andrews Post, No. 352, Grand Army of the Republic, at Trimble, Ohio; a petition of Burnham Post, No. 358, Grand Army of the Republic, at Madison, Ohio; a petition of Hazlett Post, No. 81, Grand Army of the Republic, Lanesville, Ohio; a petition of O. G. Sherwin Post, No. 360, Grand Army of the Republic, at Westborough, Ohio; a petition of Thoburn Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, at Martin's Ferry, Ohio; a petition of Old John Brown Post, No. 400, Grand Army of the Republic, at Oxford, Ohio; a petition of Dell Roy Post, No. 438, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; a petition of Howard Post, No. 150, Grand Army of the Republic, at McComb, Ohio; a petition of Wood Post, No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, at Tontogany, Ohio; a petition of mass-meeting of soldiers of twelfth Congressional district of Ohio; a petition of Wright Post, No. 497, Grand Army of the Republic, at Gratis, Ohio; a petition of Olean Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, at Eaton, Ohio; a petition of West Post, No. 544, Grand Army of the Republic, at Milford, Ohio, and a petition of Trago Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Tiro, Ohio, praying for the passage of the dependent pensions bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Grand Rapids, Ohio, praying for local option in Washington city; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a letter from Professor Spencer F. Baird, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and Director of the United States National Museum, in relation to providing a case for an American flag made out of American silk and presented to the Government by Joseph Newmann; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan; resolutions of Major M. Dickenson Post, No. 345, Grand Army of the Republic, of South Haven, Mich.; resolutions of Fairchild Post, No. 228, Grand Army of the Republic, of Grass Lake, Mich.; resolutions of William Richardson Post, No. 214, Grand Army of the Republic, of Millington, Mich., and resolutions of Albert Nye Post, No. 202, Grand Army of the Republic, of Romeo, Mich., in favor of the passage of the so-called dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FARWELL presented resolutions adopted by the Coulterville (Ill.) Grand Army Post, No. 259, favoring the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON presented resolutions adopted by Lorenzo Fort Post, No. 438, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; resolutions adopted by Sion Bass Post, No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; resolutions adopted by De la Hunt Post, No. 152, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; resolutions adopted by John F. Rucker Post, No. 165, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, and resolutions adopted by Rensselaer Post, No. 84, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a resolution of the Legislature of California; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 4.

Whereas it is reported that the honorable Secretary of State of the United States has recommended the reduction of the duty on raisins;

Whereas such reduction, if made, would be injurious to a large and growing industry in this State: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives be requested to use all honorable endeavors to prevent such reduction.

Resolved, That the governor of the State of California be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and one to the Secretary of State of the United States.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of Thomas M. Redshaw Post, No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, Ansonia, Conn.; a petition of Hebble Post, No. 23, Grand Army of the Republic, Stamford, Conn.; a petition of Philo M. Trowbridge Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, Woodbury, Conn., and a petition of James E. Moore Post, No. 18, Grand Army of the Republic, Danbury, Conn., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of Dr. R. B. Smith and 42 other veteran soldiers of the late war, of Tioga, Pa.; a petition of Lieutenant D. H. Wilson Post, No. 134, Grand Army of the Republic, of Mifflintown, Pa., and a petition of Heilner Post, No. 232, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lykens, Pa., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill notwithstanding the objections of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Annual Encampment of the Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, urging the repeal of the limitation in the act granting arrears of pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented resolutions adopted by a joint meeting of the Minneapolis (Minn.) posts of the Grand Army of the Republic requesting Senators and Members of the House of Representatives to vote for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Lincoln Post, No. 26, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Richland, Minn., in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON. On behalf of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], who is unavoidably absent, I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan favoring the passage of a law to adjust certain accounts between the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD, and lie on the table.

The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure the passage of a law "to adjust certain accounts between the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia," as set forth in House bill No. 2776, and dated January 7, 1886.

Whereas on January 7, 1886, Hon. W. T. Price, of Wisconsin, introduced in the House House bill No. 2776, which was referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary; and on May 24, 1886, Hon. WADE HAMPTON, of South Carolina, introduced in the Senate an amendment to Senate bill "to adjust certain accounts between the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia:"

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to each State and Territory of the United States and the District of Columbia a sum equal to all collections made from said States and Territories and the District of Columbia under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the amendatory act thereto, with such additional credits as under said act they are entitled to have in consequence of having paid any portion thereof without expense of collection to the United States; and such sums also as have been collected from lands or owners thereof under supplemental acts on any account whatever.

"SEC. 2. That all moneys still due to the United States on the quota of direct tax apportioned by section 8 of the act of Congress, approved August 5, 1861, are hereby remitted and relinquished.

"SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to reimburse each under the provisions of this act; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to pay the same: Provided, That when the same or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, have been collected from any citizen thereof, either directly or by sale, resale, or lease of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or District of Columbia for the benefit of those of its citizens from whom it was collected, or their legal representatives."

Whereas the foregoing bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall credit each State with the amount of money assessed against it for direct taxes under the act of August 5, 1861;

Whereas the effect of the passage by Congress of said bill will be to refund to those States which have paid the amounts of such assessments to the extent of the sums by them so paid, and to release those States which have not paid from hereafter paying all said taxes, and also from all future liability to pay the same. While the right of the General Government to raise revenue by direct taxation is unquestioned, it is patent that this direct tax was in the nature of an enforced loan, and it was made in this form only because it was required to meet the great exigency then upon the country; and

Whereas several of the States now owe the General Government from a quarter to a half million dollars each on account of this direct tax, while others have paid their full quota: Therefore.

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to urge the passage of the bill hereinbefore referred to, and use their best endeavors to secure to the State the amount paid to the United States by this forced tax.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the Senators and Representatives by the governor of Michigan.

This joint resolution is ordered to take immediate effect.

CHARLES J. MONROE,

DANIEL P. MARKEY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 19, 1887.

C. G. LUCE, Governor.

Mr. MILLER presented a memorial of citizens and captains of vessels of Staten Island, New York, and Perth Amboy, N. J., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called McPherson bill, relative to the Arthur Kill bridge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Sempronius Post, No. 479, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York; the petition of Harry Lee Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and the petition of soldiers of Schoharie, N. Y., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by Ransom Post, No. 99, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Mason, Ill.; resolutions adopted by John A. Logan Post, No. 450, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Evanston, Ill.; resolutions adopted by N. Cowen Post, No. 557, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Staunton, Ill.; resolutions adopted by William J. Smith Post, No. 167, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Potaka, Ill.; resolutions adopted by Hunter Post, No. 584, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Sandoval, Ill.; resolutions adopted by Coulterville Post, No. 259, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Coulterville, Ill.; resolutions adopted by Albert Wood Post, No. 175, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Oblong, Ill.; and resolutions adopted by J. G. Brills Post, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Norris City, Ill., urging the passage of the dependent soldiers' pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of Mallory Post, No. 285, Grand Army of the Republic, Sayre, Pa.; a petition of Adjutant Martin Post, No. 510, Grand Army of the Republic, New Oxford, Pa.; a petition of citizens of Birchrunville, Pa.; a petition of Heilner Post, No. 232, Grand Army of the Republic, Lykens, Pa., and a petition of Eben N. Ford Post, No. 336, Grand Army of the Republic, Warren, Pa., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented a petition of the Farmers' National Congress of the United States, praying that there be created the office of secretary of agriculture; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of J. G. White Post, No. 108, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, located at Washington, Iowa, and a petition of Frank M. Thomas Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill recently vetoed by the President, notwithstanding his objections; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I also present the memorial of J. W. Yost and 32 others, settlers on the Des Moines River land in Iowa, in which they state that they are settlers on the Des Moines River land and citizens of the Des Moines valley, Iowa. They earnestly memorialize Congress in opposition to the passage of any indemnity bill now pending or hereafter to be introduced into Congress, as an indemnity bill would be another steal from the Government, and the river company, who are the only parties asking for indemnity, would get the benefit of it in the end. They further state:

Let this matter be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, as was provided by our bill vetoed by the President in the last session of Congress, or pass a bill forfeiting the entire grant and restore it to the public domain. That the settlers don't want indemnity; we want our homes that justly and rightly belong to us.

I also present a like memorial from J. R. Cowgill and 30 other settlers on the Des Moines River land; also a like memorial from L. P. Peterson and 35 other settlers on the Des Moines River land.

I move that these memorials be ordered to lie on the table, inasmuch as the bill for the relief of those settlers has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Edward B. Clayton Post, No. 134, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Strong, Me., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill notwithstanding the President's veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FAIR presented a memorial of the mayor and common council of Socorro, N. Mex., remonstrating against the passage of House bill 9985, for the confirmation of private land claim No. 107, which includes the city of Socorro, N. Mex.; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SAWYER presented resolutions of T. J. Hungerford Post, No. 39, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Spring Green, Wis.; resolutions of H. J. Lewis Post, No. 129, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Neenah, Wis., and resolutions of George M. West Post, No. 165, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Hartford, Wis., in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 7 citizens of Dansville, N. Y., praying for an appropriation of moneys for the benefit of certain States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I present a number of petitions, numerously signed by citizens of different counties in the State of Nebraska, praying for the passage of what is known as the Miller pleuro-pneumonia bill. As that bill is pending on the Calendar, I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Cutler Post, No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, Togus, Me., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McPHERSON presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 3183) amending an act authorizing the Arthur Kill bridge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back the memorial of the heirs of the late Capt. Emmet Crawford, and also the bill (S. 3086) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of the late Capt. Emmet Crawford, United States Army, killed in Mexico by Mexican troops, January 11, 1886, with a request that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial and the bill, and that the memorialists have leave to withdraw the papers, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The committee instruct me to say that they have made no examination into the merits of this case, and that they have formed no judgment whatever in relation to it; that the action which they have adopted they have been led to by the request of the claimants themselves, the matter being now presented, as it is understood, to the Government of Mexico through the State Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reports the memorial and the bill named by him, and asks that the committee be discharged from their urther consideration and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nebraska that the friends of the petitioners have desired this course to be taken so that they may pursue their remedy against the Mexican Government.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I interpose no objection to the motion.

Mr. FRYE. I so stated in making the report.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed and the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11063) extending the charter of "The President and Directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia," reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7643) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart;

A bill (H. R 3930) for the relief of Wells C. McCool;

A bill (H. R. 6758) to authorize the President to confer brevet rank on officers of the Army for gallant services in Indian campaigns; and

A bill (H. R. 1449) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry B. Jay.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3100) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning detail of Army officers to educational institutions, &c.; and

A bill (H. R. 5535) for the relief of Washington L. Parvin and Henry A. Greene.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 798) for the relief of Stephen O'Connor, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB subsequently said: The bill (H. R. 798) for the relief of Stephen O'Connor was reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs this morning and indefinitely postponed. I move that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be placed on the Calendar instead of postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill concerning the unveiling of the statue of the late Maj. Gen. James A. Garfield, to be erected in the city of Washington, reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3259) to encourage the holding of a national industrial exposition of the arts, mechanics, and products of the colored race throughout the United States of America, to be held in the year 1888, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2064) for the relief of Robert N. Blake, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4585) granting a pension to Mrs. Fannie Carman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN. I report favorably, with amendments, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (S. 3160) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway Company across the Missouri River at Sioux City, Iowa, and for other purposes. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it go to the Calendar, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

LAWS RELATING TO BRIDGES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print copies of "a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters," &c., to report it favorably with amendments. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed the usual number of copies of "a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters," including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress; and that there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; said compilation to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were, in line 1, after the word "Resolved," to insert the words "by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring);" and in line 3, after the word "Department," to strike out "1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read as it would stand if amended.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will state that the resolution, as proposed to be amended, is simply to print 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department. It is not considered by the committee necessary to publish the compilation for the use of Congress. The demand for it will be limited and can be supplied by the War Department.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be reported as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the usual number of copies of "a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters," including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress; and that there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department; said compilation to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if the resolution includes the private bridge laws that have been passed, or only the public laws.

Mr. MANDERSON. It requires the printing of all the bridge laws that have been passed by Congress. I do not know what the Senator means by private bridge laws. Any law that authorizes the construction of a bridge over a navigable stream is included in the terms of the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. There are general laws on the statute-book providing for bridging particular streams generally, and there are special laws for particular bridges.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it will reach both classes.

Mr. CONGER. It should reach both.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think so. That is the object.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR ACTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print copies of "A compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors," &c., to report it favorably with amendments. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed the usual number of copies of "A compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors," including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress; and that there be printed, in addition to said usual number, 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; said compilation to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were, after the word "Resolved," in line 1, to insert the words "by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring);" and in line 5, after the word "Department," to strike out "1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives."

Mr. MANDERSON. The last amendment reduces the number to 1,000 for the War Department.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the wording of the resolution provide for printing all the acts that have ever been passed for the improvement of rivers and harbors? Is that the intention of it?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is the intention. I will ask the Secretary to read a letter from the Chief of Engineers, which is forwarded by the Secretary of War, and which is the foundation of the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. I wish we might first hear the resolution read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as reported will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the usual number of copies of "A compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors," including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and that there be printed in addition to said usual number 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department, said compilation to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the letter be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter referred to by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, February 1, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, requesting the views of this Department upon the necessity for printing, under the direction of the Secretary of War, a new compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the construction of bridges over navigable waters, including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and a similar compilation of the laws relating to river and harbor improvements; and desiring to be informed of the probable number of pages which each volume will contain.

In reply I beg to invite attention to the inclosed report of the 29th instant on the subject, from the Chief of Engineers, giving the information requested by you, and expressing the opinion that the proposed publications would prove of great value to his office.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. CHAS. F. MANDERSON,
Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I understood the letter to refer to a request brought out as to the number of pages which the volume would contain.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is a letter from the Chief of Engineers accompanying the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of the Chief of Engineers will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference to this office, of the letter of the chairman of the Committee on Public Printing of the United States Senate in regard to the necessity for printing a compilation of the bridge laws of the United States, and also of the laws of the United States relating to river and harbor improvements, and to report as follows:

The constant and increasing demands made upon this office for examination of bridge bills introduced in the two Houses of Congress rendered it imperatively necessary that the laws in regard to the construction of bridges across navigable waters be collected and put in such form as to render them accessible at all times without recourse to the United States Statutes. A compilation was accordingly made in this office, embracing the laws from March 2, 1805, to March 3, 1881, the printing of 300 copies of which was authorized by the Secretary of War January 12, 1882.

The number of pages required for a compilation of all laws, to include those passed by the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, is estimated at 300, and such a compilation could not fail to prove of great value in facilitating the investigation of bridge questions.

In regard to the compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors, it may be said that such a compilation became a necessity to the proper and speedy transaction of the business of this office in reference to those improvements, and one was accordingly made in 1877, which embraced all laws on the subject from August 11, 1790 (the date of approval of the first act), to include the river and harbor act of August 14, 1876. Three hundred copies of it were printed by authority of the Secretary of War. This compilation is now exhausted, and the printing of additional copies as proposed in the resolution of the Senate would prove of great value. The compilation of this office contained 251 pages octavo, and the projected new edition would probably comprise 444 pages (long primer type).

The letter of the chairman of the Committee on Public Printing of the Senate is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether there is any estimate of the cost of printing this compilation of river and harbor laws extending back to 1790.

Mr. MANDERSON. No, there is no estimate of the cost. It is a work that is already printed. The compilation will simply take the river and harbor acts which have been passed since the year 1877, and add them to the compilation already made, and print the river and harbor acts to the end of the present session of Congress, making, as will be seen by the letter of the Chief of Engineers, a volume of about 440 pages, the cost of which will be, I think, $1,060. It is stated in the report of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. It is very possible that I do not see the necessity for the compilation as many others do, but for the life of me I can not see any particular necessity for printing the river and harbor acts which were passed before the commencement of the present century.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Both these resolutions were introduced and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and having received the consideration of that committee were reported favorably with the recommendation that they be referred to the Committee on Printing. These publications are very essential to the proper and speedy discharge of the duties at the office of the Chief of Engineers, and they are of great importance to all persons connected with legislation in both Houses of Congress. They are small volumes; the cost is inconsiderable, and I think if the Senator from Connecticut knew of the frequent reference which must be had to these facts, the compilation of these laws in a small volume of this kind would appear to him to be of great importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee on Printing.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have the resolution referred back to the Committee on Printing, and suggest to them that it be modified and amended so that there may be a tabulated statement of the expenditures of the appropriations with the allotment to each of the particular works named in the acts and the aggregate since the work commenced. That is a work which has cost many of us days and weeks of time in examining. There is no tabulated statement of that kind except as it has been preserved in the office. It could very easily be made, and would show to those interested at a glance what works have received appropriations and how much each year, and what the whole expenditure from the beginning of these works of improvement of rivers and harbors has been.

The first appropriation of that particular kind, except some special appropriations before, was made in 1824. The work which is ordered printed here has been prepared from a synopsis of the laws from necessity in the Engineer Department and was published up to 1877, but there has never been published any tabulated statement of the appropriations with the allotment from general appropriations which could be referred to.

I think I have spent several days of time during several months in carefully preparing for the use of the Committee on Commerce these tabulated statements for particular times. The engineer in charge of this department has often wished that Congress would authorize the preparation of such a statement for the use of the office from the commencement of appropriations by the Government down to the present time. There is no question but what every one familiar with the duties of the members of the Committee on Commerce would know the necessity of such a publication.

If the volume is published as proposed, of course each member can take it and make for himself at great labor a tabulated statement, if he desires it, of appropriations to particular improvements, or allotments from appropriations to improvements, and each one for himself can work this out. If published as I propose, it would be one of the most valuable things for the use of the Committee on Commerce and one of necessity in the Engineer's office. If the Senator has no objection, I suggest that the resolution be so amended.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the Senator will make that the subject-matter of a separate resolution. I think it would be reached better in that way.

Mr. CONGER. I want to have the tabulated statement published in this same volume.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think, on account of the time it would take in order to obtain the cost of such a compilation, the chances are that the resolution would be defeated. However, I do not care one way or the other, if the Senator insists on it.

Mr. CONGER. This will be a valuable publication, and I should be unwilling to have any amendment made that might defeat it, but I thought the resolution originated here and such an amendment could be made in a few moments, and the resolution reported again to-morrow.

Mr. MANDERSON. No; under the rules it would be necessary that the cost of the compilation should be ascertained and an estimate be made of the cost of printing. Under the law as it stands, the Printing Committee is not authorized to report in favor of printing anything until it has received such an estimate, and all these reports are based upon carefully prepared estimates. It would take perhaps several days to ascertain the cost of printing the compilation with the statement the Senator refers to.

Mr. CONGER. These tables would occupy probably only four or five pages of the same book and the expense of printing would be comparatively slight, but the advantage of it would be very great. I shall not insist upon it, although it is only a proposition to print in this same book and in connection with it, and a separate resolution would have to go through the same process which the pending resolution has to go through. I think an amendment could be made either in the Senate or by the committee.

I ask that the resolution lie over until to-morrow morning and I will try and prepare an amendment in regard to the tables which I have asked for, and I shall ask unanimous consent that it shall be inserted then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over until to-morrow under the rule.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 3340) increasing the pension of Mary Minor Hoxey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3341) for the relief of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], which comes over under objection, and which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session the Senate, at the conclusion of the morning business, will consider Senate bills favorably reported by the committee until 2 o'clock on each alternate day, and House bills on the other alternate day, commencing first with the Senate bills.

Mr. HARRIS. I make the question of order on that. It changes a rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in conformity with the eighth rule, and consequently not in order.

Mr. CALL. What is the ground?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That it does not set out the number of the rule proposed to be changed or the nature of the modification proposed, as the rule prescribes.

Mr. CALL. Can it not be amended in that respect now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule requires the specification of the particular rule proposed to be changed.

Mr. HARRIS. One day's written notice is required by the rule.

Mr. CALL. I propose to make the resolution conform to the opinion of the Chair. It is held in law that matters of no importance are not to be considered. The resolution was introduced yesterday, and certainly that is notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it has been the uniform construction of the rule to require the specification of the rule proposed to be altered and of the specific change. The point of order is sustained.

COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], which comes over under objection, and which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and they are hereby, authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess of Congress, at such places in the United States as they may deem proper; and that they be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into all matters connected with the subject of sea-coast fortifications and other works of defense, with power to administer oaths and take testimony, and to employ a stenographer and a clerk; and that the actual necessary expenses of the said committee, properly incurred in the execution of this resolution, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate in the usual manner, upon the order of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CAMERON. Let that go over.

Mr. DOLPH. That was to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table if there be no objection.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that yesterday during my absence from the Chamber a motion was entered to reconsider the vote whereby the Military Academy appropriation bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion was entered.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have it considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. CALL. I merely entered the motion to reconsider with a view to offering an amendment to which there is no objection, I understand. It is approved by the chairman of the committee, I believe.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida now moves to reconsider the vote ordering the bill to a third reading.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. CALL. I move to amend, in line 75, after the word "quartermaster," by striking out "one thousand two hundred" and inserting "one thousand six hundred and fifty;" in line 77, after the word "records," by striking out "one thousand two hundred" and inserting "one thousand five hundred;" and in line 79, after the word "treasurer," by striking out "one thousand two hundred" and inserting "one thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

For clerk to the disbursing officer and quartermaster, $1,650.
For clerk to adjutant in charge of cadet records, $1,500.
For clerk to treasurer, $1,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I make a point of order on the last amendment. It is not estimated for. I suggest to the Senator from Florida that the first amendment be $1,500 instead of $1,650, so that those two officers may receive just what they have received for a good many years.

Mr. CALL. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 75, after the word "quartermaster," it is proposed to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

For clerk to the disbursing officer and quartermaster, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 77, after the word "records," to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

For clerk to adjutant in charge of cadet records, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The other amendment is ruled out of order.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order, under what is commonly known as the Harris rule, and House bills will be proceeded with in their order.

Mr. MAXEY. During my absence House bill 4841, Calendar No. 1642, was informally passed over without prejudice. I ask that it be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now in order. The Senator from Texas calls for the consideration of the bill named by him.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4841) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes.

Mr. VEST. Is the consideration of that bill subject to objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. VEST. I object.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to proceed with the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri objecting to the consideration of this bill, the Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to its consideration notwithstanding the objection. The question is on that motion.

Mr. VEST. The motion is not debatable, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 37, noes not counted.

Mr. CULLOM. Is this bill open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer the following amendment as two additional sections:

SEC. 9. That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 10. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall hereafter be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

Mr. DAWES. It is impossible to hear what is going on, and no one can tell what that amendment is. I wish either it might be read in such a tone that we can hear it or that there may be order to enable a voice to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators complain that they can not hear the reading at the desk.

Mr. VEST. There is so much conversation that we can not hear what is going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order. The amendment will be again read. Senators are requested to keep their seats, and gentlemen entitled to the floor are requested to take seats and suspend conversation. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add as additional sections the following:

SEC. 9. That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 10. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall hereafter be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

Mr. MAXEY. I trust that the amendment will be voted down. The matter of the proposed amendment is entirely foreign to the bill. The bill appoints no judge. The judges are already appointed. It appoints no marshal and no district attorney. It creates no new court whatever. This amendment proposes to increase the salaries of judges throughout the United States; and whilst I have no objection whatever to the principle embraced in the amendment, the effect of it would be to kill this bill, which is of the utmost importance to my people. I trust that the Senator from Illinois will withhold it and place it somewhere else where it will not have that effect.

Mr. CULLOM. I certainly have no disposition to kill the bill of the Senator from Texas, and I do not apprehend that the amendment would result in that way, for the reason, as I understand the facts, that the other body which has had this subject under consideration has, more than once perhaps, expressed itself in favor of the proposition by almost a two-thirds vote; and that being my understanding I think that if it was attached to this bill it would go through the other House very readily. If the Senator desires to ask for a conference, that can be done and it will not be delayed for want of time.

Mr. MAXEY. We did pass a bill, I believe, precisely in the words of the Senator's amendment. That bill is before the House and has been for a long time, so that they can act on that bill if they wish, and there is an impropriety in attaching it to this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. The probability is that the other House, under their rules—if I may be allowed to refer to the other House—will not be able to get the bill up for consideration. If I thought the offering of this amendment to the Senator's bill would seriously jeopardize its passage, I would not feel like insisting on it.

Mr. MAXEY. I have not a doubt that it will jeopardize the passage of this bill, and very materially.

Mr. CULLOM. As this bill is a bill that the Senator from Texas is anxious about, and as he will not be a member of this body very much longer, I will withdraw the amendment with the understanding that I shall offer it to some other bill, unless it becomes evident that all the provisions of it are likely to become a law by the passage of a bill already in the other House. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I offer an amendment by way of a substitute for this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That a United States court is hereby established whose jurisdiction shall extend over the Indian Territory, bounded as follows, to wit: North by the State of Kansas, east by the States of Missouri and Arkansas, south by the State of Texas, and west by the State of Texas and the Territory of New Mexico; and a judge shall be appointed for said court by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold his office for a term of four years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified, and receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, to be paid from the Treasury of the United States in like manner as the salaries of judges of United States district courts.

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an attorney and marshal for said court, who shall continue in office for four years, and they shall discharge the like duties and receive the same fees and salary as now received by the United States attorney and marshal for the western district of Arkansas. The said marshal may appoint one or more deputies, who shall have the same powers, perform the like duties, and be removable in like manner as other deputy United States marshals; and said marshal shall give bond, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the judge of said court, in the sum of $10,000, conditioned as by law required in regard to the bonds of other United States marshals.

SEC. 3. That a clerk of said court shall be appointed by the judge thereof, who shall reside and keep his office at the place of holding said court. Said clerk shall perform the same duties, be subject to the same liabilities, and shall receive the same fees and compensation as the clerk of the United States court for the western district of Arkansas; and before entering upon his duties he shall give bond in the sum of $10,000, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the judge of said court, conditioned that he will discharge his duties as required by law.

SEC. 4. That the judge appointed under the provisions of this act shall take the same oath required by law to be taken by the judges of the district courts of the United States; and the oath, when taken as in such cases provided, shall be duly certified by the officer before whom the same shall have been taken to the clerk of the court herein established, to be by him recorded in the records of said court. The clerk, marshal, and deputy marshals shall take before the judge of said court the oath required by law of the clerk, marshal, and deputy marshals of United States district courts, the same to be entered of record in said court as provided by law in like cases.

SEC. 5. That the court hereby established shall have criminal jurisdiction over the Indian Territory, as herein bounded, in all cases in which the district court for the western district of Arkansas may now exercise jurisdiction; and upon conviction of any of the crimes or offenses named in chapter 4, title 28, and chapters 3 and 4, title 70, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all subsequent enactments amendatory thereof, the same punishment shall be inflicted by said court upon the persons convicted as is provided by existing laws of the United States for like crimes and offenses; and all the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to criminal procedure and as to limitations shall apply to the court created by this act. All causes pending in the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas, the United States district court at Wichita and Fort Scott, in the district of Kansas, and the United States district court for the northern district of Texas, at the date of the passage of this act, which originated in the Indian Territory, or in which any citizen or resident of said Territory, or any member of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, or Creek Nation, or of any other Indian tribe in said Territory, may be a party, shall be transferred to the court provided for in this act; and the clerks of said courts shall certify and transmit to the clerk of the court herein established the record and all papers on file in said causes.

SEC. 6. That the court hereby established shall have jurisdiction in all civil cases between citizens of the United States who are residents of the Indian Territory, or between citizens of the United States, or of any State or Territory therein, and any person or persons residing or found in the Indian Territory, and when the value of the thing in controversy, or damages or money claimed, shall amount to $100.

The provisions of chapter 18, title 13, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall govern such court, so far as applicable: Provided, That the practice, pleadings, and forms of proceeding in civil causes shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, and forms of proceeding existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the State of Arkansas, any rule of court to the contrary notwithstanding; and the plaintiff shall be entitled to like remedies by attachment or other process against the property of the defendant, and for like causes, as now provided by the laws of said State.

The final judgment or decree of the court hereby established, in cases where the value of the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, to be ascertained by the oath of either party, or of other competent witnesses, exceeds $1,000, may be reviewed and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of error or appeal, in the same manner and under the same regulations as the final judgments and decrees of a circuit court.

SEC. 7. That two terms of said court shall be held each year at Muscogee, in said Territory, on the first Monday in May and November, and such special sessions as may be necessary for the dispatch of the business in said court at such times as the judge may deem expedient; and he may adjourn such special sessions to any other time previous to a regular term; and the marshal shall procure suitable rooms for the use and occupation of the court hereby created.

SEC. 8. That all proceedings in said court shall be had in the English language; and bona fide male residents of the Indian Territory, over twenty-one years of age, and understanding the English language sufficiently to comprehend the proceedings of the court, shall be competent to serve as jurors in said court, but shall be subject to exemptions and challenges as provided by law in regard to jurors in the district court for the western district of Arkansas.

SEC. 9. That the jurors shall be selected as follows: The court at its regular terms shall select three jury commissioners, possessing the qualifications prescribed for jurymen, and who have no suits in court requiring the intervention of a jury; and the same persons shall not act as jury commissioners more than once in the same year. The judge shall administer to each commissioner the following oath:

"You do swear to discharge faithfully the duties required of you as jury commissioner; that you will not knowingly select any one as juryman whom you believe unfit and not qualified; that you will not make known to any one the name of any juryman selected by you and reported on your list to the court until after the commencement of the next term of this court; that you will not, directly or indirectly, converse with any one selected by you as a juryman concerning the merits of any cause or procedure to be tried at the next term of this court: so help you God."

SEC. 10. That the jury commissioners, after they have been appointed and sworn, shall retire to a jury-room, or some other apartment designated by the judge, and be kept free from the intrusion of any person, and shall not separate without leave of the court until they have completed the duties required of them; that they shall select from the bona fide male residents of the Territory such number of qualified persons as the court shall designate, not less than fifty, free from all legal exception, of fair character and approved integrity, of sound judgment and reasonable information, to serve as grand jurors at the next term of court; shall write the names of such persons on separate pieces of paper, of as near the same size and appearance as may be, and fold the same so that the names thereon may not be seen. The names so written and folded shall be then deposited in a box, and after they shall be shaken and well mixed, the commissioners shall draw from said box the names of twenty-three persons, one by one, and record the same as drawn, which record shall be certified and signed by the commissioners, and indorsed "List of grand jurors."

SEC. 11. That the said commissioners shall then proceed to draw in like manner nine other names, which shall be recorded in like manner on another paper, which shall be certified and signed by the commissioners, and indorsed "List of alternate grand jurors." The two lists shall be inclosed and sealed so that the contents can not be seen, and indorsed "List of grand jurors," designating for what term of the court they are to serve, which indorsement shall be signed by the commissioners, and the same shall be delivered to the judge in open court.

SEC. 12. That the commissioners shall also select from the bona fide male residents of the Territory such number of persons as the court shall direct, not less than sixty, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 8, to serve as petit jurors at the next term of court, and shall draw and make a list of 37, as prescribed in section 10, which list shall be indorsed "List of petit jurors," designating the term; and said commissioners shall then proceed to draw in like manner twelve other names, which shall be written on another paper, which shall be certified and signed by the commissioners, and indorsed "List of alternate petit jurors," designating the term for which they are to serve; and said lists shall be delivered by the commissioners in open court to the judge, and the judge shall deliver the lists to the clerk in open court, and administer to the clerk and his deputies the following oath:

"You do swear that you will not open the jury-lists now delivered to you; that you will not, directly or indirectly, converse with any one selected as a petit juror concerning any suit pending and for trial in this court at the next term, unless by leave of the court: so help you God."

SEC. 13. That within thirty days before the next term, and not before, the clerk shall open the envelopes and make a fair copy of the lists of grand jurors and alternate grand jurors, also a fair list of petit jurors and of alternate petit jurors, and give the same to the marshal, who shall, at least fifteen days prior to the first day of the next term, summon the persons named as grand and petit jurors and alternate grand and petit jurors to attend on the first day of said term as grand or petit jurors, by giving personal notice to each, or by leaving a written notice at the juror's place of residence with some person over ten years of age and there residing.

SEC. 14. That the marshal shall return said lists with a statement in writing of the date and manner in which each juror was summoned; and if any juror or alternate legally summoned shall fail to attend, he may be attached and fined or committed as for contempt.

SEC. 15. That if there shall not be a sufficient number of competent grand and petit jurors and alternates present, and not excused, to form a grand and petit jury, the court may compel the attendance of such absentees or order bystanders to be summoned to complete the juries.

SEC. 16. That if for any cause the jury commissioners shall not appoint or shall fail to select a grand jury or a petit jury as provided, or the panels selected be set aside, or the jury-list returned in court shall be lost or destroyed, the court shall order the marshal to summon a grand and petit jury of the number hereinbefore designated, who shall be sworn to perform the duties of grand and petit jurors as if they had been regularly selected.

SEC. 17. That the fees of the grand and petit jurors and witnesses before said court herein created shall be the same as are provided in the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas.

SEC. 18. That in all criminal trials had in said court, in which a jury shall be demanded, and in which the defendant or defendants shall be citizens of the United States, none but citizens of the United States shall be competent jurors; and if a jury so composed can not for any reason be had within the jurisdiction of said court, a writ of venire facias may issue to the marshal of an adjoining district, to be designated by the judge of said court, commanding said marshal to summon forty persons in his district competent to serve as jurors in the district of which he is marshal, who, upon failure to obey such summons, may be compelled by attachment to attend as jurors for the trial of said cause. The persons so attending shall be examined as other jurors touching their competency to serve as jurors in said cause, and, if found competent, shall be sworn and impaneled to try the same, the right of challenge to be the same as provided in criminal proceedings in the United States courts.

SEC. 19. That a writ of error to the final judgment of the court hereby established to the Supreme Court of the United States shall be allowed in all capital cases, and from the decision of said court upon writs of habeas corpus involving the question of personal freedom. The writ of error to the decision of said court upon writs of habeas corpus shall be taken upon such terms and under such regulations and orders, as well for the custody and appearance of the person alleged to be unlawfully restrained of his liberty as for sending up to the Supreme Court a transcript of the petition, writ of habeas corpus, return thereto, and other proceedings as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court, or, in default thereof, by the court or judge hearing the cause.

SEC. 20. That all laws or parts of laws heretofore enacted giving jurisdiction, civil or criminal, to the United States district courts for the western district of Arkansas, the district of Kansas, and the northern district of Texas over the Indian Territory as in this act bounded, or any part of the same are hereby repealed; but this repeal shall not affect the prosecution and punishment of offenses committed before the passage of this act, and all such offenses shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri lie on the table.

Mr. VEST. Is it intended by that to cut off debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The effect of the motion, if agreed to, is to cut off debate.

Mr. VEST. I should like to say a few words.

Mr. MAXEY. It does not cut off debate on the bill, but does on the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I want to be heard on this amendment. I ask the Senate to vote down the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is an amendment to this amendment in order now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order; but a motion to lay on the table supersedes any amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that if that amendment is to be considered I shall move the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to make an inquiry. I do not find on the Calendar the bill which is marked "Calendar No. 1546," which is now moved by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as an amendment to the bill of the Senator from Texas, and I rise to inquire whether this bill, Senate bill 102, has passed the Senate?

Mr. VEST. It is upon the Calendar. It is the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary which has been on the Calendar for months.

Mr. HARRISON. Fifteen hundred and forty-six is the Calendar number on the printed bill.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will find it on the Calendar on page 9.

Mr. HARRISON. The copy I have is marked "Calendar No. 1546."

Mr. VEST. It is 1645 on the Calendar, Senate bill 102, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Calendar number on the bill is wrong.

Mr. VEST. It is on page 9 of the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. I know that, but I desire to state that no matter how good the bills may be of themselves, I do not propose to load down the bill of the Senator from Texas by putting on it any bill, however good, that may kill his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MAXEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT. This question is not debatable, but I desire to say that I vote against laying it on the table for the especial purpose of allowing the Senator from Missouri to explain his amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator from Texas would withdraw his motion for a moment. This matter is very important to the Indian Territory, and I should like myself to hear the reasons the Senator from Missouri has for offering his amendment. If I may be allowed to say so, I am very much troubled as to what ought to be done in reference to this matter.

Mr. CULLOM. By unanimous consent, I should like to say one word.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent of the Senate to debate this question. Is there objection?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, debate can not be allowed. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion to lay on the table.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. I make that announcement now for the day. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote against all these propositions in the shape of amendments to the bill of the Senator from Texas, and would vote for his bill.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—29.

So it was ordered that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the same amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, leaving out the twentieth section, so that he may have an opportunity to submit remarks.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama submits an amendment, being the amendment already read, with one section omitted.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill which is advocated by the Senator from Texas is exactly in an opposite direction from the bill that is reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee of this body, and just here the Senate is going to make the turning-point in the most important administrative policy that can possibly concern the Indians of the five civilized tribes.

I had the honor in association with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and other Senators of this body to examine into the judicial situation of the Indian Territory, and I think I can speak almost entirely for the committee, at least for a large majority of that committee, and the Committee on the Judiciary have spoken, I believe, unanimously, that it is necessary in order to the further civilization of the five civilized tribes that the judicial authority of the United States should be extended over that Indian country, and that it should be established in the midst of it. All the bills which cut off portions of the territory of that Indian country and assign it to the judicial establishments in surrounding States——

Mr. COKE. Allow me to say that the report of the Judiciary Committee was not unanimous.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I am mistaken in that.

All the bills which propose to cut off a portion of the Indian country by tribes or otherwise and assign the jurisdiction, as is now the case, to the courts of the adjacent States, is in direct opposition to the policy which I consider is eminently necessary for those Indians and for the successful enforcement of the laws of the United States in the Indian country.

If the Senate is going to abandon the policy recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, then of course I shall be ready to vote for the bill of the Senator from Texas, because under the present system, while it is maintained, the territorial jurisdiction of the court at Fort Smith, Ark., is too large; it is almost impossible to execute the laws in a satisfactory way in the Indian country with so large an area included in the jurisdiction of that court as there is now.

The abuses under the judicial power of the United States in the Indian country are simply horrible. They violate every instinct of Christian civilization, as is shown in the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs after its subcommittee had gone there and made a very diligent examination of that country and of its judicial condition.

But I insist, Mr. President, that the Senate will never dispose of any question connected with these Indians of any more importance than that which has now come before it very unexpectedly to me. I did not know that this report had been made from the Judiciary Committee. While I am thoroughly committed to the bill of the Senator from Texas if we are to pursue the existing system out there, yet I insist that we ought to follow the advice of the Committee on the Judiciary and establish courts in that Territory and draw those civilized Indians in as part of the administrators of the laws of the United States, and in that way we shall build those people up more thoroughly and cement them more securely and give to their civilization more of crystallization and more of power and force than we can do by any other measure that has ever been brought or perhaps ever will be brought before the Senate.

There is no bill that may concern those Indians that is so material to their welfare as this bill, until we finally pass upon a bill admitting them as a State into this Union. They deserve the consideration of this country. They have built their civilization in strict accordance with ours, adding to it such features as have been beneficent, considering the condition and character of the Indians, and in their constitution, in their laws, in their civil polity, in their courts, and in every other institution that they have established there they have shown remarkable wisdom and remarkable excellence of judgment in the control of their government. So I hope the Senate will not adopt a system which is contrary to the one which is recommended by the Judiciary Committee on this occasion.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I must confess that I was a little surprised when the Senate refused me the ordinary courtesy of explaining the status of this matter under the amendment which I offered as a substitute. It is the first time in my parliamentary experience that a Senator has not been accorded the poor privilege of explaining what was the real status of a question in which the whole country is interested, and which is not a personal question, before a vote should be taken on its merits. If this were a question of courtesy, I think I can appeal to every one of my brother Senators to bear witness that I am not deficient in that quality in a public or private capacity either, and I may be permitted to infringe upon the ordinary parliamentary rules to say——

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator give way for me to make a motion in reference to the vote just taken?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I voted to lay the amendment on the table, not understanding the proposition in any degree. I now move to reconsider the vote whereby it was laid upon the table. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion itself is not debatable. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was laid on the table. The question is on that motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri is now pending.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I will proceed to state that when this proposition of the Senator from Texas was pending before the Judiciary Committee I gave the deciding vote in favor of reporting the bill to the Senate with the distinct understanding that I was opposed to the bill and should oppose it in the Senate; but I will state frankly that from personal consideration for the Senator from Texas, who was anxious in regard to the matter, the bill having come from the other House, I was willing to waive any advantage that I had as a member of the committee and voted to report the bill in order that it should be considered, with the understanding that I would antagonize it with the measure which I have offered as a substitute now.

Mr. President, a more important measure than this has not been before the Senate at this or any other session of Congress, important not only to the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory but important to the whole people of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator refer to the amendment or to the bill?

Mr. VEST. To the amendment now pending.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the bill of the Senator from Texas relate to the same subject that is contained in the amendment of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VEST. The bill of the Senator from Texas represents one system.

Mr. ALLISON. That I did not understand.

Mr. VEST. And the amendment which I offer represents another, and I will undertake to explain what the difference is.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Missouri will pardon me a moment.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. When the Senator from Missouri concludes, I shall explain, I think, in a very few words. the exact state of the case.

Mr. VEST. I do not think there is any difficulty in understanding the case. The Senator from Texas and myself will agree about what the two bills are. The Senator from Texas simply proposes to cut off a portion of the Indian Territory and attach it for jurisdictional purposes to the northern district of Texas. That is the whole of the bill. In other words, it is to continue what we have been doing for the last twelve years—cutting off slices of the Indian Territory and attaching those slices to outside courts in adjacent States.

We have now the whole of the Indian Territory, except a small portion of it, under the jurisdiction of the United States court for the western district of Arkansas for criminal purposes; and the reports of the Attorney-General show that the administration of justice at Fort Smith, in Arkansas, costs more than it does in the United States courts for the southern district of the State of New York, which includes the city of New York. We are now engaged in spending hundreds of thousands of dollars unnecessarily, and dragging the Indians out of the Territory and taking them 150 miles for the purpose of trying them for their lives, and then hanging them by the half-dozen, after keeping them in a jail, which is a disgrace to civilization.

Another portion of the Territory a few years ago was attached to the district of Kansas, with a court at Wichita; and now it is proposed to take another portion of the Indian Territory and attach it to the northern district of Texas, with one court at Denison and another at Paris. The bill which I offer as a substitute, carefully prepared after great deliberation by the Judiciary Committee, and as perfect as we could make it, does away with all these outside courts and establishes a court at Muscogee, in the center of the Indian Territory, with a judge, marshal, and clerk, and all the machinery for administering justice inside of the Territory itself.

It is not a personal matter; it is not a matter of courtesy; it is a great question. It is the question whether we shall pursue the policy that we have heretofore adopted of dragging these Indians away from their homes, when we call them civilized and when many of them speak the English language, taking them outside the Territory and trying them with alien juries at great expense to the Government.

Mr. President, if we propose to advance the civilization of these Indians, is it not manifest to any man upon the slightest reflection that we are taking entirely the wrong direction in which to do it? If we wanted to drive these people away from us and away from our ideas and away from our jurisprudence, we could not adopt a process more effectual than the one which we have been pursuing for the last few years.

They are arrested by United States marshals, taken out of the Territory, tried before strangers, after incarceration (for they are where they can give no bail) in a filthy jail; and yet we are expected to impress by this method upon these people respect for our institutions and laws, and respect for our modes of administering those laws. If we want to civilize these people, we must alter our method and we must resort to the first great fundamental idea of all governments formed to secure liberty, and that is self-dependence. We must get them, as this bill proposes, to speak our language, because they are not permitted to serve on juries until they can speak it. The bill I offer as a substitute puts a premium on civilization by permitting residents of the Territory to serve upon juries when they can speak the English language, and not otherwise.

If we adopt the bill offered by the Senator from Texas, it is simply a step in the other direction, fundamentally opposite to what I contend is the only system upon which we can civilize the Indian at all in this country.

The other day we passed a bill to give the Indians lands in severalty. Why? Because we wanted to see them self-dependent and to impress upon them the idea of home. No nomadic people can ever emerge from a condition of semi-barbarism. These Indians have made vast progress. Now, in the substitute that I have offered, we take another great step in the direction of making them self-supporting and of impressing upon them our civilization and our jurisprudence.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to say a word in justice to myself in this connection?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. When the motion was made to lay the amendment on the table I voted for it, making the remark that I was against all amendments that brought in other bills, no matter how good they were. I knew nothing about the merits of the bill of the Senator from Texas. It seemed on its face to be a bill to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas and for other purposes. We are acting under the Harris rule, and the meaning and intent of that is that bills passed by the other House and favorably reported here, to which there is no objection, shall be called, so that the Senate may dispose of them during the morning hour. That class of bills, of course, we ought to pass in the morning hour, and we sometimes pass forty in a day when the rule is strictly enforced. The only thought I had was that important bills, such as this offered as an amendment by the Senator from Missouri, should come up separately. The consideration at this time of important measures destroys the morning hour and destroys all chance of getting on with the cases not objected to. That being the case, as we have only seven or eight days more left, I thought in my mind that if the discussion on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was to go on, it would be better to have the bill go over. I would not have voted as I did if I knew what the bill was.

Mr. VEST. All I objected to was the motion of the Senator from Texas to lay my amendment on the table without giving me the privilege of explaining it. All I want is for every Senator here to understand the nature of this question. I do not want it determined on any personal feeling. My relations and feelings towards the Senator from Texas were and are as kindly as with any other human being alive. They could not be any other. But if the bill is passed as presented, it is simply taking a step in the opposite direction to the amendment which I have offered and which I believe to be absolutely necessary to that country.

Some years ago I acceded to a proposition to cut off a portion of this Territory and attach it for jurisdictional purposes to the State of Kansas, with the understanding that when this bill which I have offered as an amendment should be perfected in the committee and come before the Senate the Senators from Kansas would make no opposition to the bill. What is the result? If we continue to slice up the Territory for jurisdictional purposes we intensify and increase the opposition to a bill to establish a court in the Territory, and it will be simply impossible to pass a general law in regard to it.

Mr. PLUMB. It is universally conceded that within a very short period of time there will be a large white settlement in the Indian Territory. When we come to adjust the relations of the Territory to this settlement and the settlement to the Territory we shall undoubtedly be under a constraint, which will not admit of delay, to provide methods for the judicial determination of the difficulties which will inevitably arise by reason of the introduction of these settlers. I have felt more complaisance about the situation as it will be with the passage of the bill of the Senator from Texas because of the fact that I know we shall be under that constraint to deal with the situation under these new phases which will compel us to act, measurably at least, in the line of the bill of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. No danger can possibly arise that ought to delay our consideration of this matter.

Mr. PLUMB. We can not consider it now.

Mr. VEST. Why can we not consider it now?

Mr. PLUMB. Not with any hope of passing the bill.

Mr. VEST. I have great hope that the bill can be passed in the House of Representatives if it passes the Senate now as an amendment; but even if it should not be, why should we stamp our approval upon a measure that is directly opposite to the principles of this amendment? If they are hereafter to be organized as a Territory preparatory to their admission as a State, what step could we take that is more important than this to prepare them to become citizens of the United States? In the general view of humanity and civilization, what better could the Senate do than to pass a bill that teaches these people our jurisprudence, our modes of administering justice?

I have one thing further to say in regard to this matter. The treaties of 1865 made between the civilized tribes, as they are termed, and the Government of the United States provide in all but one of them for the establishment of courts in the Indian Territory. The overwhelming public sentiment of the intelligent Indians and half-breeds is in favor of the bill I have offered. They appreciate the necessity of such a court, and both upon the idea of economy—for we are now throwing away thousands upon thousands of dollars, and worse than throwing it away, in dragging Indians off to outside courts—and upon the other and greater idea which I have attempted briefly and hastily to advance here this morning, there should be no hesitation on the part of any intelligent legislator in now taking a step in the right direction and turning our faces steadily toward the idea that these Indians should learn our laws, our mode of administering those laws, and our civilization; and until we do this we need not be surprised to find that the Indian Territory is simply a place of refuge for criminals from the adjacent States.

I have no personal interest in this matter other and aside from that which I feel as a citizen and Senator from Missouri. We have long suffered in my State from the fact that there are no courts, except the Indian courts, in that Territory, and that it has been made a depot for criminals who escape from my State and the other adjoining States and get into that Territory, and there defy the law and defy the authorities. If this court be established it at once reverses all this condition of things. It teaches these Indians the idea of law; it teaches them that they must be punished for their crimes, and it opens wide the door for beneficent results of civilization, the highest and the best.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I desire in a very few words to give the reasons which actuate my course in respect to this bill. I have not the slightest doubt that the bill which I have offered is in the direct interest of the Indians and the direct interest of our own race. Now I will state why.

In the Forty-eighth Congress, in the other House, the bill which I have called up was presented, and the scheme of the Senator from Missouri was contrasted with it, and after a long and arduous investigation by the Judiciary Committee of that body, equal to that of any other body, they deliberately decided that the plan which I present was the correct plan, and that bill passed the House after debate by an overwhelming majority. At the present Congress the bill again passed the House, and I believe this time with a unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary, and it passed the House without any dissenting voice. Now, this bill which I present involves no new principle; it inaugurates no new theory.

The district court for Arkansas more than half a century ago was invested by law with criminal jurisdiction of all crimes committed within the Indian Territory by or against a white man. That court was held at Little Rock, and the Indian defendants were carried there and other Indians were carried there as witnesses. When the western district of Arkansas was established the jurisdiction was given to that court. Fifty years ago Texas was not annexed to the Union, Kansas was a wilderness, and there were but few white men in the Indian Territory, and therefore there were but few cases to be tried by the district court of Arkansas.

The same conditions remained up to the establishment of the western judicial district of Arkansas; but by the advent of railroads, and by the system the Indians have of permitting white men to come into their country as farmers and mechanics, the number of white men has been very largely increased, and correspondingly crime has increased there, and in addition to those two causes of increase of white population there are refugees from justice from all portions of the country, who flee there as a harbor of refuge. The result is that the district court for the western district of Arkansas is so burdened with business that men can not obtain the trial contemplated by the Constitution—a speedy and impartial trial by a jury. They stay there week after week. No one knows that better than the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the members of that committee who visited the Indian Territory and took testimony on the ground in regard to these matters. Every term of the court goes out with vast numbers of cases undisposed of, and I am informed and believe that the civil docket of the western district of Arkansas is so crowded that it is about eighteen months behind.

As I stated, this bill inaugurates no new theory. It simply leaves to the district court of the western district of Arkansas so much of the Indian Territory as, added to its jurisdiction in Arkansas, will give to it a reasonable amount of work to do. It changes the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas so as to equalize their work, and then adds that much of the Territory which is contiguous to the eastern district of Texas to that district with a new division created with a court at Paris, and so much of the Indian Territory as is contiguous to the northern district of Texas is assigned to that district with a division established and with a court at Denison. That is the whole of the bill.

I say to the Senate that if you are humane, if you want to work in the interest of the Indians, the amendment of the Senator from Missouri should be voted down, because it is simply impossible for that to go through at the present session of Congress. That bill has not been considered by the Senate. It is, as he stated, a new system altogether, and I will say that it involves principles which were never incorporated before in any bill in the history of our legislation.

I want the Senate to understand this. If this bill of the Senator from Missouri is to be considered it opens out a wide field of discussion. Are you going for the first time in the history of this country to have civil jurisdiction in the Indian Territory, and execution by attachment, sequestration, and injunction, and all that? The amendment provides for that. For the first time in the history of this country it makes a court there with civil jurisdiction; and what more? It does not follow the theory of the treaties which the Senator speaks of, because those treaties provide that the court to be established there shall be simply a part and parcel of a territorial system of government, and the marshal under that theory, as laid down in the treaties, is to be appointed by the governor of the Territory and not by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

More than that, the Senator's bill provides for bringing jurors into the Territory from other districts, from the States. That is new; it is novel; it is a departure; it raises a very grave question whether that can be done; but the bill which I present simply relieves at this time and in the future. Should the bill of the Senator from Missouri be adopted after full and fair discussion, then the same act which removes the court from Fort Smith would remove it from Texas and remove it from Kansas. This bill only relieves the difficulty; it is of pressing necessity; and therefore I think, with all solemnity and with a full knowledge of the facts, that the bill ought to pass without the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Texas speaks of an anomaly in the bill which I offer to the Senate. I should like to know any greater anomaly in jurisprudence than that which exists to-day in these outside courts with their jurisdiction over the inside of the Indian Territory.

Mr. MAXEY. That has been so for half a century.

Mr. VEST. Half a century, says the Senator. I think he is mistaken in that. The court established at Fort Smith which has criminal jurisdiction over the Indian Territory was created after the war.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. The district court of Arkansas had jurisdiction fifty years ago. The great case of the United States vs. Rogers went up from that court forty years ago.

Mr. VEST. But the act now giving criminal jurisdiction was passed after the war, under which they are operating now in the Indian Territory. That is not, however, a material point. It does not make any difference whether it was created last year or fifty or one hundred years ago, the principle is wrong; it is antagonistic to our ideas of jurisprudence. Everywhere else in the Territories where the Indians are subjected to our jurisdiction they are tried by the Territorial courts; but here in the Indian Territory, which we call the civilized portion of the Indians of the country, we seize these people, carry them outside of their own Territory, try them before juries made up of strangers, hold them for months without bail, and then hang them, as I said, in shoals, in order to evidence to them our laws and our jurisprudence!

In regard to the treaties of which the Senator speaks, there is but one of those treaties that refers to this Territorial government and marshal. According to the report of the committee which went to the Indian country some years ago, the evidence was overwhelming that the Indians were in favor of a United States court in that Territory. If there has been any departure from the ordinary administration of law in this country, it has been found in these outside courts. It is not necessary for me to repeat again the arguments which seem to be overwhelming in favor of our going no further in that direction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will pause. It is the duty of the Chair at 2 o'clock to announce the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is entitled to the floor on this bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I was going to ask that the agricultural bill be passed over. I do not propose to say anything more myself. I think we can take the vote in a little while.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] yielding, that the unfinished business be laid aside, if there is to be no further debate on this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I do not think there is any disposition to delay the bill, but I hope he will not insist on finishing it up now in this summary way. As between the two bills——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. DAWES. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Texas, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may proceed if there be no objection.

Mr. DAWES. As between the two bills there is fair subject-matter for debate. That some remedy must be applied to the present condition of things everybody admits. If the Senator's bill can be, without losing it, transformed into the bill of the Senator from Missouri, everything will be accomplished that the Senator from Texas or any other Senator desires. If not, let the bill of the Senator from Texas be adopted as a temporary relief to the condition of things there.

But there is no danger, I will say to the Senate, of losing the bill. If the Senate shall be convinced, as I hope they will, that as between the two bills the bill of the Senator from Missouri should be adopted, and a committee of conference can not agree to that, then the bill will be in the Senate in a condition to pass it as a temporary relief to the present condition of things.

I suggest to the Senate that, if we can not have the bill of the Senator from Missouri, I shall vote for the bill of the Senator from Texas, because there must be some relief to the condition of things there. But there can be no question, it seems to me, as between the two bills if either can become a law, that the system of holding courts in the Territory is the true system, and after having undertaken to pull this Territory apart we shall have to exert ourselves to bring it together again at the next or an early session of Congress by providing for a court in the Territory.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I yield. It is impossible, as I think, to have this bill disposed of in any reasonable time, but I am willing to yield so that the sense of the Senate can be taken as to which bill it will proceed with.

Mr. MILLER. I shall object to laying aside the regular order unless it can be done with the understanding that there is to be an immediate vote on the Texas bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is quite impossible.

Mr. MILLER. Then I trust my colleague upon the Committee on Agriculture will proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the regular order is before the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. I have no desire to speak further.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to address the Senate on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Agricultural Department bill is the pending business.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, the ratio of increase in population in the United States from 1870 to 1880 was 30.23 per cent. Applying this ratio to the numbers employed in what we call the gainful occupations in 1870, we have the following result, as shown by a table in the census reports:

| Classes. | Occupations, 1870. | Increased by 30.23 per cent. | Actual numbers returned in 1880. | Excess. | Deficiency. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| All occupations | 12,505,923 | 16,286,463 | 17,392,099 | 1,105,636 | ..... |
| Agriculture | 5,922,471 | 7,712,834 | 7,670,493 | ..... | 43,341 |
| Professional and personal services | 2,684,793 | 3,496,406 | 4,074,238 | 577,832 | ..... |
| Trade and transportation | 1,191,238 | 1,551,349 | 1,810,256 | 258,907 | ..... |
| Manufacturing, mechanical, and mining industries | 2,707,421 | 3,525,874 | 3,837,112 | 311,238 | ..... |

From the foregoing it appears that all the gainful occupations except that of agriculture has surpassed the general ratio of increase, and that farming alone has not kept pace in increase of numbers with the general development.

In professional and personal services the increase has exceeded the ratio by 577,832 persons. In trade and transportation the excess is 258,907. In manufacturing, mining, and mechanical industries it is 311,238, and in farming alone does it fall below the ratio, and this by the number of 43,341 persons.

If the number of persons engaged in agriculture had increased in the same ratio as those in manufactures, mechanical, and mining industries have, in the decade from 1870 to 1880, there would have been employed in agricultural pursuits in 1880, 8,393,664, or 723,571 persons more than were actually so employed.

Increasing as did those engaged in trade and transportation, there would have been 8,987,491 engaged in agriculture in 1880, instead of 7,670,493, or 1,316,998 more than there actually were. Or if they had increased as those employed in professional and personal services, there would have been 9,000,030 instead of 7,670,493, or 1,329,537 more than there were.

Thus the country is warned that the greatest industry within the bounds of our Government, the one most important and absolutely indispensable, the very foundation of all other interests, is being undermined, and most certainly suggests that it is time to stop and consider whether this decline in vigor and activity does not indicate a great wrong somewhere. In my opinion the cause, whatever it is, is the result of disorganization amongst farmers while other interests are organized.

Coming from an agricultural State, and representing a constituency almost wholly engaged in agricultural pursuits, I naturally feel a deep interest in any measure likely to affect for good or evil the great body of people so employed.

In the past, the farmers as a class have generally been content to remain totally disorganized, and instead of uniting to press upon the attention of the National Government any special interests of their own, they have been willing to trust to Congress to enact such laws as would be fair alike to all.

The inexorable logic of events, however, has demonstrated to them that they have been too trustful, and that they are now at great disadvantage before the laws, and that a great effort will be required to regain their lost ground. They are learning, too, that to be effective their great numbers must "pull all together." This can only be done by organization.

I do not mean such organization as implies secret meetings, signs, grips, and pass-words. In a free government great public questions and great public purposes should not be so considered or prosecuted, but I mean such union as held our ancestors together in the long struggle for liberty that culminated in the Revolutionary struggle—a single purpose held in common, sacred to every man, and which was never lost sight of, nor for one moment subordinated to anything else, great or small.

I believe that the people least governed are the people best governed, and regard with great apprehension our apparently irresistible tendency at this time toward what is commonly called paternal government.

In supporting this measure my desire is not to provide that the Government shall extend a fostering care over the farmers or their interests, but it is with the hope that a wise and just administration of the duties of the office of secretary of agriculture will result in developing among farmers a new and greater interest in their calling, an unity of purpose in securing and enforcing their rights, their equality under the laws, and the restraint and control of the aggression of others, so as to ultimately free all interests alike from governmental interference, and allow each man to follow his own business inclinations in his own way, restrained only from wronging others, and protected only from being wronged.

This prevailing tendency to apply to the National Government for relief from everything, floods, storms, diseases amongst cattle, and other such misfortunes, as well as for assistance to make unprofitable enterprises pay, or to regulate private affairs, is un-American, and grows out of the same weakness and lack of sturdy independence that in past ages has made governments masters and the people slaves, and is the exact reverse of the theory that makes the people masters and the government a servant.

This is not only to be deplored because it is pregnant with evil to our form of government, but also for its tendency to weaken that independence that makes us Americans.

The typical American, worthy of the name, appreciating the aspirations of the fathers and what they meant when they startled the world by teaching that all men were born free and equal, and that all just government comes from the consent of the governed, oppose the tendency to change this Republic into a great alms-house, in which the people are to be the helpless beneficiaries, under the provident care of a paternal Government, instead of a self-reliant, self-respecting, self-supporting, independent, and free people. They believe, and believe earnestly, "that though the people support the Government the Government ought not to support the people."

At a time when every other interest, great or small, is organized, and many of them daily plying Congress with petitions and arguments in favor of special legislation in their own behalf, without regard to the effect on the general public, and when the statute-books are covered over with legislation of this kind, all of which operates directly against the rural population, it seems imperatively necessary that the farmers should organize, not to secure special advantages, or place themselves under the care of the Government, but for the purpose of obtaining equal rights under equal laws.

To equip themselves for the effort necessary to bring this about they must not only understand their relations to each other, but they must understand as well their relations as a class to all other interests and pursuits, and to accomplish successfully this end, union, co-operation, and harmonious action among themselves are indispensable. These, with the great benefit and assistance that I believe will be derived from the establishment of this new department of agriculture, will produce big results, fraught with good to the tillers of the soil in the near future.

With such an union the Government can not long be so far diverted from its true purpose as to be in any instance a mere engine of wrong and oppression in the hands of those who, better organized, more unscrupulous and grasping, and less patriotic than their fellows, would reap unfair advantages from its administration.

I am fully aware that the bill under consideration is opposed by some who have, as much as I, interest in the advancement and prosperity of the agricultural classes, because they believe the measure will prove at best but a "Dead Sea apple" to the farmers, or, if there are any results from it, instead of being helpful and beneficial that they will only be steps toward centralizing all power in the National Government.

While there is cause for these apprehensions, I nevertheless favor the bill, because this risk must be taken and there is no earthly chance for the farmers to protect themselves unless they come by some means to act in harmony, and in this I think the proposed department will render substantial aid.

I believe, in the eloquent language of my colleague in the House of Representatives [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], that—

> What agriculture needs is a repeal of those laws which have dethroned her from the imperial position which God gave her and which she ought to occupy in this land to-day.

And I believe that this dethronement was made possible only by the union of opposing forces and the disunion of the farmers, and that we must meet union with union—that there is no other help.

There is a feeling, too, that while this measure will provide with care for obtaining "information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the rate of wages, the cost of production of the articles produced, and the increase in the productive efficiency of the labor and earnings of men and women, the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral advancement, and the best means to protect life and prevent accidents in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry," that this is directed more particularly to other than farm labor, and that there has been a failure to provide for such an investigation into the condition of those engaged in agriculture, and the relations of this avocation to other interests as will impress upon Congress and the public the unjust discriminations built up by improper legislation.

Such an investigation would be valuable in forming a sound public opinion, and will, even if not provided for in terms, naturally grow up under this new department which will in the very nature of things become the great source of statistical information in all matters pertaining to agriculture, and will naturally bring to public attention its rights as well as its wrongs.

Efforts to effect an organization among this class have been made from time to time with some degree of success, but as yet they have not accomplished a tithe of the results that lie within their easy reach.

These efforts have heretofore failed or proved unsatisfactory from various causes; they have been too local to be effective or powerful. Some have adopted secret methods of procedure, which feature has been peculiarly unfortunate, as this manner of dealing with public questions is always unpopular in this country and has always been rebuked and repudiated. A movement which has for its object only the promotion of justice, the elevation of man, and the advancement of the public good, without any purpose of doing harm to any one, has no occasion to "love darkness rather than light."

While the greatest respect is entertained for benevolent and charitable institutions, and orders which adopt secret methods that their "left hand know not what their right hand doeth," the feeling is strong amongst all Americans that questions of political and economic interest should always be discussed, considered, and acted upon with the utmost publicity and frankness, and any movement adopting methods of secrecy, in dealing with such questions, will and ought to be distrusted as long as we are a free people.

Another reason why efforts to organize farmers have been unsuccessful is that selfish and ambitious men have pushed themselves to the front, and have succeeded in diverting the movement from its real purpose of general good into a means of satisfying their personal greed and ambition. These men are the greatest enemies to such efforts. They think only of themselves, and are always like Absalom at the gate saying, "Oh, that I were made a judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice!"

The hearts of the people were stolen away in David's time by such false pretenses, and will be, I fear, in all times and amongst all people—at any rate they have often succeeded in sacrificing the good of the whole people to mere personal and selfish ends. An important lesson necessary to be learned in any successful organization must be to mercilessly cut off all such self-seeking marplots. Wherever such an effort has seemed to be fairly started, it has invariably happened that in its separate organizations schemes foreign to the purpose have been at once presented, real and imaginary questions, all sorts of theories, printed resolutions upon all manner of subjects are kindly supplied by peripatetic cranks everywhere, and they are urged to take action upon everything under the sun, from woman suffrage or the propriety of opening an unheard-of Indian reservation to the buying up by the Government of all railroad and telegraph lines.

Some of these things originate with honest men, who doubtless mean well, many from others whose purpose and interest it is to sow discord and prevent organization; unfortunately, these have too often been successful.

The great and successful organizations, the banks, the manufacturers, the iron and steel, and other like associations never prostitute themselves to the mere political or pecuniary advancement of a member, but are always careful to keep clear of personal ends as well as political entanglements, and leave their members free to act for themselves in all matters not affecting the purposes of their organization, and the farmers should profit by their success.

I have for years urged the necessity of organization among the farmers. Scattered and disorganized as they are and have been they have no more chance in their contests with the other and thoroughly organized interests than a raw, undisciplined militia, armed with shot-guns, would have in a conflict with regular troops, drilled and equipped with modern weapons.

The railroads, banks, lawyers, doctors, manufacturers, commercial men, laborers of every class, except themselves, have local, State, and national organizations, because they find they are thereby more powerful, that by this they render their comparatively small numbers more important and influential, and "that in union there is strength." Hence they pool their issues and unite in accomplishing the advancement of their general good, while they leave each individual member to pursue his own convictions in the prosecution of his own business and in the exercise of his political views.

By this union some of these have been enabled to procure legislation which has greatly and, I think, unfairly swelled their wealth and power, while others by similar means have prevented legislation which, if enacted, would have put an end to practices by which they were "reaping where they had not sown."

We learn on high authority that "those who make haste to be rich shall not be innocent;" and this truth applies with more force if possible to organizations than individuals, no one feeling himself personally so much responsible for wrongs done in the name of and for the benefit of an association as if he were the sole beneficiary. We have less of the check of individual conscience in the shrewd schemes of associated interests than had they been prosecuted by individuals alone and for individual benefit.

There are laws now upon the statute-books of this country, the result of united action by associated interests, which were intended to and do yearly enhance the fortunes of certain classes at the expense of much greater numbers of others who are each by nature and the unalterable laws of God their equals, and yet under the operation of unequal laws are practically their bondmen; this, too, in a country the Constitution of which declares there shall be "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted."

Whenever a clearer understanding of the natural rights and equality of man shall force its way through the labyrinth of sophistry that now mystifies and misleads people who are assured and seem to believe that they are rendered prosperous by being taxed, when we all learn the simple truth that taxation which gives one man a dollar must of necessity take it from another, then these laws will be looked upon as a system of slavery, more cunning of course but not less absolute than its African twin.

The most glaring instance perhaps of the unjust advantage given to a class by government aid is in the tariff laws, which are so framed as to take year by year hundreds of millions of dollars from the consumers of the country (of whom all farmers are a part) for the benefit of a class who invoke the aid of a paternal government to enable them to prosper.

When enormous sums are being yearly thus collected by indirection from the farmers of the country, fair dealing requires that all the facts which enter into it should be fully understood, and no part thereof should be sustained upon any ground not thoroughly explained, and to turn the light full upon this matter I hope the new department will serve a good purpose.

The agricultural interest is so vast it can not be unfairly dealt with or injured without damaging the entire people. It permeates the whole country; every interest is dependent upon it, every city and railroad exists by it; in fact, the buying, selling, and carrying of its products make up the sum of our occupations.

It will not be denied by any one that the agricultural is the greatest interest in the country, whether it be considered from the standpoint of the capital invested or from the higher and more important one, of the numbers of people engaged therein, or in the broader field of its general relation to business and the other interests of the country at large.

It may not be improper just here to group a few points in the statistics of this great business, and compare them with others as they are shown by the census reports. There was invested, according to the reports of the census of 1880, in farms, stock, and implements the sum of $12,104,081,440; while the total value of all the railroads, valuing them at the enormous figure of $59,718 per mile (a valuation much too high), was $5,182,445,807, or less than half as much; while in manufacturing interests there were $2,790,223,506.

The same report shows that in persons employed the numbers were as follows:

|---|---|
| Agriculture | 7,760,493 |
| Professional and personal services | 4,074,238 |
| Trade and transportation | 1,810,256 |
| Manufactures, mechanics, and mining | 3,897,112 |

The number of farms is shown to have been 4,008,907, with an acreage of 536,081,835. The productions were:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Indian corn | bushels | 1,754,591,676 |
| Oats | do | 407,858,999 |
| Rye | do | 19,831,595 |
| Wheat | do | 459,483,137 |
| Cotton | bales | 5,755,359 |
| Wool | pounds | 155,681,751 |
| Hay | tons | 35,205,712 |
| Rice | pounds | 110,131,373 |
| Tobacco | do | 472,661,157 |
| Irish potatoes | bushels | 169,553,539 |
| Sweet potatoes | do | 33,378,693 |
| Milch cows | | 12,443,120 |
| Sheep | | 35,192,074 |
| Swine | | 47,681,700 |
| Butter | pounds | 777,250,287 |
| Cheese | do | 27,272,489 |

The census reports of 1880 show that 7,670,493 persons were engaged in agriculture, with farms, stock, and utensils worth $12,104,081,440; that their product, "sold, consumed, and on hand" was worth $2,213,402,564.

Those engaged in manufactures were 2,738,895 persons.

|---|---|
| Capital invested was | $2,790,272,606 |
| Gross product | 5,369,579,191 |
| Materials used | 3,396,823,549 |
| Net | 1,972,755,642 |

In other words, speaking in round numbers, that seven millions of people, with an investment of twelve thousand millions of dollars, produced in farming a little over two thousand million dollars gross product, deducting nothing for wages, food, or clothing of all these people, while fewer than three millions people, with an investment of less than three millions dollars in manufactures, produce gross more than five thousand millions per year, and after deducting the cost of raw material used, there is left almost as much in value of product as in farming. Not half the people, with less than one-fourth the capital engaged in manufacturing, turn out as much as the farmers do, and yet these have to be taxed to make manufacturers prosperous!

To follow it a little further. If you deduct the total wages paid by the manufacturers we have the following: $1,972,755,642; total wages, $947,953,795; $1,024,801,847 as the net product annually of an investment of less than three thousand millions in manufactures, after paying for material used and all wages paid, while seven millions people with twelve thousand millions capital produce only twice as much, deducting nothing for material, food, clothing, or wages; or, in other words, capital invested in manufacturing under our present protective system pays a profit of about 33 per cent. net, while that invested in agriculture pays about 16 per cent. per annum gross. Yet railroad magnates talk about the magnificent returns of farming as compared with railroad investments, and other gentlemen elegantly pronounce the complaints that farmers are not prosperous as "bosh." There is never an effect without a cause, and there is one here. This cause is the unjust discriminations against this class of men, brought about by the union and co-operation of those who plunder them by and with the advice and consent of the Congress of the United States and their own disorganization.

The consequences of this systematic outrage upon one class of citizens by others can not long remain doubtful. The manhood of man, "the divinity that stirs within" him, will as surely put an end to such things, as it has forced its way thus far in the progress of human freedom, as certainly as it has already stricken the shackles from the African slaves of the United States and the serfs of Europe, and taught those who claimed to rule by divine right that they derived their power alone from the consent of the governed.

From my early childhood I have lived among and been one of these people in my State, Arkansas. I know them as a class intimately, and I also know from personal observation and experience what is their condition. In my own State, as a rule, they own their farms; they have a reasonably fertile soil; they enjoy a delightful climate; they are industrious and economical to the extent that their families are deprived of many of the comforts of life; and yet, with close care and such economy, these men, after working hard from year to year, find themselves, as a rule, no better off at the end than at the beginning.

Why is it that in this calling, which God himself selected for our first parents—this calling, confessedly the greatest and most important in the country and in the world—pursued in a free country, in a genial climate and fertile soil, it should be true, as I believe it is, that as a class farmers work more hours per day and more days in the year, with the poorest food and clothing, with fewer advantages of rest, recreation, instruction, and worship, than any class of human beings of equal intelligence in this country.

Slavery has been defined to be "the obligation to labor for the benefit of the master, without the contract or consent of the servant;" then, a law, or a necessity created by law, which obliges one to labor for another, or takes from him the product of his labor, without his consent, for the benefit of another, makes the man who is thus deprived of his own to that extent a slave to the other, and, in spite of all our boasted freedom, this is the condition of American farmers today.

They are obliged to labor and grow crops to save from starvation those dependent upon them. Yet in every step they take and in every purchase they make the law which envelopes and surrounds them as completely as the air they breathe is daily and hourly robbing them to enrich others.

We are told that the country is prosperous, and it is usual to enumerate the aggregate millions that we are assured the country is growing in wealth year by year to prove it, yet this effort to lead a man away from the grinding consciousness of his own poverty by telling him of the millions of others is not satisfactory.

It is not the aggregation of wealth, property, or money that makes a people prosperous, but its even, fair, and equitable distribution.

That country where there are none very poor and none very rich is a prosperous country, and a system of laws under which the mass of the people grow poorer day by day, while the few grow enormously rich, is not the kind of government the founders of this Republic intended, and not the kind of government that our fathers fondly believed in its earlier days had been firmly established.

There will, of necessity, always be poor people and rich people, and when this results from the different habits of industry and economy it is natural and right and its effects are wholesome, but resulting from the unequal operation of unequal laws, and without regard to industry and economy, the effect is unnatural and pernicious, and nothing could be more foreign to the spirit of liberty or the true theory upon which our Government was founded. The best interests of men individually and of the nation at large are secured when the administration of the laws is such as to realize the prayer of Agur: "Give me neither poverty nor riches * * * lest I be full and deny Thee, * * * or lest I be poor and steal."

An Englishman who has given years of study to the emancipation of labor in that country says:

> It has been often found to be the case, in the economical history of England, that a demonstrated wrong has been defended and its continuance supported on the plea that to do justice to the many would inflict loss on the few.

And this is after all, I suppose, but the natural conduct of men who are permitted for a while to encroach upon the natural rights of others. They inevitably come to look upon their aggressions as rights, and their righteous souls are vexed and outraged upon any effort by those they wrong to resume any part of the rights of which they have been deprived.

This has been the history of every struggle for liberty.

Our great rights of trial by jury, habeas corpus, &c., were wrung from unwilling tyrants by force, and I have no doubt that King John, the night after he had been forced by the old barons to sign Magna Charta, regarded himself as the most ill-used man alive, and looked hopefully, even joyfully, forward to the day when a restoration of what he considered natural right would enable him to hang every one of the monsters who had thus endeavored to regulate him.

Every step in this direction by either the whole people against the sovereign or of any class against another has been resisted by the dominant power, and each in his turn has considered the "country ruined" whenever such a movement has succeeded.

After the enormous destruction of human life resulting from that great pestilence known in history as black death, of which Rogers says in his book on Work and Wages:

> I stated above that probably a third of the population perished.
> It is certain that the immediate consequence of the plague was a dearth of labor, an excessive enhancement of wages, and a serious difficulty in collecting the harvests of those land-owners who depended on a supply of hired labor for the purpose of getting in their crops. We are told that these crops were often suffered to rot in the fields for want of hands; that cattle and sheep roamed at large over the country for lack of herdsmen; that land went out of cultivation, and that the grandees were utterly impoverished.

And he concludes by saying:

> The plague, in short, had almost emancipated the surviving serfs.

So shocking did it seem to the landlords that those miserable people should ask and receive any higher wages than had been formerly paid that laws are found forbidding them to ask or to receive, or employers to pay, any higher wages than the few pence a day which they had been accustomed to receive formerly, and when the supply of labor was greater than the demand.

While in this country we have gotten bravely over this relic of slavery, we have not passed from under the yoke of its twin—that of having laws to prevent our laborers buying where they can get the most for their money. While the English laborer in the interest of "good tillage" was by law required to sell his labor cheap, the American laborer is compelled in the interest of unsuccessful manufacturers to sell the product of his labor cheap, or, which is the same thing by another name, to pay high prices for his goods.

The one we denounce as an outrage, the other we laud as wise statesmanship; yet the principle underlying the situation then and now is just the same; but the superior intelligence of our time and the clearer apprehension of our rights make it necessary to conceal the iron hand in a more delicately woven silken glove than formerly. The fact that there has been only a change in name while the practice and its results remain the same will be clearly apparent upon slight reflection, and the identity of the argument of five hundred years ago with that of to-day will strike any one who looks into the subject.

As illustrating what wrongs against disorganized classes may grow up under effective organization, either by positive legislation, as is the case in the tariff laws, or by a failure to legislate, as in railroad affairs, and to show how difficult it is and will be to correct such evils, let us consider for a moment some facts relating to recent legislation here.

For almost twenty years complaints have been made that the railroads have been unfair in their dealings with the people; that they have actually exercised powers greater than those of royalty itself; that they have built up one town and business at the expense of another, and that their pets have grown enormously rich, while any against whom they chose to discriminate have been actually driven out of business.

Facts of the most astonishing character have been year by year urged upon the attention of Congress and the country.

As specimens of these charges I make the following extracts from a book published by J. F. Hudson, of Pittsburgh, The Railways and the Republic—a book full of startling instances of the oppressive exercise of power, not indulging in mere general charges but giving names, dates, figures, and details, until one grows weary of the endless indictment.

I confess myself at a loss to make selections when illustrations of the effectiveness of organization and the results of the unprotected condition of the public are so abundant and striking.

I quote as follows:

> The Standard Oil Company, indeed, embodies the commercial crimes of the past decade. Its vast wealth has been accumulated in less than fifteen years by speculative manipulations, by bribing legislators, and by distorting law to deny to one man the privileges given to another.
> Its history illustrates, step by step, the extent to which the greed for wealth can corrupt commercial morality, pervert law, and betray the interests intrusted to its protection. The methods by which this company acquired its power, and those by which it exercises that power, from its greatest operation to the selling of a single barrel of oil, show the baneful results of permitting the exclusive control of a great commercial interest to be vested in a monoply which can oppress the consumer or the producer alike.
> Throughout the course of intimidation, corruption, defiance of commercial and statute law, and contempt of public justice that marks the rise of the Standard monopoly one fact is pre-eminent: This monopoly was called into existence and sustained in its most odious tyranny by the persistent and deliberate discriminations of the railways in its favor. Not only the $100,000,000 which that corporation has gathered out of the oil trade in the last fifteen years, but its dictatorial power, its unscrupulous crushing of opposition, its corruption of public servants, its control of the speculative features of the business, and the favoritism and sycophancy which are essential accompaniments of its absolutism, are the direct results of the advantages which the leading railways of the country gave it, by carrying its frieghts on terms which rendered competition practically impossible.

So that while greed, dishonesty, speculative combinations, and disregard of private and public rights are all represented in that aggregation of wealth and injustice, it is signally the embodiment of the gigantic wrongs which the railways can inflict and have inflicted through the power of discrimination.

In the shipping of the great grain staples a certain profit of two or three cents a bushel will assure fortune to any enterprising man, but rates of freight from Chicago to New York, in 1884, varied more than 10 cents per bushel in sixty days.

* * * * * * *

In March, 1878, the rates on grain and flour from Chicago to Pittsburgh were 25 cents, while to New York, involving 350 miles more of transportation, they were 15 cents. In May of the same year grain was hauled through Pittsburgh to Philadelphia and Baltimore at 13 cents, while if the railways had stopped the freight at that city, and saved themselves the carriage of 350 miles over the mountains, they would have charged 18 cents.

* * * * * * *

The case which was heard before the Illinois railway commission last year showed a rate of 16 cents on fourth-class freight from Chicago to Kankakee, a distance of 56 miles, while on the same freight to Mattoon, a distance of 172 miles, the rate was 10 cents. This inequality was produced by railway competition at the latter point.

The Winona and Memphis example, which occupied so important a place in the Congressional debates, showed a charge of $1 per bale on cotton from Memphis to New Orleans, a distance of 450 miles; while from Winona to New Orleans, a distance of 275 miles, the charge was $3.25 per bale. River competition to Memphis was the cause of this discrepancy. Another example of the same sort was adduced in Congress, in a rate of $1 from New York to Atlanta, while, on the same class, under the influence of ocean competition, the rate was made 75 cents to New Orleans, about double the distance.

* * * * * * *

No less surprising a result of the eccentricities of railway rates is to be found in the cases which were experienced at Pittsburgh, and are shown by the New York investigation to have been repeated in that State, where the inequalities of rates have actually caused freights to be hauled from the original point of sihpment away from their destination to a competitive point, and thence shipped back again through the place where they originated. The waste of this wholly useless haul represents, probably, the climax of the persistent stupidity controlling freight rates.

The trained and scientific railway management sometimes lauded as infallible might at least have perceived the economy to the corporations of omitting the totally unnecessary haul of 700 miles, and, while charging the shippers just the same, allowing them the saving of time by shipping the goods directly from Pittsburgh or Rochester to the point of destination. Indeed, a little liberality might have omitted the wasted haul, and only charged half rates for it. Either of those amendments might have been made favorably to the shippers; but through 1876 and 1877 the railway officials continued so convinced of the utter correctness of their freight charges that the spectacle of a car-load of Pittsburgh manufactures, destined for Texas or California, but commencing its journey by starting in the other direction, on a trip to New York and back again through Pittsburgh, was a by no means infrequent phenomenon of railway business.

* * * * * * *

Does the capital on which Mr. Fink shows such very modest profits represent money actually invested in railways, or does it comprise a large share of alleged securities which represent nothing but paper? No man has, to my knowledge, seriously asserted that the entire stock and debt of the railways of the United States represent money actually invested.

* * * * * * *

This practice of creating securities in excess of actual value has, by one method or another, imposed on investors a volume of fictitious stocks and bonds more than double the amount of the national debt. According to the estimate of the most widely acknowledged statistical authority upon railways, through the methods of sale or hypothecation, $3,720,000,000 of purely paper values have been sold to the public.

The creation of these fictitious securities has sometimes been so open and notorious that the successful sale of them seems to indicate eagerness to be cheated on the part of the public. In other cases the methods used have been so secret and so plausible that it has been almost impossible for the legitimate investors to detect them. In the end the false values have been so mingled with the real and the fraudulent investments made to bear so close a resemblance to the honest ones that at the present time the greater part of railway securities of this country are clouded by the suspicion of illegitimacy.

Instances of unjust management such as these were urged upon the attention of Congress in unlimited numbers until a committee composed of Democrats and Republicans was appointed, who gave a free, fair, and impartial hearing to all parties concerned, and then made a report that legislation was necessary. Upon this report the two Houses of Congress have acted. After years of patient watching and waiting the people of the country are at last rejoiced by the passage of a bill intended to restrain what has been felt to be the high-handed lawlessness of railroad autocrats, and to make them, like other people and other interests, amenable to and under the regulation and control of law.

This step, which seemed so just and equitable, and so absolutely necessary to many fair-minded men, was by others of narrower and more sordid views—the class intended to be restrained—not kindly received.

Many of the ablest among the railroad men, while opposing the bill, have nevertheless, in a spirit of true republicanism and loyalty to law, accepted the situation, and will make an honest effort to carry it out in its letter and spirit.

Others do not submit willingly, and manifest a spirit that indicates that the Government has acted none too soon.

The newspapers report that upon the passage of the bill one of these said:

He could scarcely find words to express his contempt for the interstate-commerce act or for the members of Congress who voted for it, intimating that he could pick out four hundred track-hands who would be more competent than the United States Senate and House of Representatives to pass laws for the regulation of railroad traffic.

Such an expression of rage shows plainly what a loss of power he feels, and should satisfy all doubters that at least so far as such as we are concerned this action is most opportune, and this shows, too, how unwillingly this power will be relinquished and how stubborn will be the fight before the ground is fairly won.

In the insolence of his power this man has doubtless come to believe devoutly that the object of regulating railroads is simply to get all the "traffic will bear," so that all securities, whether representing money honestly spent or only water, shall be made profitable. It is a satisfaction to feel assured that a different view of the objects of railway legislation has become so firmly fixed in the public mind that no number of persons in sympathy with him, likely to find their way into Congress, will ever be able to carry out his views.

The hope of this country and of this form of government is in the conservative patriotism of our agricultural population. In peace the "isms" with which our cities sometimes run wild find no place among them. Surrounded by their wives and little ones, in constant communion with nature, enjoying the holiest of earthly institutions—a home—there is no room in their hearts for the reckless dogmas of theorists, who would upset all they hold sacred and dear. Treasuring up the religion their mothers taught them with unquestioning faith, they follow where they think the path of duty leads, earnestly desiring to act well their parts.

In war, ready to bare their breasts to the storm of death, they form a defense that the country knows how to value, and against which no earthly power will ever prevail, if only they remain in future as they always have been heretofore, true to themselves, their country, and their God.

From their humble homes will come in future, as they have always done in the past, those who will control your destinies in peace and in war, and as long as the fountain is pure there will be nothing to fear in the stream.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The amendments reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 11, after the word "statutes," it is proposed to insert "including all amendments thereto;" so as to read:

That the Department of Agriculture, established at the seat of Government of the United States, shall be an executive department, to be known as the department of agriculture and labor, under the supervision and control of a secretary of agriculture and labor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to said department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 4, before the words "Assistant Secretary," to insert "first;" so as to read:

That the secretary of agriculture and labor shall hereafter receive the same salary as is paid to the secretary of each of the Executive Departments, and the salary of the first assistant secretary of agriculture and labor shall be the same as that now paid to the Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 2, after the word "Agriculture," to insert "and Bureau of Labor;" so as to read:

That all laws and parts of laws relating to the Department of Agriculture and Bureau of Labor now in existence, as far as the same are applicable and not in conflict with this act, and only so far, are continued in full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 5, after the word "effect," to insert:

And the Bureau of Labor, as now organized and existing, is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MILLER. There should be added after the word "agriculture" the words "and labor," so as to read: "department of agriculture and labor," which is the legal title of the department to be created.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 2, to strike out the word "division," and insert the word "Bureau;" so as to read:

That there shall be in the department of agriculture and labor a bureau which shall be under the charge of a commissioner of labor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

The commissioner of labor shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed, unless sooner removed, and shall receive a salary of $4,500 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 13, after the word "labor," to strike out "the" and insert "and;" in the same line, before the word "men," to strike out "laboring;" and in line 15, after the word "moral," to strike out the word "prosperity" and insert "advancement;" so as to read:

The commissioner shall collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the rate of wages, the cost of production of the articles produced, and the increase in the productive efficiency of the labor and earnings of men and women, the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral advancement, and the best means to protect life and prevent accident in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 25, to strike out the word "division" and insert the word "bureau;" so as to read:

The commissioner shall annually make a report in writing to the secretary of agriculture and labor of the information collected and collated by him, and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 6, in the following words:

SEC. 6. That the act approved June 27, 1884, establishing a bureau of labor, is hereby repealed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 6. That the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the department of agriculture and labor, and shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau shall continue as at present. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the moneys appropriated for said service and hereafter appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the secretary of the department of agriculture and labor.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to amend the amendment of the committee. In section 6, line 1, after the word "the," I move to insert the words "weather service of the;" so as to read:

That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the department of agriculture and labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Signal Service Bureau, as it is at present called (I do not know by what express authority except by some designation of that kind in some act of appropriation), consists of a military organization which purports to have some relation to the Signal Service or signaling in the Army of the United States, and also of a weather service, which it is not necessary for me to explain, as everybody understands it. The two features of the service ought to be separated, and that is really the purpose of the amendment, as I understand it; it was at least my purpose in offering the original amendment to the bill which has been incorporated in substance in the amendment of the committee now pending.

I was a member of a joint commission of the two bodies, of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was the chairman, to examine into what are called the scientific bureaus of the Government. When we came to the Signal Service Bureau we were all led to the conclusion, following the advice of the present Secretary of War, the former Secretary of War, Mr. Lincoln, and of General Sheridan, and indeed all other leading military authorities in the country, that the weather service, which was in the Signal Service Bureau, should be separated from the military signaling, and that it should go into the proper branch or department of the Government as a civil service.

I do not feel like taking up the time of the Senate in a general discussion of this question, but I will state a few of the considerations which bore upon that commission, and were concurred in by the officers of the Government I have mentioned, in support of the effort we thought ought to be made to separate the Signal Service proper of the Army from the weather service.

General Sheridan stated in his examination before the commission that he had organized a regular signal service in the Army; that he had officers detailed to it; and that at every post in the United States he had regular instruction given to the soldiers and officers under his command in respect merely of military signaling, including all the branches of that sort of service which are necessary for the operations of the Army in the field, both in times of peace and in times of war.

General Myer was first put in charge of this experimental thought of ours in regard to mastering the elements so far as to get a scientific idea of the courses that obtain in storms, in high winds, and in atmospheric pressure, in the range of the thermometer, &c. General Myer having a proclivity of that kind, and a great deal of ability, too, in that direction, was first intrusted, in a very small way, it is true, with the organization of this bureau, or of this establishment, which afterward grew into a bureau. Being an officer of the Army the scientific branch of this service was assigned to him to be worked out by him.

The matter grew so that an act of Congress was passed authorizing the President of the United States to nominate and by and with the consent of the Senate to appoint an officer with the rank of brigadier-general in the Army who should be the Chief Signal Officer of the United States. General Myer, I believe, was appointed, and afterward General Hazen was appointed and confirmed by the Senate, and these officers in succession went on and organized an immense system of service over the country, the very much larger part of which is the civil branch of the weather service, leaving entirely out of view almost the military signaling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will observe order. It is difficult to hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I am trying to make a statement for the purpose of abbreviating the debate on this question, which I think contains the pith of the subject.

The Signal Service went on in this way until it has now got to be an immense establishment. All the men who belong to the Signal Service, with a very few exceptions, are enlisted men in the Army of the United States. Their qualifications for this enlistment by the regulations of the Signal Service Bureau are such that none but the graduates of schools of a high character, usually colleges, can find their way into this body of so-called soldiery.

In order to keep up the military view of this affair, and in order also that he might have the command of a separate branch of army service, General Hazen established a camp at a fort, which is across the river here, to which these enlisted men were carried; and after a very few weeks of training they were prepared by the use of instruments to go out into the field at the different Signal Service posts in the United States, and there make reports of the weather and to report them at Washington city, where they were condensed and distributed in reports to Congress and also sent by telegraph all over the country.

This military feature was found by the officers of the Army to be abnormal and inconvenient and very hard to control. It was not known really whether the sixteen lieutenants who have been appointed under this Signal Service belonged to the Army, or whether they belonged to the civil branch of the service. They hold their rank of second lieutenant in the Army of the United States, but they have no real place, they have no home in the Army, no place to which they are assigned either by law or by Army regulations in any regiment or any other branch of the service except the Signal Service; and yet they have been commissioned as second lieutenants in the Army of the United States without reference to what kind of service they were to perform. They have been promoted from corporal to sergeant and from sergeant to lieutenant. Sometimes, however, the appointment has been made from the ranks of the private soldiery or enlisted men of this bureau.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Colorado wish to ask a question?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator, who has given attention to this matter, what will be the status of these men if the amendment is adopted?

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment will not affect their status at all; it will merely affect their employment.

Mr. TELLER. They will be transferred?

Mr. MORGAN. They will be transferred to this service, and although they are under the orders of the Secretary of War, of course, being officers of the Army of the United States, we can take them away.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That depends on the construction of the law.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that they will not then be subject absolutely to the control of this new secretary.

Mr. MORGAN. I think not. That was not my object in offering the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am afraid that will be the effect of it.

Mr. MORGAN. If it is, let us correct it and put words in the amendment that will make it perfectly clear.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the whole amendment reported by the committee ought to go out. My belief is, from such study and observation as I have had about it, that the only way you can have an effective weather service alone, a mere weather service over the whole United States—it would not apply in New England, for instance, but take the whole United States—is to have the men who are employed in it (who must have a certain skill and training and practice to be of the least use whatever, without throwing away money) under an organization which they can not leave as they can a civil organization at their own free will at any moment of time.

Therefore, while it seems prima facie to be incongruous to say that the War Department, the military organization, has anything to do with the weather, when you look at the nature of the service to be performed and the fact that every one of the people who are performing this service are also trained in the military signal service proper, and are merely devoting their time in peace to the weather branch of the concern, it seems to me clear that the only way to have an effective organization is to leave it under military control, so that a man can not resign because he gets miffed about something, but he must do his duty. He takes it up willingly; he is not obliged to enlist; and when a war comes or anything requiring military service proper, then you have your men ready for the other branch of their work.

Mr. MORGAN. I perceive that in the multitude of labors the Senator from Vermont has had to discharge here, with so much honor to himself and credit to the country, he has not kept up with the advance of opinion on this question, either inside or outside the Army, for the Army are very anxious to get rid of this lot of men in buckram.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest doubt of it.

Mr. MORGAN. The Army officers are very anxious to get rid of them, because they are not soldiers in any sense of the word. They are mere weather guards. They are put on picket posts, if you may allow the simile to be extended, for the purpose of getting the barometric and thermometric pressure, the course and rapidity of winds, and the like; but they have no soldiers' functions to perform in the world. As I observed, they are enlisted men, and they have a regular allowance for rations and for quarters, for uniforms and clothing, and everything of that sort, just as any other enlisted men in any army; and yet they have not a single army function to perform.

I desire the attention of the Senator from Vermont a moment while I repeat a statement of fact that I have already made, which is that these men have no connection practically with signaling in the Army, and if you had a war to-morrow there would not be a half dozen of them called into the Signal Service of the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I reply to that right there?

Mr. MORGAN. Let me make the statement completely, and then you will see. General Sheridan in his testimony before the commission said that he had his signal corps organized in the Army at every post in the United States. He gave instruction and had instruction given by the orders of the different officers commanding at these different posts, through every grade of officers at the posts, to the private soldiery, and regular schools of instruction in signal service were kept up at the different posts. He had, therefore, a complete corps of signal men for the signal service of military signaling in the Army under his command and control, and he did not want to have anything to do with this weather department. He wanted to be rid of it because it was interfering really with his own arrangements inside of his military regulations for the conduct of the posts. Now, if the Senator wishes to say anything, I yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my friend, in answer to his statement, that I admit, so far as the officers of the Army—the higher ones—are concerned, they would be glad to have this civil and peace service gotten rid of. They are under the pay of the United States all the time, and if they can get rid of doing this kind of duty in time of peace, then so much work is saved, while the pay goes on.

I do not mean to impute that to General Sheridan, you understand, whom I admire in the very highest degree and in every respect. I do not doubt that what he says is true about his trying to instruct the men at military posts to signal for the Army; but when we come back to the question of who the people are who get into this Signal Service, I found when I was in the office seeking information a few years ago, and since from inquiry and observation, that no man is able to enlist until his character and qualifications and bodily strength for military service are first ascertained, and, second, that having been received and enlisted he is sent over to what was then called Fort Whipple, and I do not know but that it is so called yet, to be instructed for a year or for some sufficient length of time, not only in the methods and routine of military signaling, but in those things which are necessary that a man should know in order to be of the least use as a weather observer, putting the two things together.

That man you have enlisted into the Army, liable to be called into the military service in time of war at any moment. He is in it, but liable to be called to do it, I should have said, and to that, being a soldier of the Army of the United States, assigned to this special duty, you have added the performance in time of peace of this method of observing the weather.

Coming back to the weather again, I wish to repeat to my friend (I will not take his time) that my belief is if you take the whole United States together and put this thing on the same footing as to the weather that applies to the ordinary civil service of the United States in respect of the appointment of clerks, and so on, it will come down to be a mere waste of money in less than two years. Now I am done.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not suppose any question that ever came before a commission composed of members of this and the other body was more carefully investigated upon the evidence than the one upon which the Senator from Vermont is now expressing his opinion, and the entire commission came to a different conclusion unfortunately. The subject is a pretty broad one, and I can not follow every suggestion that might arise to my own mind or even out of the remarks of the Senator from Vermont. I could not afford to take the time of the Senate now to do that; but I wish to say something about it.

I have already adverted to the fact that General Sheridan and the Secretary of War, the present incumbent and the former incumbent, Mr. Lincoln, were anxious that this change should be made. They recommended it in their annual reports to Congress. They set out the reasons to their entire satisfaction, and they were certainly very convincing. Then the examination was followed up by this commission and we all came to the same conclusion, that they were entirely right in their suggestions.

As I have observed, the men who are admitted into the Signal Service Bureau are enlisted men, but they are all graduates of colleges or else they are men who have an equivalent education. They are masters of certain elements of mathematics and of physical science, so far instructed that it is a matter of very short experience for them to acquire the use of the instruments, and it is a rare case that they have been kept more than six months at Fort Myer. In the great majority of cases they have been kept there a very few weeks, and then were distributed out at far distant points over the entire length and breadth of this great country, sent out singly and sometimes in pairs, never more than two at a place, for the purpose of taking weather observations.

Here is an army under military command, military discipline, military enlistment, the duties of military obedience in every way, that is scattered by its commander all over this great continent. How much real military control and discipline is it possible for him to exercise over such an army thus scattered? The thing is absurd in itself to suppose that the element of military enlistment has anything to do with the efficiency of this corps. It is the character of the men whom you enlist that you rely on for constant and assiduous duty and attention, and for the verity and accuracy of their reports, and upon nothing else.

Mr. BECK. I did not hear the Senator's amendment read. He said yesterday he would offer one, but unfortunately I missed it. The sixth section of the bill, as presented by the committee, does not propose to transfer the whole Signal Service, I understand, but only the weather bureau.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BECK. I wish to make another inquiry. Ought we not to provide in the bill that the transfer shall take effect, say, on the 1st day of July, or some distant day, so not to break up the organization upon the passage of the act without giving time for a new organization? The bill as presented by the committee is to take effect immediately upon the passage of the act.

Mr. MORGAN. So it would.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, on that point I will state that the committee, on considering the bill after it had been reported, have authorized an amendment to be offered to make the proposed transfer take effect on the 1st of July next. The committee will offer that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. MORGAN. Do I understand the Senator from New York that he proposes that the entire bill shall go into effect the 1st day of July?

Mr. MILLER. No; the bill goes into effect, of course, as soon as passed.

Mr. MORGAN. It is proposed that this particular feature shall go into effect the 1st of July?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; in section 6, line 3, the committee propose to insert the words "to take effect July 1, 1887."

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senator from Alabama if he can see the propriety of doing that.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes; there is no question about the propriety of doing it. It ought to be done.

Now, I will proceed with what I was about to say, and will be very brief about it. I have adverted to the character of the persons who are enlisted into this bureau, and to the fact that the success of the Signal Service depends upon the character of those men rather than upon the military feature of the service. If a man commits an offense at one of the far-distant posts, how are you to ascertain about it? If he goes to sleep on his post, there is nobody there to watch him, or if he commits any other offense, there is no military discipline over the man. He is merely a soldier enlisted, and far beyond the control or the inspection of any person connected with a military command.

So, after all, it is merely the character of the man whom you enlist that you can depend upon, and for this service you would not appoint any man who is not qualified, for instance, under the rules of civil-service examinations to make calculations from a barometer or a thermometer, or any other instrument that measures the force or direction of the winds. You must have such a man in the service; otherwise the service can not be performed. You can not take an ordinary man whom you would enlist as a soldier in the United States Army because of his height and measurement and his health and his common intelligence, and make of him a signal officer or a Signal-Service operator at any post in the United States. You would not think of doing it. You must have a degree of intelligence equivalent to the work that has to be done. Hence the enlistment was required by the regulations of the bureau to be made from men who are graduates of colleges or have an equivalent amount or character of education.

Mr. BECK. I have heard—the Senator from Alabama knows a great deal more than I do about it—that the enlistment for five years works an embarrassment very frequently in this way: The man is nominally in the Army, and any disobedience only subjects him to a court-martial. He may be at a very distant point, and a very expensive and troublesome organization would have to be made to try him by a court-martial. Perhaps such a mode of trial does not reach the subject properly at last, and it is done in a very slow and a very expensive way.

Mr. MORGAN. That is true; and the result has been that nobody would be court-martialed unless it happened to be some man about Washington city who committed some peccadillo or some little offense, but not a man at a distant post.

Mr. BECK. They are only tried when and where you can reach them.

Mr. MORGAN. Only where you can reach them. You can not send out, for instance, to California upon charges made by an inspector or some superior officer, and take him from his post and bring him here and try him; and it would be still more expensive to try him at that distant post. It is a cumbersome, ill-adapted, inconvenient, and expensive system from beginning to end.

I will take one more illustration. I do not wish to protract this argument, but I will take the Life-Saving Service of the United States. Those are not enlisted men either in the Army or in the Navy. They are men who are employed by the Government of the United States to go to points of exposure and danger upon the coast to save human life. Let me ask the Senate if ever a more splendid record for heroism and for faithfulness and for duty was made by a set of men in the world than that which has characterized the service of the men in our life-saving establishment? It is perfectly glorious. It reflects honor and credit upon the whole country. And yet all the men in the Life-Saving Service, including all the officers, are mere civilians. What do you rely upon to keep such a man at his post upon a dark, stormy night on the seaboard, when a ship is wandering and may be blown ashore and her crew exposed to danger? What do you rely upon there? The character of the men whom you have in the service and that almost universal American principle of fidelity to duty that you can rely upon in places of the greatest possible exposure with the most absolute certainty.

The citation of the history of the Life-Saving Service is a full answer to all the argument that has been made or can be made in respect of the necessity of having a military feature in the Signal Service, especially when we know that these men are obliged to be scattered by ones and twos all over this great country at different posts, entirely without the inspection or supervision of any human being. If the danger of a court-martial is all we have to rely upon for the efficiency of the Signal Service at those distant posts, it is a very poor guarantee of that service.

We looked through this whole field. The report that we made to the Senate of the United States covers every possible suggestion, I think. The men in control of the Army of the United States, Secretaries of War, and generals in command, except perhaps the man who had charge of the Signal Service Bureau itself, and who had a natural pride in having made the organization—the whole body are against the idea of the continuance of the weather service under the control of any Army officer or Army organization. But the Signal Service of the Army proper, with its chief, ought to go into the Army organization, and the officer who I believe is now recommended by Presidential authority for that high and distinguished position will find his place in the Army of the United States naturally and properly in charge of Army signaling. It is an important and necessary and proper staff office.

So the sixteen lieutenants who have grown up under this curious system, and who might grow into a thousand after a while if we continued the process, will find their places in the Army of the United States, and will be assigned to regiments by some law that will be introduced here by the Military Committee. The commission did not think that it was their duty to make any recommendation upon that subject, nor does the bill of the Senator from New York contain any recommendation upon the subject. It merely provides that they may go on in the exercise of these functions, with the consent of the Secretary of War, as officers assigned to duty. It opens the place for them and lets them remain there until the Government of the United States demands their services in some employment of a military character.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Alabama permit his amendment to be read?

Mr. MORGAN. My first amendment to the amendment of the committee is, in line 1, of section 6, to insert, after the word "the," the words "weather service of;" so as to read:

That the weather service of the Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the department of agriculture and labor.

Mr. BECK. Ought we not to require some qualifications for men selected from civil life to fill the places of these men? Is it safe to leave it entirely discretionary? We ought to have intelligent young men to fill the places of those now belonging to the Army. That is the difficulty.

Mr. MORGAN. It is almost impossible to provide just at this time, and perhaps in this bill, for a complete organization of the weather bureau in the department of agriculture and labor. We felt that difficulty when we recommended heretofore to the Senate that there should be a change made, and that there should be a weather bureau established in the War Department in lieu of the Signal Service Bureau, as it is called. The enlisted men are here. Their terms have more or less expired. Some of them have perhaps nearly the full five years of the term to run, while others have only a few months of the term to run.

These men, as I have several times observed, have all been selected with a view to their educational ability and qualifications. They have had a certain amount of training. All who are in Washington are as a matter of fact employed in different clerkships in the Signal Service establishment. The sergeants and corporals, and sometimes privates, who are at signal stations over the country send their reports here, and they get the pay of sergeants, corporals, &c., according to rank, under appropriations made by law.

Our project was this, and I presume it is the same idea that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestery have, that as these enlistments expire new men would be brought in. I suppose they would come in under the civil-service examinations necessarily, because the pay that they would get, if it is preserved precisely as it is now, would be so high that they would be graded at least as clerks of one of the degrees, perhaps the lowest, and some of them a degree above that; but they would come under the civil-service examination.

Mr. BECK. Not under the existing law.

Mr. MORGAN. No, not perhaps under any existing law; but the corps is now full and complete, and the object is merely to transfer the jurisdiction from the War Department into the hands of the new department of agriculture and labor; to take the bureau precisely as it exists except the Chief Signal Officer, the head of it, and transfer it into the jurisdiction of this new department, without making any alteration in the law, or attempting to make any, except that these men shall hereafter constitute a civil part of the Government of the United States, and not a part of the military establishment. That is the only change that we propose to make now, leaving it to the future for Congress to enact such changes in the laws affecting these people as it may see proper to pass.

I suppose that any soldier in the United States Army would have a strong equitable and moral right to insist upon all the conditions annexed to his enlistment as to its term, its pay, and as to supplies and everything of that kind; and it would be unfair to him to change it unless you improved his condition by making an increase in the amount of his pay or allowances, or something of that kind.

Although I offered the amendment in the Senate, it was really authorized by the Senator from Iowa, who was chairman of the joint commission and who left it to me to fashion it into a certain form and to bring it into the Senate, because his engagements would not admit of his coming in here at the moment that the amendment was offered. It will be remembered that I offered it to another bill, and upon suggestion I consented to refer it to the committee who have reported this bill, and they have seen proper to put it on the pending bill. We prepared the amendment, having the benefit of the knowledge of the Senator from Iowa of that sort of language which was necessary to protect every part of it and to keep it entirely in harmony with the appropriations, hoping that the committee would feel willing to adopt the language we had employed. We did not have an opportunity of presenting to the committee by argument the views that we thought ought to prevail. I think the Senator from Iowa will probably be disposed to insist on the amendment as it was offered in the Senate formerly. I do not know whether he is satisfied with the amendment just as it stands or not.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I have examined this amendment with some care. I think there ought to be some additional provision in it. If the Senator from New York will give me his attention I will suggest to him that, in addition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, I think there ought to be inserted in line 6, after the word "force," words which will include the second lieutenants. The second lieutenants are now officers without a real status in the Army, and yet they are officers of the Army engaged in the Signal Service. I think there should be added the words I suggest so as to make the clause read, beginning in line 5:

Until otherwise provided by law the present organization of the subordinate force, including second lieutenants, now in the service of said bureau shall continue as at present.

Mr. MORGAN. That is right.

Mr. MILLER. I see no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that should be done. Afterward it is provided that "the moneys appropriated for said service and hereafter appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the secretary of the department of agriculture and labor." There is no provision in the amendment as it stands fixing the compensation of the subordinate officers and employés. They are all enlisted men now. The entire force of five hundred men are now enlisted in the Army, and they receive the compensation of privates, corporals, and sergeants, &c., having three or four different ranks. Then they receive commutation as other soldiers, depending upon their location. For example, the commutation at Portland, Oreg., is probably different from the commutation in New York city. So I think we should add in line 10, before the word "and," the words:

And the compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The moneys for the current year, of course, have been appropriated. I believe, with the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York, this portion of the bill is not to take effect until the 1st of July. All the appropriations have already been made for the Signal Service Bureau. It seems to me we should provide now that the compensation and the personnel of the force shall continue. These men are enlisted for five years as other soldiers of the Army are enlisted. Their periods of enlistment are expiring from time to time. I suppose when their present periods of enlistment expire civilian employés will take their places, but until that time shall come it seems to me that the men who have enlisted in this service for five years and have faithfully performed their duties should continue in the service.

Hence it is that some law more in detail must be provided hereafter. I think the provision, with the amendments I have suggested, will enable the service to continue as now, under a civilian head.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question? Does the amendment not make it absolutely necessary for the chief of the bureau to retain all the employés under him and to make no change in that force?

Mr. MILLER. It says it "shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary."

Mr. SAULSBURY. We all know that of late years the predictions of the weather by that bureau have not been as satisfactory as under General Myer. I have understood that one reason of that was because some of the most experienced officers connected with the department were changed and new men put in. At any rate, everybody knows that the predictions of that bureau have not been of late years so reliable as formerly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will allow me to say that I think his statement is quite too broad. There have been occasional periods when the predictions have failed, but as a rule the same army officers have made the predictions for many years.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My understanding is that there were some changes made in certain of the most important positions there.

Mr. ALLISON. There have been some changes in the officers assigned to this duty, but the amendment, as I propose it, does not compel the Chief Signal Officer to retain each and every one of the employés. I think he ought to retain them where they are discharging with fidelity their duties, as I believe most of them are doing at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take this occasion to lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

A. K. CUTTING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 14th instant, relating to the arrest, trial, and discharge of A. K. Cutting, a citizen of the United States, by the authorities of Mexico, I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, of this date, with its accompaniment.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1887.

PENSIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10397) "making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "practicable" and insert in lieu thereof the word "possible;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
GEO. C. CABELL,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, a word of explanation. The bill was amended in the Senate by the adoption of two amendments, really one amendment. The House provision authorized the payment of $15,000 per annum for rent, and directed that the Secretary of the Treasury should provide in public buildings for the pension agencies. The Senate Committee on Appropriations consulted with the Secretary of the Treasury, who informed us that there was not a single public building that could now be utilized or used for the purpose of providing places for the pension agencies. So we restored the amount of $20,000 as in the current year for rent, but we allowed the House provision to remain, adding the words "where practicable," that is to say, that the Secretary of the Treasury, where practicable, should provide for them in public buildings.

The House of Representatives took these two important amendments into consideration and disagreed to them, and asked us to confer respecting them. The conferees on the part of the two Houses have met and conferred. The House conferees surrender their objection to the increase of the appropriation for rent as provided by the Senate amendment, and after discussion they insisted that the word "possible" should be inserted instead of "practicable," and the conferees on the part of the Senate agreed to it. That is all there is of the report.

The report was concurred in.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MORGAN to the amendment reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in section 6.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the matter of the transfer of that portion of the Signal Service of the United States Army which is known as the Weather Bureau part of it, from the War Department to the civilian department, is a very important matter, and it ought to be done, if at all, with the greatest deliberation and by matured legislation that shall control the transfer after it is made and adapt the service to the new department.

It has been my impression, from an investigation that I aided in conducting into the affairs of this service and others in the Government, that it ought to be a civilian bureau; but when that is done the legislation which does it ought to provide just what shall be the status of the men who are now employed as enlisted men, precisely what their compensation shall be, what shall be considered their tenure of office in the new department to which they are sent, for they are now under enlistment for five years' service, and receiving not only ordinary compensation but commutation and other things, and when transferred to a civilian bureau every condition under which they are now performing their duty changes.

There ought also to be a clear line of demarkation marked out as to what shall be considered the pure and simple Signal Service, which is military in its nature, and the weather service, which is purely civilian; so that what is left to the War Department under the charge of the head of the bureau shall be clearly known and established.

I am fearful that any legislation now upon this bill transferring this bureau will necessarily be found to be crude and ill-considered, and perhaps involve grave mistakes. I do not say this as in any way reflecting upon the committee having in charge this proposed creation of a new department, for I do not understand that that committee claims that it has thoroughly investigated the subject of transfer and has elaborated a scheme, and that such an elaborated scheme is found in the brief amendment that is offered here.

It is my judgment that we ought to pause before in this manner making this transfer. Whenever it is done there ought to be a provision that at the next session of Congress a report shall be made by the head of the department in which the service now is found giving the status, condition, pay, and duties of everybody, with an estimate also, and if transferred the force transferred should be classified as clerks, so that Congress may know what the force is in the new service, how many clerks are needed, what shall be their salaries, and, in fact, a complete system under which the service shall be conducted hereafter. I fear myself, I repeat, that if we undertake to do anything now we shall be more likely to do it wrong than to do it in a right way.

Mr. MILLER. There is undoubtedly much force in what the Senator from Maine has said in regard to the amendment to the bill known as section 6. This amendment was proposed and sent to the committee by the Senator from Alabama who has spoken upon it, and the committee, after considerable consideration, adopted it in its present form; but going over the matter afterward by myself I found that it would be necessary to amend the amendment in a number of particulars if we were to avoid great confusion and if we were to avoid perhaps destroying the service entirely for a year at least. The section must necessarily be amended in several particulars before it will be proper for the Senate to pass upon it.

But the committee in adopting the amendment had this in view: For a number of years, I believe, the head of the Army has recommended to Congress that the Weather Bureau, so called, should be taken out of the War Department and transferred to some one of the civil departments of the Government. I think all the heads of the Army for the last eight or ten years have concurred in that judgment, and it has been frequently urged upon Congress that it should be done. It was largely in deference to the well-known opinion of the Army officers, of the head of the Army, and of the Secretary of War that the committee finally adopted the amendment.

It may be crude and it may be uncertain in some of its provisions, but certainly it is no more crude or uncertain than the present laws which surround the Weather Bureau service as now conducted in the Army. There is in point of fact no such thing known to law as the United States Signal Service Bureau. There never has been any law passed creating such a bureau proper. If you go over the statutes of the United States for the past seventeen years, since 1870, you will find that substantially the only legislation touching upon this great arm of the Government is in little items in appropriation bills.

The first observations of the weather undertaken by the Government and under the direction of the War Department were authorized by a joint resolution which was passed February 9, 1870, which simply permitted the War Department through its officers to make some observations regarding the weather upon our great lakes in the West, and to report at headquarters here at Washington. Then from time to time in the appropriation bills large sums of money have been given for this service, and it has gone on growing up by itself, without any very distinct legislation regarding it.

Therefore, it is very difficult to formulate any amendment which will properly separate what is called the Weather Bureau from what is known as the Signal Corps of the Army. The two have gone on together. The Chief Signal Officer of the Army is provided for by law, and the office was created long before the Weather Bureau was known. It is an office in itself, entirely distinct from the Weather Bureau, and will go on by itself even if the amendment shall be adopted. The Chief Signal Officer has been in charge of this department, as is well known, changed from time to time as the President appointed a new person.

If the amendment shall be adopted, of course it is expected that a civilian will be appointed at the head of the service as soon as it shall be practicable. But in order that the service may not be entirely disorganized and broken up at the beginning, the amendment provides that until otherwise provided for by law the present organization of the subordinate force of the bureau shall continue as at present. The committee did not think it possible to provide for a complete and perfect organization of the bureau under the new department, but thought it wise to continue the present force until Congress should change it, believing that if the bill shall become a law and the new secretary shall be appointed under it, at the next session of Congress he would undoubtedly recommend a complete system in regard to this service; that he would recommend a system of appointments, a system of examination, a term of service, and everything pertaining to it, and if Congress approved of it it would then become the law, and the service would go on undisturbed. If, meanwhile, Congress should do nothing, then the service of course would continue the same as it is now.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from New York permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that a very considerable number of educated young men, graduates of colleges, and young men who have acquired a scientific education, have enlisted in this service with the expectation that they would finally be promoted in the Army of the United States to the position of lieutenants in the Army. I should like to know whether this proposition is to affect those young men or not.

Mr. MILLER. Eventually it would, but not under the bill as it now stands or under the amendment. These young men are promoted, I believe, to the grade of second lieutenant. That, I think, is the highest promotion that is made in this corps.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me one moment, I think that this change will not affect the status of these young men at all. Some years ago there was inserted in an appropriation bill authority to appoint two second lieutenants in this service each year, and under that provision eighteen have been appointed. Last year, I think very properly, that portion of the law was repealed. We have now eighteen second lieutenants in this service with no possible chance of promotion beyond their present rank unless we shall open up and make a much greater establishment of this bureau. As it is now, no person in the service of the bureau can be promoted even to a second lieutenant.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator from New York perceive that there would be some difficulty in knowing just how, under the provision of the amendment which he has read, to organize and to run, if I may use that word, this military force, that is taken away from the Army, ceases to be a part of it, and is put into a civilian department and becomes a part of it? You prescribe that the same force shall be continued in the civilian department that there was in the military department. They are organized now not as clerkships, not under grades, but with a military organization. They have lieutenants, they have sergeants, and they are under military discipline. How can a sergeant or a lieutenant in a civilian department be an actual sergeant or lieutenant and have that control over the men? What subordination is there? What supervision is there? I ask these questions not in a criticising spirit but as showing that I do see really difficulties, as I have no doubt the Senator from New York has seen them.

Mr. MILLER. There is no doubt about the difficulties, but there is only one way to get rid of them, and that is to meet them.

In reply to the question of the Senator from Maine, I think no difficulty will be experienced, at least during the first year. This service will be entirely transferred to a new department, and the men will be responsible to a new head, but everything pertaining to the service will remain precisely the same as it is now.

It is not a new thing to have substantially a military organization with commissioned officers, with enlisted men, and with everything that pertains to the rigor of military discipline, in a civil department. For instance, the revenue-marine service of this country, which is one of the most effective arms of our service, is organized in the Treasury Department and has always been there. The officers are commissioned and hold their commissions precisely the same as the officers in the Navy do, and the discipline is just as rigorous and just as severe in the revenue-marine service under the command of the Secretary of the Treasury as the service in the Navy is under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

It was the belief of the committee, and, in fact, the desire of the committee, and I only give expression to it here that the result of declaring that until otherwise provided by law the present organization of the subordinate force of the bureau shall continue as at present, would be that the new Secretary would report to Congress within a year's time for an organization which would be semi-military in its character; in other words, that the men admitted into this service would come in upon an examination showing their qualifications and their education to engage in this scientific pursuit, and that we should probably provide that they should be regularly enlisted for a term of years.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MILLER. Let me first conclude what I was going to say. I say the idea of the committee was that no doubt the new Secretary would provide for an organization which would be semi-military in its character; that men would be enlisted for a certain length of time, two, three, or five years, as the case might be, and that there would be provided a system of promotions going up perhaps as high as to the grade of first lieutenant, or of captain even; and that this service would be a permanent service, non-partisan in its character. For one, if I believed that Congress would ever consent to make this service simply a political service into which all the competitions which are connected with appointments to the ordinary civil service of the country should come, I would oppose its being taken out of the Army.

Mr. DAWES. I have no desire to criticise or to embarrass this matter. I see some of the difficulties suggested by the Senator from Maine, and I hope the Senator from New York will consider them in the same spirit.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I take some pride in the fathership of this bureau, for I was upon the Committee on Appropriations when the first appropriation was made for it. If anything shows the growth of this country, it is the fact that this bureau began with an appropriation of $15,000 in the first act, and has gone on to this great extent. However, that is another matter.

There seems to be a general opinion that it ought to be transferred to the civil department of the Government. In that it seems to me all agree, but there seems to be difficulty in getting the transfer instantly. I suggest to the Senator why not embody in the bill the transfer and make it take effect next December, or next January, and in the meantime require the present head of the bureau, who has the experience that the new head of the Agricultural Department would not have, to prepare a system which is to take effect, semi-civil and semi-military, if that is the expectation, under this new bureau? Would he not be able to make this preparation better than anybody else, and would it not in the mean time go on with the least friction, go on substantially just as it does now, yet with the known fact that at the day fixed it is to be transferred, and then let him report this necessary change to the next session of Congress? I make that suggestion.

Mr. MILLER. I receive the suggestion in the spirit in which it is given, as friendly to the measure, but I can hardly approve of it. The suggestion, if carried out, would mean that the Chief of the Signal Service Bureau should have the power to make this transfer, and to make all the arrangements and all the details of it. In short, it would fall within his province to say what should be the conditions under which the men should remain in the service, or should go into the service, and that is something which I want to leave to Congress at the next session.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not understand me. I mean that he should report to Congress at the next session a plan of transfer and organization under the civil bureau; that is all. It is only a question whether he or this new secretary could do it best.

Mr. MILLER. I propose to put in as a proviso to the amendment, if it shall be adopted, that the present Chief Signal Service Officer of the Army, who holds his commission for life, or until he is promoted or retired, may continue to act as the chief of this bureau until the President shall appoint a new civil officer to take charge of it. It is quite probable that under that provision the President would leave the Chief Signal Service Officer in charge of this bureau until next winter. I have no doubt he would, and I propose to offer that proviso.

Mr. DAWES. It may be that the Senator will work out the same result in that way.

Mr. MILLER. I think we shall arrive at the same result. Taking the amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama, to which I see no objection, and which, perhaps, is a better way of putting it, and then making this amendment take effect on the 1st day of July, 1887, instead of on the passage of the act, and then taking the provision suggested by the Senator from Iowa in regard to the continuance of the second lieutenants in the service, and in regard to their pay and emoluments, with some other provisions, I think the amendment will be in a condition under which the service can be carried on without any inconvenience during the coming year until Congress shall meet again.

But I want to say that neither the chairman of the committee nor the committee as a whole has any pride of opinion in this matter, and if after having perfected this section the Senate shall think it wise to leave the service just as it is, in the Army, and strike this section out of the bill, the committee will have no complaint to make. It is submitting the best plan that it can get; it has taken the views of the joint committee which investigated all the scientific departments of the Government and made report; and, in short, the sixth section is the result of their labors, as I understand from the Senator from Alabama.

Without detaining the Senate any longer, I will ask for the reading of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, so that we may take the amendments in order, in line 1 of section 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6, line 1, after the word "the," it is proposed to insert "weather service of the;" so as to read:

That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the department of agriculture and labor, &c.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. MILLER. Does the Senator oppose that amendment? If not, I should like to get the amendment made. If the Senator opposes the whole section, very well; but I want to perfect the section, if possible.

Mr. BECK. No; I am in favor of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Chair will put the question on the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let us see where that comes in and how it will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It will read:

SEC. 6. That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the department of agriculture and labor, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to inquire what is meant by "the weather service?" It must include a certain personnel. It seems to me by the amendment that is left utterly vague and uncertain, whether it carries with it the Chief Signal Officer, the lieutenants, sergeants, or who, or whether it carries to this new department that is to be created simply the subject, the business. It seems to me in making a transfer of this kind that should be made very plain.

Mr. MILLER. As I have already stated, there is no proper legal title to this service known in the statutes of the United States. We have got to describe it the best way we can.

Mr. HARRISON. That may be very true, but still there is a way of avoiding this objection.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator suggest it?

Mr. HARRISON. The suggestion I have made would be directly in the line of that made by the Senator from Maine. The trouble here is that we have a weather service and a Signal Service. The Signal Service embraces instruction in army signaling with flags. It has connected with it also the army telegraph, which has its organized corps with a view of training men in the business of setting up during war and upon fields of battle temporary telegraph lines that commanding officers may communicate readily from one headquarters to another. All this is in charge of one bureau, and these lieutenants, and sergeants, and corporals are instructed not simply in taking weather notes, recording them, and making observations and calculations, but in these other duties.

Mr. MORGAN. That is exactly where the Senator is mistaken. The Signal Service Bureau of the United States has no practical connection with the Army of the United States whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator says "practical." I undertake to say that the Signal Service Bureau, which has been under the charge of General Hazen and now under the charge of Captain Greely, does embrace instruction practically in the two branches that I have spoken of.

Mr. MORGAN; Yes; but it is instructing civilians and not soldiers.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know why the Senator from Alabama says that. These men are enlisted in the service of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will allow me to state the reason for it. The Signal Service of the Army of the United States is entirely a separate establishment from the Signal Service Bureau. That is organized in the Army, under the control of the Army commanders, and the appropriations for it are entirely separate from the Signal Service Bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, will the Senator from Alabama answer me what constitutes the personnel of the Signal Service Bureau as he describes it?

Mr. MORGAN. It is constituted at present of a Chief Signal Officer with the rank of a brigadier-general now recently until the death of General Hazen.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not composed also of sixteen second lieutenants?

Mr. MORGAN. Sixteen second lieutenants.

Mr. HARRISON. And a certain number of sergeants and privates.

Mr. MORGAN. A certain number of sergeants, corporals, and privates.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the entire personnel of this bureau belongs to the Army of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what some people suppose, but I think General Sheridan does not so acknowledge it.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not a question of General Sheridan's view, but what is the legislation on the subject.

Mr. MORGAN. It is a question of legal construction. General Hazen did not assume that it was an Army establishment, and never took the control of it as such.

Mr. MILLER. These privates have never been connected with any company or regiment.

Mr. HARRISON. That may be very true, but that is far from showing that they are not enlisted men in the Army of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. I did not say that they were not enlisted men in the Army of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. There are men enlisted in the Engineer Corps, but they are not assigned to companies.

Mr. MILLER. I did not say they were not in the Army of the United States, but I say the Signal Service of the Army of the United States is an entirely different establishment from the Signal Service Bureau in every respect, and there is no connection between the two in appropriations or in any other way.

Mr. HARRISON. But the fact is, according to the admission of the Senator from Alabama, that the entire personnel of this bureau belongs to the Army of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. It does; but it does not belong to the Signal Corps of the Army of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Then we are in confusion here, as I started out to say, in what we are transferring.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not responsible for the Senator's confusion. He is confused because he does not understand it. That is all.

Mr. HARRISON. There may be a difference of opinion as to which of us has the better understanding of this matter.

I will state my view of this question. I support and agree entirely with the opinion expressed by the Senator from Maine. We are here attempting to divide what has constituted one organization and to transfer part of it to this new department and to leave a part of it in the Army of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Alabama says no. Will he be good enough to tell me what would be left of the Signal Corps if this amendment of his and the section to which it is an amendment should pass?

Mr. MORGAN. Nothing in the world except the chief of that corps, who is a brigadier-general in the Army of the United States. That is all that would be left of it.

Mr. HARRISON. If he is left attached to the corps because he is a brigadier-general of the Army of the United States, why are not the sixteen lieutenants left with him?

Mr. MORGAN. I was about to add, but the Senator broke in, that the sixteen lieutenants, who belong to the Army of the United States, are commissioned therein without any particular assignment to regiments or to respective grades.

Mr. HARRISON. Very good. Then we understand that the Chief Signal Officer and sixteen lieutenants would not be transferred.

Mr. MORGAN. They would be transferred in this way: The amendment provides that they shall go along with the organization until the President appoints an officer to be chief of the weather bureau. They go right along with it. The object of this amendment, and I think a proper object, is merely to take this Signal Service Bureau as it exists out of the War Department and put it into the new department of agriculture and labor.

Mr. HARRISON. With its entire personnel?

Mr. MORGAN. Everything, just as it is.

Mr. HARRISON. Then it leaves the Signal Service proper of the Army absolutely denuded. It has no commanding officer; it has no lieutenants or sergeants, no personnel left.

Mr. MORGAN. It has already a perfect organization, with General Sheridan at the head of it, running down through every post.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand perfectly well that army signaling is taught in the Army proper outside of this corps.

Mr. MORGAN. And there is an organization to carry it out.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator knows or ought to know that this does not in any way affect the Signal Corps of the Army, which has no connection with it whatever. I have no doubt he knows that perfectly well.

Mr. HARRISON. I am answering two gentlemen at once and they do not seem to agree. The Senator from Alabama tells me that this transfers the entire personnel of the Signal Service of the Army to the control of this new department of agriculture and labor, and the Senator from New York says it does not affect the Signal Service of the Army at all.

Mr. MILLER. I said the Signal Service Corps.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no corps left, the Senator from Alabama tells me; it is a complete transfer of the entire personnel.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is quite mistaken. I never told him that. I told him there was a perfect corps of signal officers and signal men in the Army of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand, but it is not an organization by law at all. It is simply that under War Department orders, at the schools of instruction at Leavenworth and at Fortress Monroe and perhaps at the posts of the Army, army signaling, or what General Sherman used to call wig-wag, is taught, but it is taught not to a separate corps in the Army, but is taught to the officers and men who are detailed to receive that instruction. The only Signal Corps connected with the Army is this corps; there is none other.

Mr. MILLER. Now, if the Senator will permit me to ask him a question, does he not know that these sixteen or eighteen second lieutenants and some four or five hundred men who are enlisted in the Army and have been simply in this Weather Bureau service, have never had any connection with the Signal Corps of the Army at all and do not have anything to do with it to-day, and have never been used for signaling in the Army in any way whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. I answer the Senator that there has been no call for army signaling in the field since the close of the war of the rebellion that I know of except in Indian service. I know that each of these men, every private, every sergeant, every lieutenant, is carefully instructed in army signaling, or was at Fort Myer, in the construction, erection, and operation of army telegraph lines. I know all that. I know they were trained in infantry tactics and in cavalry tactics, and, as I had occasion once to ascertain when I was upon a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, they are also instructed in stable duties in connection with their cavalry service. It seemed to me that this was unnecessary at the time; and I am not here antagonizing this transfer, but only endeavoring to support, if I can, the proposition of the Senator from Maine, that, as we are undertaking here to decide on this transfer, we ought at least to consider the question whether we should leave any signal service corps in the Army; and, if so, how many lieutenants we should leave with it, what portion of this corps should be left, what its future organization should be. That is one matter to be considered, and it ought to be considered and reported upon by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

In the same connection we ought to consider what is necessary to give a complete organization to this new bureau that is to be attached to the department of agriculture and labor. I believe the prevailing sentiment is in favor of such a transfer. I am not opposing it myself; but I am only pleading for a full consideration of this question by the appropriate committees of the Senate, so that, instead of doing this thing hastily and patching it up afterward, it may be done at the outset, after a complete consideration of what will be necessary to the Army in the nature of a signal corps and exactly what the relations and status and duties of those military officers are to be, if they to be transferred to a civil department.

I think, therefore, it would be better if this matter could be left over and considered first by the Committee on Military Affairs and afterwards by the Committee on Agriculture, and that those two committees, having considered the whole subject, should report a complete and wise distribution of the duties and personnel of this somewhat nonhomogeneous bureau as it is now.

Mr. MILLER. This proposition is not so new and crude as the Senator from Indiana would indicate. It has been investigated, and I hold in my hand a small volume containing the investigation made by two joint commissions, one under the act of July 7, 1884, and continued under the act of March 3, 1885, the chairman of which was WILLIAM B. ALLISON, of Iowa, and another Senator by the name of EUGENE HALE, of Maine, was a member of it, and a number of other people have been engaged in this investigation for several years. This amendment has been suggested and drawn by two of the Senators who were engaged in this investigation.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether he understands that the commission that went through this laborious and important investigation did as a commission recommend this transfer?

Mr. MILLER. I said that this amendment, as it appears here, is the work of at least two of the Senators who were upon the commission.

Mr. HALE. The truth is that after spending three years upon this subject and other kindred subjects the commission, with plenty of time, found it so difficult a matter to adjust this transfer that it did not even then attempt it by reporting any bill which should provide for the transfer. It is beset with a thousand difficulties. Whoever undertakes to administer this change, if it takes place under the amendment that is now before the Senate, will find himself environed with difficulties every hour of every day. The more I think of it the more I see reason to take pause and think twice before adopting the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Well, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not be frightened or deterred from taking proper action because of the difficulties that lie in the way after three years of investigation. This has been the result at all events arrived at by a part of the commission. Now, if the matter is to be sent back to another commission, I suppose three years more may be expended in an investigation, and I believe we have got here in this amendment, or will have when it is perfected, about all that we can expect to get in advance upon a proposition of this kind.

We find here a bureau which has grown to enormous proportions. The Senator from Massachusetts told us that he was upon the committee that gave the first appropriation of $15,000 for the starting of this weather signal bureau, and it has grown now until the cost, I believe, is nearly if not quite a million dollars per annum; and as the country increases in population and the settlements advance on the frontier, it must grow with the country and become more expensive, and the difficulties of the transfer will be greater.

We have provided in this amendment that this bureau shall be transferred. The first difficulty is about the title. There is no legal title. We want simply to get the best title we can get for it and one which the officers of the Government will understand in making the transfer.

Then it is provided further that the entire force of this bureau as it is now organized, including second lieutenants, shall continue in and go with the transfer and remain with all the rights that they now have as to pay and emoluments and that their rank in the Army shall remain as now until changed by law.

That gives time for the transfer, gives time for the new secretary and the new chief of the bureau to make their investigations and to make their report to Congress, and then Congress will be able to act intelligently as to the future organization of this bureau. It may entirely disorganize it; it may, if it see fit, entirely take away its military character; it may remove the enlistment of the privates, it may do away with them and have them appointed the same as clerks are appointed in any of the other Departments. It may make it a purely civil bureau, or it may organize it on the basis of the revenue-marine service, in which the persons holding subordinate places are regularly enlisted, the same as in the Navy, and in which they are promoted to lieutenancies and captaincies and hold those positions for life. Congress may do whatever they may see fit at the next session, but until Congress shall act again all these subordinates, all these sixteen lieutenants, are to remain in the service precisely as they are now. They will report, of course, to, and receive their orders from, the new secretary of the department of agriculture and labor, but they will be held by their oath to serve the Government. They will be under the rules and regulations of that bureau as it is now organized; there can be no escape from it. Therefore I see little danger of any great confusion or trouble, and if there is to be, there is no other way of overcoming this trouble and this difficulty except to go forward and to meet it, and you can only meet it by putting it into this department and having the experiment made.

I have not any doubt as to what the result will be. There will be more trouble, perhaps, in turning over the property of this bureau than in any other matter; and I had drawn an amendment which I proposed to submit to the Senate on that question, which simply provides that the Secretary of War, immediately after the passage of this act, or within thirty days, shall appoint a board of three Army officers who shall take an inventory of all the property used by this bureau, and shall turn over to the new department such portions of it as are suitable for the Weather Bureau service, and shall retain in the control of the War Department that which properly belongs to the War Department, including, of course, the military telegraph lines west of the Mississippi River.

With such a board as that to take charge of the property of this bureau, to segregate it, make an inventory, and turn over to the new department that which would necessarily and properly belong to it and to retain that which belongs to the War Department, it seems to me we can provide for it with as little friction as we can by any system. But if this bureau is to be turned over, it seems to me it had better be done now at the beginning of the organization of this new department in the Government. But, as I said a moment ago, neither the chairman of the committee nor the committee as a whole has any pride of opinion about that.

What I want to do in the next few minutes, if it can be done without discussion, is to try to perfect this section, and then let the Senate say whether it will adopt it or not. If the Senate shall reject it I shall have no word of complaint to make; in fact, I do not know but that I shall be quite as well satisfied to have it rejected as adopted, because I do not want anything to embarrass the final passage of this bill by the two Houses of Congress. With this amendment upon it it must go back to the House of Representatives to be acted upon there. If this amendment were not put upon it the few technical amendments that we have made in the main body of the bill would be undoubtedly concurred in by the House without difficulty. Still, I believe that even with this section put upon it the passage of the bill can be secured through both Houses of Congress, and that it can be enacted into a law.

Another consideration perhaps which might weigh with the Senate now in making this transfer is that there is to be a new chief appointed to this bureau, General Hazen having died. If the transfer is to be made, perhaps it would be better it should be made now at the beginning of the service of a new officer rather than to wait for a year or longer until the service has again settled down into the old methods. Unless the Senator from Indiana can suggest a better description of this bureau than that suggested in the amendment itself, or that proposed by the Senator from Alabama, I hope we may have this adopted.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what becomes of the Chief Signal Officer now, the successor of General Hazen, if this transfer is made. Is he transferred with this bureau?

Mr. MILLER. Some time ago I read to the Senate what I proposed to add as an amendment or proviso. At the proper place I propose to provide—

The Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the weather bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Then what becomes of him?

Mr. MILLER. He retains his rank and position as chief Signal Officer of the Army. Let me read the law creating this office.

Mr. TELLER. What will his duties be then?

Mr. MILLER. Just as they have always been since the office was first created, with the exception that he will not be in charge of this bureau. His duties will be such, I suppose, as the commander of the Army may assign to him, and it will in no way affect his rank or position in the Army. The law now provides, according to the Revised Statutes of 1878:

SEC. 1195. There shall be one Chief Signal Officer, with the rank of colonel of cavalry, who shall have charge, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of all signal duty, and of all books, papers, and apparatus connected therewith.

This provision in no way affects that officer at all.

Mr. HALE. That was amended afterward by raising the rank to brigadier-general.

Mr. MILLER. This bill will in no way affect him. If any Senator fears that it will, I shall be glad to put in a proviso that it shall in no way affect him, because I propose to offer an amendment that it shall not affect the standing of the subordinates. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6, line 1, after the word "the," it is proposed to insert "weather service of the;" so as to read:

That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the department of agriculture and labor.

Mr. BECK. I have risen to take the floor two or three times and have given way to everybody. I am not going to debate the bill nor to find any particular fault with it except to say that I think the amendment of the Senator from Alabama ought to be adopted and that a good many others will have to be adopted in order to make this transfer work at all, if indeed it can be made to work without an elaborate provision.

We have already made provision for the Signal Service in all its branches in the sundry civil appropriation bill. That bill has passed both Houses and is now in conference on amendments to it. We are now within seven days of the adjournment of Congress, and I do not well see how the military branch of the Signal Service can be separated from the other and provisions made under a general clause transferring it all, without a great deal of confusion unless amendments are made changing very much section 6 of this bill, which provides for the transfer in a very general way.

I am one of those who believe now, after a good deal of resistance, that the time has come when we have to enlarge the number of our Cabinet officers and to refer to the new department many of the things that have been going on elsewhere heretofore. Therefore I am in favor of having a department of agriculture, but I would add to it if I had my way—but, of course, I have not—and make it the department of agriculture and internal commerce. I would transfer to that department all matters relating to the internal commerce of this country. I would send the improvement of rivers and harbors there, the Railroad Commissioner, the Educational Bureau, as well as the Labor Bureau, and dignify it so that it would be a department in fact as well as in name.

Some of the Departments of this Government now are sadly overworked. Take the Treasury Department, for instance. Less than twenty-five years ago the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives performed all the work now performed by the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Coinage, and perhaps other committees, and did not have as much hard work to do then as any one of those committees has to-day. I mention that to show the growth of the country and its business. There is a vast difference between the Treasury Department to-day and ten years ago, when I first came to the Senate. I wanted a division then, but I never saw exactly how to get it done.

The Treasury Department ought to be divided, and will have to be divided. The ablest man in America, with our complex tariff laws, charged with collecting the revenues of this country, construing the laws so as to have uniformity of collection at all the ports, and seeing that the revenues of the Government are carefully collected, the laws carefully construed, and the money paid into the Treasury, should have no further duties. It would require another secretary, with another corps of assistants equally as efficient, to see that that money is properly taken out of the Treasury for the use of the Army and Navy and the thousand things to which it has to go. At present all receipts and all disbursements go through one head and one set of books, and many of us know the confusion that has arisen in the minds of many men in regard to that. I believe my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who is looking at me, knows the trouble we have had at times in some committees with those books and accounts.

I would send the Pension Bureau to the War Department. Now one of the Auditors in the Treasury Department has charge of the accounts of one department and another of another. Let the War Department manage the pension business. The Interior Department then would have more than any man can manage. The great Patent Office, the Land Office, the Indian service, and many other things that it has to attend to, are enough to engage the attention of the ablest man in the country.

I am not opposed now to the experiment of an agricultural department, but I would have it a department of agriculture and internal commerce. That would give it a standing that would bring it to the dignity of a Cabinet office. I would let it have charge of the internal railroad system, which we have now taken under our control, and the other great matters named in this bill. Let the Education Bureau go there and the other things that are named in the bill.

The sixth section I have great difficulty about, not difficulty about transferring the weather service; I think that is well; but there is great difficulty in making proper provision by an amendment drawn hurriedly, as is necessarily the case, so as to give the War Department all the power it ought to have over its own Signal Corps, to keep efficient men there to do all the work necessary for the Army, for we have no use for it in time of peace. We have no use for the regiments then, but we have them to educate and to put on a basis to carry on war when it comes. That is all we use an army or a navy for—for contingencies that may arise.

Let the Weather Bureau come under the Agricultural Department by a carefully guarded provision. I would not have soldiers there. I agree with the Senator from Alabama that enlisted men there for a term of years, subject to court-martial or to be ordered from point to point, are not as apt to do good service as young men employed from civil life standing upon their character and their reputation and their future prospects, and there is no use in keeping a man for five years on compulsion. You will find he is of no account knowing that he is only liable to dismissal by court-martial, but you should dismiss him the moment he is not efficient.

These employés are men educated in colleges; and competent young men can be had. All that I agree to; but I doubt exceedingly, unless the section is very much amended, whether we shall not have great trouble in dividing the work, and I say that because I have heard the Senator from Alabama, the Senator from Iowa, and the Senator from Maine, and other Senators who sat on that joint commission for years endeavoring to find out some effective way of improving this service and putting its organization in something like shape in the form of a law.

I remember, in 1870, I think it was, or perhaps in 1869, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and I believe General Paine, of Wisconsin, then a member, called attention to the matter. After a good deal of time he got an appropriation of a few thousand dollars, and the thing has gone along without any particular regularity, so that it is almost impossible to tell under what law it is.

Mr. MORGAN. I will read an order of the War Department:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, October 12, 1885.

By direction of the Secretary of War the following regulation is published, and will be numbered paragraph 2574½ of the Regulations.

2574½. In times of peace a detail of not less than one officer and three enlisted men will be kept constantly under instruction and practice in military signaling at each post in the United States, until the officers and all men who have sufficient intelligence are proficient in the use of the general service code with flag, torch, and heliograph, and homographic code with disks. The post commander will detail an acting signal officer at each post to give the necessary instruction and supervise field practice. The monthly reports of instructions and practice will be rendered to the Chief Signal Officer through department commanders.

By command of Lieutenant-General Sheridan:

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

That is the basis of the Signal Corps in the Army for which Congress makes separate appropriations entirely distinct from the civil-service Signal Bureau.

Mr. BECK. These are orders that may be revoked at any moment. I suppose, however, a legal service could be built up by orders.

Mr. MORGAN. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. BECK. I believe in civilian service for another reason. I believe that we shall not progress in knowledge of these scientific weather observations as well under military as under civil rule. Military rule, however good it may be for some purposes, means simply obedience and command. The other means investigation, and the young men who are picked up from civil life, young men who will go in with the spirit of investigation and development, not merely for command, not merely to carry out routine, which is a great feature in all military discipline, will feel stimulated to advance the service. The result will be that a spirit of investigation will be aroused, each young man to do better than others. The spirit of emulation among them will, in a short time, under scientific and capable men, develop a system that we shall never get under any army organization. Therefore I sympathize with the attempt if it can be properly adjusted, but I greatly fear that the section can hardly be amended so as to do the thing well now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Now, in line 3 of section 6, after the word "labor," add:

To take effect July 1, 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, section 6, after the word "labor," it is proposed to insert:

To take effect July 1, 1887.

So as to read:

That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture and Labor, to take effect July 1, 1887, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Now, in line 6, after the word "force," add the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa:

Including the second lieutenants now in service.

Mr. TELLER. Let that be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it come in after "bureau."

Mr. MILLER. Yes; that would be better.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 6 of section 6 it is proposed to add:

Including the second lieutenants now in service.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. At the end of the sentence, in line 7, I move to add:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps.

This has been suggested by the officers themselves. It will do no harm to put it in. I do not think the bill will affect them, but this will certainly save their rights.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONGER. I fear the effect of that would be that ten or fourteen lieutenants, who have acquired their commissions as such by service in the Signal Corps, will lose their rights in the Army. They are now lieutenants in the Army.

Mr. MILLER. This amendment is suggested by the officers of the corps themselves. It is put in at their suggestion as a saving clause.

Mr. CONGER. What is the object of it?

Mr. MILLER. The object of this is to save whatever their rights may be. That is perhaps a question of law, but it is simply desired that there shall be no influence against them in the bill. We leave it to be decided by the Attorney-General, the Secretary of War, or the President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York what he understands the effect of this section, if passed, will be in regard to the control of these people who are now in the military service being turned over to the civil administration—whether the civil administration will control them or the military administration?

Mr. MILLER. I have no doubt that the civil administration, the head of this department, will control them, for the time being until Congress shall pass some other law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can they get out by resignation?

Mr. MILLER. The private can not get out by resignation. I suppose a commissioned officer could if it were accepted—not by resignation unless it be accepted. As these are men in the Army, they could not get out of this service without their resignation being accepted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They continue then to be military people, subject to the rules and regulations for the government of the Army and to military law, but still under the exclusive orders of the head of a department which is a civil department; and, therefore, the government of them is taken away from the Secretary of War and their responsibility for conduct is transferred to the secretary of agriculture. Is that it?

Mr. MILLER. The condition of these men is undoubtedly anomalous. They have been enlisted nominally into the Army, I suppose, but really into this corps. None of these privates, sergeants, or corporals have ever belonged to any company or regiment of the Regular Army at all. They have been enlisted for this particular service. Whether, under their enlistment, they could be transferred and compelled to go out and fight the Indians, I very much doubt; but the Senator from Iowa says that they could not be, that they have been enlisted entirely for this service and that they could not be taken away from it. I think there would be no difficulty in regard to that. There is still another amendment to be proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. In line 10 of section 6, after the word "and," I move to insert the other amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa in regard to pay:

The compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now and.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Going back to line 10 of section 6, after the word "Senate," I move to insert:

Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

I think that would be wise.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Before leaving this section I propose the following amendment, which has not been submitted to the committee and is simply one that I have drawn up myself, thinking it would be necesssary:

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed within thirty days after the passage of this act to appoint a board of three army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau and shall separate and turn over to the department of agriculture and labor such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau.

I shall have to change the title in the beginning there.

The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War, as at present.

It seems that there is a large amount of valuable property in the control of this bureau and at different stations all over the country, some of which property belongs to the Army itself, and which is of no use to the Weather Bureau service but is of value to the Army. This applies particularly, I should say, to the military telegraph lines, of which there are some two or three thousand miles west of the Mississippi River. These telegraph lines, of course, are used by the Army, and are used in this Weather Bureau service as well; but they should undoubtedly remain in the control of the Army, and they may be used to send the signal or weather messages over them.

It seems to me that whatever of friction or of trouble has been anticipated in this transfer will be largely obviated by the addition of this provision to the section. It certainly can do no harm, and if no one sees any objection to it I will offer it, to come in at the end of section 6.

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as an addition to section 6:

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed within thirty days after the passage of this act to appoint a board of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all the property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau, and shall separate and turn over to the department of agriculture and labor such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau. The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MILLER. Change the designation there of the Signal Service Bureau to correspond with the first line of the section as amended by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the committee as amended, known as section 6?

Mr. HALE. Before that is done I want the amendment, as it has been amended several times, read now continuously, so that we may know just what its position is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as it stands.

Mr. MILLER. I want to go back first to complete a formal amendment in line 2 of section 5. Let it be read as it is now in the bill.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, section 5, strike out "division" and insert "bureau."

Mr. MILLER. After the word "bureau," the words "of labor" should be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that we ought to strike out the words "that there shall be in the department of agriculture a division." All that ought to go out and the words "said bureau of labor" should commence the section.

Mr. MILLER. "Agriculture and labor" is the name of the department. Then there is a bureau of labor.

Mr. TELLER. That is already provided for in another section.

Mr. MILLER. No; that is for the transfer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the sixth section as amended has been called for. It will now be read as amended.

The SECRETARY. As amended the section proposed by the committee as section 6 reads:

SEC. 6. That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the department of agriculture and labor to take effect July 1, 1887, and shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau including the second lieutenants now in service shall continue as at present: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and the compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now, and the moneys appropriated for said service and hereafter appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the secretary of the department of agriculture and labor.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed within thirty days of the passage of this act to appoint a board of three army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau and shall separate and turn over to the department of agriculture and labor such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau. The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question being put, the ayes were 18.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I learn from his colleague that he would vote "yea" if present, and I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the negative). I am reminded that I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I had forgotten it when I cast my vote. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—37.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MILLER, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season, and agreed to the same.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2256, being the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuropneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order to lay a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that anything can be laid on the table; but that would be only a negative form of the same proposition.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I believe I can not move to amend the motion of the Senator from New York under the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed for the purpose of taking up House joint resolution 170.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Allow me to suggest to the Senator to move that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the pending bill be postponed with a view to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific Railroads which have received aid from the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That motion is not in order. It has got to be a motion to postpone until a day certain or indefinitely, one or the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What time does the Senator propose?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move to postpone until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the pending bill be postponed until to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That makes it a special order, requiring two-thirds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask, does a motion to postpone to a certain hour require more than a majority vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. It does not make it a special order, in the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. BECK. I asked the question because of the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I announce again my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, he should vote "yea."

Mr. FAIR (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. VANCE. I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I desire to vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 31; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would ask unanimous consent to make a suggestion in relation to the motion of the Senator from New Jersey. There seems to have been, as I understood yesterday, some misunderstanding between the two sides of the Chamber. I would suggest in view of the importance of the measure, which is conceded, that it should be designated that Friday be given, as much time as may be necessary for the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator from New York to yield a few moments to me.

Mr. MILLER. The bill may be laid aside informally temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes, was read.

Mr. MILLER. Now I will let the Senator from Maine have a few minutes.

FLORIDA LAND GRANTS.

Mr. FRYE. I yield to the Senator from New York, who has a motion he desires to make.

Mr. EVARTS. I desire to give notice of a motion to reconsider the Senate bill No. 3300, which was passed yesterday while I was absent from the Senate engaged before a committee, and that a message be sent to the other House desiring the return of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the bill referred to, Senate bill No. 3300——

Mr. MORGAN. What is the bill?

Mr. EVARTS. The title of the bill is a bill (S. 3300) to provide for the judicial determination of the rights of the United States in lands granted to the State of Florida for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, under an act of Congress approved May 17, 1856, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that a message be sent to the House of Representatives recalling the bill, he entering a motion to reconsider. He has a right to enter a motion to reconsider. If there be no objection, the order for the return of the bill will be made.

Mr. CALL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the Senator from New York having entered a motion to reconsider, an order to recall the bill follows as a matter of course.

Mr. CALL. Then I ask that the motion to reconsider be decided now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to recall the bill is usually put.

Mr. CALL. I object to the recall of the bill, or I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, whichever is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not put the question on the motion to reconsider, which the Senator from New York has a right to enter, until the bill is recalled.

Mr. CALL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order. The Senator from Florida moves that the motion to reconsider lie on the the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I rise to a point of order. I ask whether the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table is in order until after the motion has been put to cause the return of the bill from the House. Rule XIII provides that the motion shall be put at once without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order made by the Senator from Oregon is right, on looking on the rule.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the second clause of the rule.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> 2. When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate, and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same, which last motion shall be acted upon immediately, and without debate, and if determined in the negative, shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Florida making a statement?

Mr. MILLER. I yield temporarily. If we can have any assurance that this thing is not to last over five minutes I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule specially requires that the motion shall be put without debate.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator from Florida makes an explanation my colleague will require the same courtesy.

Mr. EVARTS. It is but fair, perhaps, that I should make a little explanation myself, and it may be entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Florida making a brief statement on the subject? ["None!"] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLATT. Five minutes each.

Mr. CALL. I desire to say that this bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands and is for the settlement of land titles in the State of Florida. It refers the questions to the courts of the United States. A receiver, an officer of a court of the United States, as I understand from the Senator from New York, is here objecting to the passage of the bill which submits and only submits the whole question to the courts of the United States to decide.

I introduced a forfeiture bill, but I accepted this bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands in conformity with previous bills that had been passed for the determination of all these questions by the courts of the United States. Having shown conclusively that there never was a grant of this land, I have accepted the arbitrament of the courts, and that is the bill which has been passed by the Senate and which is asked to be returned from the House. I wish to say that there is no ground in private honesty or public policy or the interest of creditors or any other that should object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. EVARTS. I have no complaint to make of what occurred yesterday in the Senate on this subject when I was absent. I was necessarily engaged in a committee of the Senate in session, and the matter had come up in this wise: Some time ago a resolution was introduced by the Senator from Florida that was to pass through the Senate alone, and was to operate as I thought injuriously to the interests of certain constituents of mine, and I opposed therefore its consideration here without its going to a committee. It then went to the Committee on Public Lands and the parties all had an opportunity to be heard. When yesterday my attention was called to the bill that had been reported from that committee I assumed, perhaps too readily, that my constituents and their interests had been sufficiently attended to and disposed of satisfactorily to them. I was led to that feeling because this bill had been reported from that committee by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who had taken the same view with myself in opposition to the resolution of the Senator from Florida that had been disposed of adversely to him, and I did say to the Senator from Florida exactly what he stated, which was in these words: When my colleague [Mr. MILLER] spoke of my continued absence and of his intelligence that I did not object to the bill the Senator from Florida said:

> Mr. CALL. I submitted the bill to him. He read it carefully, and makes no objection to it.

That is an accurate statement, although it carries the notion that I approved of the bill. What I said to the Senator was that I would not object to its being considered. Now, I understand, though not very explicitly, that the interests, which are important, of very respectable persons who advanced a great deal of money in this road have not been adequately, in their view, regarded in this disposition that has been made by the committee; and my only desire at present is, as I have expressed to the Senator from Florida, to enter this motion that the bill may be here in order that it may come up for consideration for me to have an opportunity, which I shall soon have, of learning the facts and proofs in regard to the satisfaction of these interests.

That is all that I wish to say, and the Senate must dispose of the question.

Mr. CALL. I ask consent that a member of the Committee on Public Lands make a statement in regard to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill?

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senate that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], who is a member of the Committee on Public Lands, may be permitted to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair heard objection made, but the Chair will again put the question. Is there objection to a statement being made by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BERRY. I simply desire, at the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], to state that it is well known to the Senate that he has persistently urged for weeks and months the passage of a bill or resolution forfeiting the lands which were granted to the State of Florida and are claimed by this railroad company. He was persistent in that purpose from time to time until finally the matter went to the Committee on Public Lands, and that committee reported unanimously, through the Senator from Alabama, in favor of the passage of this bill, which submitted the entire matter to the Federal courts, where each party can be heard, and it provides that if this company are entitled to the land they shall have it, and it shall be theirs forever; but if, upon the other hand, they never took the grant, then the land is restored to the public domain.

That was considered to be fair to all parties; those who had opposed the resolution of the Senator from Florida and those who were understood to defend the rights of the railroad company as well as the rights of the citizen. All consented to this.

Now, a reconsideration or a recall of that bill from the other House simply defeats the action that was had by the committee and the action of the Senate yesterday, and defeats entirely the forfeiture and defeats the proposition that it shall go to the courts, there to be determined as between the parties.

The bill which passed the Senate and refers the matter to the courts was prepared by the Senator from Alabama, was understood by all, and a reconsideration or recall of the bill at this hour of the session defeats any action whatever and leaves the railroad in possession of the land.

Mr. MORGAN. As my name has been referred to I hope I shall be indulged for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. This bill was a bill we passed for the purpose of composing differences on both sides which seemed irreconcilable. The bill was neither intended nor is it calculated to deprive any human being of any rights that exist in his favor under the law. I am sure of that. The committee were unanimous in reporting the bill as it is.

Mr. HARRISON. We can not hear what the Senator from Alabama is saying, and I should like to hear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order. Senators will please resume their seats.

Mr. MORGAN. There can be no rights connected with this land in Florida, I believe, that this bill does not dispose of by judicial decision. That is all I meant to say. The committee were unanimous in reporting it, and I think there is no difficulty or danger about the bill doing anybody any harm.

Mr. EVARTS. I do not desire to add to the personal explanation I have made, but it is not a proper inference that I approved of the bill. I did say that I would not oppose its being considered. That was under the impression that the interests represented by me in the matter had been adequately disposed of. I now learn, as I have stated, that that is not the situation. I have no desire to put this bill in a worse situation that it would have been in yesterday if I had then desired that it should stand over until I had an opportunity to confer. I have no desire whatever to kill the bill by delay, but I do desire, if I have the right, that I should have an opportunity for an understanding with the constituents who are interested, and properly interested, in the matter as to their satisfaction with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate request the House of Representatives to return the bill?

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 27; as follows:

So the Senate refused to recall the bill from the House of Representatives.

PACIFIC RAILROADS ACCOUNTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 3025, known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill, is before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I yielded the floor to the Senator from New York for a purpose.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield to me to give a notice?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice that I expect to-morrow to propose to the Senate to fix Friday at 2 o'clock for the consideration of the joint resolution in regard to the Union Pacific Railroad question. I am not able to make that motion to-day, because I desire to consult certain Senators who are interested as to the question of time, but I shall make the suggestion for bringing it up at an early day, and probably on Friday at 2 o'clock, which, I presume, will be satisfactory to gentlemen on all sides.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I did not understand to what subject the Senator alluded.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution for the investigation of the Pacific railroads.

THOMAS S. HOPKINS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. FRYE. I would like the courtesy of the Senator from New York for a very few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yielded some time ago temporarily to this, and in that way the other came in.

Mr. FRYE. After I have made a statement somewhat brief I am going to ask that the pending bill be laid aside for ten or fifteen minutes, and that the Senate consider the President's veto in the case of Thomas S. Hopkins, and I ask the Senate to listen to my statement because this is a remarkably exceptional case.

There were living on a farm in Maine in the early part of the war two boys, one sixteen years of age and the other twenty. The elder had just married a wife. They were both full of the inspiration of patriotism, and there was a controversy as to which should enlist. Finally it was decided that the boy, although young, should start first. He enlisted. In two months the elder brother also enlisted.

The elder was killed. The younger went to the front, remained at the front for eighteen months, then was stricken with a nervous disease, was transferred to the invalid corps, remained in the invalid corps until the close of the war, came home, went to Maine to work on the farm and found that he could not do it; he had not the physical strength. He returned to Washington, was appointed a clerk in the Treasury Department, remained there about six years, was twice promoted, and was finally offered the place of chief clerk at $2,500 a year, but in the mean time had been studying law, had passed an examination for admission to the bar, declined the preferment, resigned his place in the Treasury Department, and commenced the practice of law. He was successful, and built up a business that was worth from three to four thousand dollars a year.

He was one of the most magnificent specimens of a man I ever saw—6 feet high, handsome in person, his mind well cultivated and well stored with knowledge. In the mean time he married a wife and had two children by her. Every once in a while he would be stricken with this old disease, and for a week or so would be unable to work. He succeeded in laying up about $3,000, and early in 1878, in the streets of Washington, he was stricken by this old disease, fell to the ground, was carried home, and for nine years never has stood on his feet one single hour, and they have been nine years such as few other human beings probably ever endured, of pain terrible, fearful, night and day.

About two months ago one night, shortly after dinner, four men brought this stricken, this broken man into my room, in a reclining chair, laid him down, and I listened to his pitiful story. The good Lord knows I would have gone to him, even barefoot, if I had known he wished the interview.

He was stricken in 1878, and for more than two years no human being was permitted to see him except his wife, who staid with him night and day, and the attending physicians. For two years he could not lift a silver spoon; for two years he could not bear the weight of the coverlid on him, and if his foot accidentally touched the foot-board he at once fell into insensibility and into danger of his life. A neighbor presented a little silver spoon to him; it was on the mantel. His wife told him that when he was able to feed himself that silver spoon had been given to him by such a neighbor to use. He looked at it, and it seemed to him, as he told me, that the handle was as large as the mast of a ship, the bowl as immense as the hulk, and that no power on earth would enable him to lift it to his mouth; he sank into insensibility, and came near dying. They were compelled to take the spoon out of that room and keep it out of his sight for over two years. Not one of his children was permitted to see him for two years; he could not bear the sight. Men in extreme danger desire to pray, and this man, believing death to be near, tried.

He could not think of anything but the prayer of his childhood, and for three days he strove to recall the words, "Now I lay me down to sleep." He recalled "Now I lay me," and fell into insensibility, and it was hours before he could start the train of thought again, and when he did again he became insensible.

During those two years an act was passed by Congress increasing the pension of $50 to $72. He could take no benefit of it. During that same time an act was passed by Congress giving arrearages of pension, and a limitation was placed upon that act of two years. But it was provided that it should not run against insane men or children, and this man for two years and during the time he could otherwise have taken advantage of that law, had no mind, no body, no power of thought. In November, after that lapse of two years, a pen one day was put into his feeble fingers, and by assistance he wrote his name to an application for a pension. Immediately on doing it he became insensible, and the doctors feared that it would cause his death; but he revived.

A pension of $50 was immediately given him, and he has enjoyed it since; but he has employed leading physicians in Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and Washington, and the $3,000 he saved in the practice of the law have been eaten up by his necessities, and now he is nearly $2,000 in debt. The Congress of the United States passed a law through both branches opening the door to him to apply for arrearages. The President vetoed it. He vetoed it because he had not the information which I am giving the Senate, because no report of the Committee on Pensions gave him the information, because his attention was not called to the law and the limitation in the law, two years, with the humane provision that it should not be a bar to insane men and children.

Here is the statement of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, of Philadelphia, as to his condition at that time:

He could see or converse with no one but the members of his own family and his physicians, and even that intercourse was of the simplest and most limited character. He could not read or hear read a single line, or put forth the slightest mental effort without producing most distressing symptoms. He was so weak that he could not grasp a pen, lift a book, or feed himself.

The effort to read for even a short time was impossible. The slightest exertion, whether of a physical or mental character, threw him into a condition of nervous depression and exhaustion.

He was completely bedridden. * * * Muscular power almost nil. When asked to grasp your hand he could scarcely exert any appreciable force. He was unable to feed himself or make any voluntary effort to attend to his own wants.

Here is the affidavit of Drs. Fry and Johnston, of this city, eminent physicians, which the President did not have before him; I say this in justice to him:

W. W. Johnston, M. D., and H. D. Fry, M. D., of the city of Washington, D. C., deing duly sworn, depose and say:

That they have been the regular medical attendants of Thomas S. Hopkins during his long illness.

That his disease has been the severest case of nervous exhaustion which has ever come under their observation.

That from March 3, 1879, and for many months previous thereto, down to November, 1880, he was absolutely disqualified, both mentally and physically, from attending to the business of applying for a pension, or any other business, by reason of the intensity of his symptoms, and that there were no intervals, however short, during that period when he could have safely undertaken the work.

That the effort he made in applying at so early a date has seriously retarded his recovery.

That he is still confined to his bed, and requires the constant attendance of some one.

And during the time when he might have applied for the arrearages, if he had had mind enough, the supreme court of the District of Columbia was applied to by a party in interest to remove him from a trusteeship of real estate which he held, and the court on evidence removed him (and I quote the language of the court) "as totally unable to perform his duty as trustee under said deed of trust or to attend to any business whatever;" and two different notaries public, during the two years, called to get some business done, mere formal acts on his part, but they were not allowed to enter the applicant's room because of his critical condition.

The President says that if this door should be opened it would cost the Government $9,000—a profound mistake on the part of the President, because the bill provides that the rating shall be under the rules of the Department, and under those rules this man can not recover over $2,500 or $3,000 under any circumstances, because he would only be rated as his condition of health was during the fourteen or fifteen years he had no pension and had made no application. The President says it was his own neglect that he did not apply for a pension. I ask any Senator here if he would have expected the man I have described to apply for a pension when he was in the Treasury Department earning $2,000 a year, and then in the practice of the law earning three or four thousand dollars a year. He never dreamed of a pension then, and if he had I would not have asked the Senate of the United States to pass this bill over the President's veto by any manner of means.

The President says the door is a dangerous one to open. I say that the law itself opened the door to this man when it provided that that limitation should not run against an insane man or a child. What is insanity? Must the man be a maniac? This man had no power of mind during the whole two years when he could have applied for the arrearage of pension. It is proven as clearly as the day that he was utterly powerless, both mentally and physically. The moment he did have strength after that time elapsed he applied for his pension of $50.

Mr. President, we can open that door even if it has been closed and give this man his $2,500 or $3,000, but it is not in the power of the Senate to restore that magnificent specimen of manhood physically and intellectually. No money can do it, and no human power can accomplish it. Think of it! nine years, and not one single step; nine years, and not a moment without its pang.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill now under consideration may be laid aside for fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the pending order be postponed for fifteen minutes, with a view to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate, and it will be read.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Maine if it is clearly established by competent evidence that the disability under which Mr. Hopkins now labors had its origin in the service?

Mr. FRYE. It was. The Pension Department gave him a pension of $50 without the slightest hesitation after the physician had examined him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Thomas S. Hopkins, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, now on the pension-roll, be, and he is hereby, exempted, by reason of mental incapacity, from the limitation prescribed in section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes," and he shall be entitled to and there shall be paid to him the same rate of pension, and the same arrears thereof, as if his application for a pension had been filed with and allowed by the Commissioner of Pensions prior to June 16, 1880.

Mr. CALL. I shall vote for the passage of this bill. I give due credit to the President for his zeal in the public service, for the correctness of his intentions and high and honorable purposes; but I am satisfied on the statement of the Senator from Maine that an error has occurred in regard to the facts of this case. I accept his statement of the disability of this man, and the probabilities are that it originated in his active service. That being so, it is clearly a case of disability from making this application. It is a case where the disability has resulted from the service, and where the applicant is in the same position as if he were a minor, or as if he had been incapable of making his application in the time required by the law. As a matter of equity, I consider that under these circumstances he should have the benefit of the law passed by Congress.

Mr. RANSOM. I am not familiar with the report myself. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if the facts which he has so touchingly stated here to-day appear in the report of the Committee on Pensions, which was submitted when the bill was pending in the Senate?

Mr. ALDRICH. I made the report in this case from the Committee on Pensions. While I agree fully with what the Senator from Maine has said as to the merits of the case, I think it justice to the committee who made the report and certainly justice to myself that I should say that the facts as stated by him do appear in the report of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. Does the affidavit of Dr. Fry appear in the report?

Mr. ALDRICH. The affidavit of Dr. Fry does appear in the report of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. I was referring to a former report. It was not contained there at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the report on which the bill was passed in both Houses. I ask in justice to the committee to have the report read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the message of the President be read, and then we can hear the report of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report of the committee first.

Mr. HARRIS. I am indifferent as to which comes first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report having been first presented will be first read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. ALDRICH, March 25, 1886, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, having examined the same, make the following report:

Thomas S. Hopkins, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, seeks relief from the limitations of the arrears-of-pensions act of March 3, 1879, on the ground that from a time some months prior to the passage of said act down to a period subsequent to the 30th of June, 1880, he was prevented, by reason of the extreme severity of his illness and by mental and physical disabilities, from making an application for arrears in accordance with the provisions of said act. It appears that upon the first return of mental strength, and as soon as he could dictate a letter, namely, on November 20, 1880, that he made an application for a pension, which was granted him.

This claim received consideration in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and a bill granting the relief sought for passed the House of Representatives. The Senate Committee on Pensions, however, reported adversely upon it, on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to substantiate the claimant's disability. Subsequent to this report additional testimony upon this point was procured, including the following statement from Drs. W. W. Johnston and H. D. Fry, his attending physicians, which statement seems to your committee as conclusive evidence of the fact that during the time within which applications could be made for arrears of pension under the act above referred to the claimant was mentally and physically disabled from taking advantage of its provisions, and for these reasons the committee believe that the petitioner is entitled to the relief sought for, and they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as a substitute for Senate bill No. 183.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Columbia, ss:

W. W. Johnston, M. D., and H. D. Fry, M. D., of the city of Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, depose and say:

That they have been the regular medical attendants of Thomas S. Hopkins during his long illness.

That his disease has been the severest case of nervous exhaustion which has ever come under their observation.

That from March 8, 1879, and for many months previous thereto, down to November, 1880, he was absolutely disqualified, both mentally and physically, from attending to the business of applying for a pension, or any other business, by reason of the intensity of his symptoms; and that there were no intervals, however short, during that period when he could have safely undertaken the work.

That the effort he made in applying at so early a date has seriously retarded his recovery.

That he is still confined to his bed, and requires the constant attendance of some one.

That we have no pecuniary interest in the result of his pension claim.

W. W. JOHNSTON, M.D.,

H. D. FRY, M.D.,

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 7th day of June, 1882.
[SEAL.] MILTON C. BARNARD, Notary Public.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us hear the message of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the President of the United States will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without my approval Senate bill No. 183, entitled "An act for the relief Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers."

This soldier was enrolled in the Army June 2, 1862, and discharged June 30, 1865. He was sent to the Government hospital September 20, 1863, and thereupon transferred to the invalid corps.

He filed his declaration for a pension in November, 1880, alleging that while in the service he contracted malarial fever and chronic diarrhea, and was seized with convulsions, suffering from great general debility.

A pension of $50 a month was granted to him in June, 1881, dating from the time of filing his application, which sum he has been receiving up to the present time.

This bill proposes to remove the limitation fixed by the law of 1879 prescribing the date prior to which an application for pension must be filed in order to entitle the claimant to draw the pension allowed from the time of his discharge from the service.

If this bill should become a law it would entitle the claimant to about $9,000 of back pension. This is claimed upon the ground that the soldier was so sick from the time of the passage of the act creating the limitation up to the date allowed him to avail himself of the privileges of the act that he could not file his claim.

I think the limitation thus fixed a very wise one, and that it should not, in fairness to other claimants, be relaxed for causes not mentioned in the statute, nor should the door be opened to applications of this kind.

The beneficiary named in this bill had fifteen years after the accruing of his claim, and before it is alleged that he was incapacitated, within which he might have filed his application and entitled himself to the back pension now applied for.

The facts here presented come so far short of furnishing a satisfactory excuse for his delay that, in my judgment, the discrimination asked in his favor should not be granted.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

Mr. BLAIR. There is one misapprehension which perhaps ought to be corrected before the Senate votes. The message of the President vetoing the bill states that should the bill pass it would give to this soldier about $9,000 arrears. That is not correct. The mistake comes from the President calculating the arrears at the same rate that is now paid to this man in his condition of total disability and helplessness. The rate of arrears will be fixed upon the evidence that may be shown in the application for arrears according to the disability during the period subsequent to his discharge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. FRYE. The yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Constitution requires a two-thirds vote to pass the bill. The vote will necessarily be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the adverse report made in 1882 from the Committee on Pensions be read.

Mr. FRYE. Before the Senate asks for that, if he will allow me, I will say that Senator Jackson made that report. He made it within the last few days of the close of a session. I went to Senator Jackson and asked him to review it. He said that he had not time. When that report was made the Committee on Pensions had none of the evidence before it which I have stated to the Senate to-day. That Pension Committee had not that evidence. When the evidence was obtained I went to Senator Jackson and showed him the evidence before he went from the Senate, and he told me that if he had had that evidence a report would not have been made adverse to this claimant, and he should be very happy at any time to join in a favorable report.

Mr. ALDRICH. I may be permitted to say perhaps that Mr. Jackson was also a member of the committee when the report which has been read from the desk was made, and that the minority of the committee, so far as I am aware, consented to the report which has been read and which I made for the committee, Mr. Jackson having examined the evidence which was submitted subsequent to the time at which the report which the Senator from Missouri now holds in his hand was made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall not insist upon having the report read as the statement has been made about it. The point is simply that all this evidence does not seem at any time to have been presented or considered, and it is not set forth in the report of the Senator from Rhode Island. There is no point made in the report of the Senator from Rhode Island that the act of 1879 exempted insane persons or those incapable of making an application.

Mr. FRYE. The President evidently overlooked that too.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the principal point now in the argument and presentation of this case on the part of the claimant, that, being incapable of presenting his application, he is expressly exempted from the limitation of filing his claim prior to a certain time in 1880.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not that show that it is a case of misapprehension on the part of the President?

Mr. COCKRELL. I say I have no doubt in my own mind that it seems to have been a misapprehension all the way along, not only on the part of the President but on the part of several members of the Committee on Pensions at different times.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no question that justice should be done to this claimant?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think justice ought to be done; as a matter of course I do; but I simply want to make the statement and place it on record to show why it is that these facts were not all laid before the President at the time, that the point had never been made. My judgment is that if the point had been made and the law correctly stated the Pension Office would to-day grant the arrears of pension.

Mr. FRYE. I have reason to believe that the President never would have vetoed the bill if he had seen the evidence.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think clearly it is the duty of the Pension Office to enforce that exemption; as a matter of course it is. The Pension Office must enforce the provision of law, and if there is an exception and if the case is brought within that exception the Pension Office would admit it there on the brief made here. I have no doubt in the world the Commissioner of Pensions to-day would say that the limitation did not apply to this case. There is no question about it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I was not a member of the Committee on Pensions at the time when this matter was acted upon. I have had occasion to review it since and to form my opinion, which opinion I shall record to-day in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to add that I have looked carefully into these papers, and my judgment is very clear that if this case were presented to the Commissioner of Pensions to-day under the law stated in this brief the pension would be granted.

Mr. RANSOM. Read the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the limitation in the arrears act of 1879, but it especially exempts insane persons and children from the limitation which it contained. I have not had time to examine the law. That being the law the Commissioner of Pensions would enforce it, and if an applicant in that condition presented his claim the limitation would not be enforced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He could not do that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there is any doubt of it in the world. I think he would enforce it just in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the man was not insane he would strain the law if he did it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not insanity, but it is equivalent disability worse than insanity. I think under the circumstances there is justice in this bill, and if the facts had been before the President as they have been stated here, if they had been set forth in the report of the Committee on Pensions and properly presented, it probably would not have been vetoed. But, however that may be, I think the bill ought to pass. I have nothing further to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The yeas and nays must be called by the Constition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I should vote for this bill if I were allowed to vote.

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. If I were not paired, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. After consultation with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] I will cast my vote in favor of the bill. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAIR. I wish to vote. I am assured that if the Senator with whom I am paired were here he would vote "yea," and I vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—55.

PROPOSED RECESS

Mr. McPHERSON. I move that the Senate now take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM. Pending that motion, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLATT. Let the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the pleuro-pneumonia bill, pending which the Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 24, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 23, 1887.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WAIT. I desire to present certain resolutions for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that on yesterday an order was made again allowing bills for reference to be sent up to the Clerk's desk. While the papers to which the gentleman refers should have been presented on yesterday, if there be no objection he can file them during the morning.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether that order included also memorials of legislatures?

The SPEAKER. Everything that might have been presented under the rule on Monday.

EMOLUMENTS OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of emoluments of officers of customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, under the rule, the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask unanimous consent to pass that bill. It has passed the Senate nearly unanimously, and is unanimously indorsed by the committee of the House. I ask, therefore, that it be put upon its passage.

Mr. EDEN. I think that is a bill that ought to have some consideration.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand that to be what is known as the "Eads" bill; and it seems to me, being of such an important character, it should be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think we had better go on with the special order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2636) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask to non-concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object, and make the point of order that it must go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. EDEN. It has to go to the Committee of the Whole if the point of order is made.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. On yesterday morning the Chair laid before the House a report upon the production of precious metals, which was sent to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The subject to which it relates belongs to that committee; but the Chair thinks it should first be sent to the Committee on Printing with a view to having the order made, and if there be no objection the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BUCHANAN indefinitely on account of sickness.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. WAIT submitted a resolution appropriating $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for printing and binding the report of the Bureau of Ethnology, relating to the North American Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

Mr. WAIT also submitted resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, in favor of seacoast defenses; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. DINGLEY submitted a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Maine, in reference to our relations with Canada; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. DINGLEY also submitted a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Maine, favoring the passage of the bill relating to pleuro-pneumonia.

CANADIAN NON-INTERCOURSE.

Mr. BELMONT. I submit a privileged report under instructions of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The committee have instructed me to offer a substitute for the Senate bill, which I ask to have read.

Mr. RICE. I desire to make a point of order before entering upon the consideration of the bill, whether it should not go to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. STEELE. If this is simply the submission of a report I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with the right to report back at any time, which presents it for consideration as a privileged matter unless the question of consideration is raised and sustained against it, which question can be raised after the bill is read.

The Clerk will read the bill.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That hereafter whenever the President shall be satisfied that vessels of the United States are denied, in ports or territorial waters of the British dominions in North America, rights to which such vessels are entitled by treaty or by the law of nations, or are denied the comity of treatment or the reasonable privileges usually accorded between neighboring and friendly nations, he may, in his discretion, by proclamation, prohibit from entering the ports of the United States, or from exercising such privileges therein as he may, in his discretion, by such proclamation, define, vessels owned wholly or in part by a subject of Her Britannic Majesty, and coming or arriving from any port or place in the Dominion of Canada or in the island of Newfoundland, whether directly or having touched at any other port, excepting such vessels shall be in distress of navigation and of needed repairs or supplies therefor; and he may also forbid the entrance or importation, either by land or water, into the United States of any goods, wares, or merchandise from the aforesaid Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland, or any locomotive, car, or other vehicle, with any goods that may be therein contained, from the Dominion of Canada; and upon proof that the privileges secured by Article XXIX of the treaty concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 8th day of May, 1871, are denied as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving at the ports of British North America, the President may also, by proclamation, forbid the exercise of the like privileges as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving in any of the ports of the United States; and any person violating or attempting to violate the provisions of any proclamation issued under this act, and any person preventing or attempting to prevent any officer of the United States from enforcing such proclamation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court; and if, on and after the date at which such proclamation takes effect, the master or other person in charge of any vessel thereby excluded from the ports of the United States shall do, in the ports, harbors, or waters of the United States, for or on account of such vessel, any act forbidden by such proclamation aforesaid, such vessel, and its rigging, tackle, furniture, and boats, and all the goods on board, shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture to the United States; and any goods, wares, or merchandise, and any car, locomotive, or other vehicle, coming into the United States in violation of any proclamation as aforesaid, shall be seized and forfeited to the United States.

"SEC. 2. That whenever, after the issuance of a proclamation under this act, the President is satisfied that the denial of rights and privileges on which his proclamation was based no longer exists, he may withdraw the proclamation, or so much thereof as he may deem proper, and reissue the same thereafter when in his judgment the same shall be necessary."

Mr. STEELE. I ask now for the reading of the original bill.

The original Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that American fishing vessels or American fishermen, visiting or being in the waters or at any ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law, or are or then lately have been unjustly vexed or harassed in the enjoyment of such rights, or subjected to unreasonable restrictions, regulations, or requirements in respect of such rights, or otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed in said waters, ports, or places; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any such fishing vessels or fishermen, having a permit under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places in the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places, in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nation, or shall be unjustly vexed or harassed in respect thereof, or otherwise be unjustly vexed or harassed therein, or shall be prevented from purchasing such supplies as may there be lawfully sold to trading vessels of the most favored nation; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any other vessels of the United States, their masters or crews, so arriving at or being in such British waters or ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied any of the privileges therein accorded to the vessels, their masters or crews, of the most favored nation, or unjustly vexed or harassed in respect to the same, or unjustly vexed or harassed therein by the authorities thereof, then, and in either or all of such cases, it shall be lawful, and it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, in his discretion, by proclamation to that effect, to deny vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America any entrance into the waters, ports, or places of or within the United States (with such exceptions in regard to vessels in distress, stress of weather, or needing supplies as to the President shall seem proper), whether such vessels have come directly from said dominions on such destined voyage or by way of some port or place in such destined voyage elsewhere; and also to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States. The President may, in his discretion, apply such proclamation to any part or to all of the foregoing-named subjects, and revoke, qualify, limit and renew such proclamation from time to time as he may deem necessary to the full and just execution of the purposes of this act. Every violation of any such proclamation, or any part thereof, is hereby declared illegal, and all vessels and goods so coming or being within the waters, ports, or places of the United States contrary to such proclamation shall be forfeited to the United States; and such forfeiture shall be enforced and proceeded upon in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of vessels or goods whose importation or coming to or being in the waters or ports of the United States contrary to law may now be enforced and proceeded upon. Every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or such proclamation of the President made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. STEELE. I move to lay the substitute on the table; and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. This is an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and under the rules and practice of the House it can not be laid upon the table without carrying the original proposition with it.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to call up the special order, H. R. 7634.

The SPEAKER. But the question of consideration has not been raised.

Mr. STEELE. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. RICE. I wish to submit a point of order first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICE. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that this bill will affect the revenue. While it is not a bill for raising revenue, it appears from all the papers in the case that it is a bill which may decrease the revenue, and very materially. My point is that it affects the revenue, and that is a sufficient reason why it should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. But the construction of that rule has always been that in order to take a proposition to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it must appear certainly on the face of the proposition itself that it appropriates money or requires the appropriation of money or increases or reduces the revenue.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before a decision is made I desire to call the attention of the Chair to page 17 of the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, where he informs the House that this bill will reduce the revenue over $4,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that. But the bill does not itself provide for non-intercourse. It simply provides, as the Chair understands it, that the President of the United States may in his discretion in certain contingencies suspend intercourse.

Mr. DINGLEY. It authorizes the President to take action which would reduce the revenue.

Mr. LONG. It is a step toward the reduction of revenue.

The SPEAKER. The bill provides that the President of the United States in his discretion in certain contingencies may suspend commercial intercourse to a certain extent, perhaps entirely—the Chair is not prepared to say as to that. But that may or may not be done, and therefore it does not appear certain on the face of the bill that the revenues of the Government will be diminished or affected in any way whatever.

Mr. LONG. But it is a step toward it.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it is. But the Chair thinks under the rulings heretofore made the bill does not go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair would also remark that the fact that the suspension of intercourse under certain conditions by the President would reduce the revenue makes no difference as to this, because a bill to reduce the revenue is as much a bill raising revenue as a bill increasing it.

Mr. RICE. I do not press the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. STEELE. This is a matter of so much importance that I will not raise the question of consideration, although I very much desire to call up the bill to increase the efficiency of the Army.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much time will be occupied in the discussion of this question?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I think not over two hours.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it in order to make a privileged report at this time?

The SPEAKER. The report before the House is privileged. Another privileged report can not be made until this is disposed of except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIS. When this is disposed of a report of the river and harbor bill will be in order?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York about how much time will be consumed in the discussion of this bill?

Mr. BELMONT. It is impossible for me to answer that question until some agreement is reached. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report back the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate, with the recommendation to non-concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. If that motion is adopted will the House have an opportunity to have the amendments discussed?

The SPEAKER. A motion is not made. The gentleman simply reports back the bill and amendments with the recommendation which he has stated.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I reserve all points of order, and make the point of order that the bill and amendments must go to the Calendar.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The bill and Senate amendments will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and will be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, disagreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill numbered 39, 55, 58, and 179, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents;

Joint resolution (S. R. 103) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 7,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed;

A bill (S. 3300) to provide for the judicial determination of the rights of the United States in lands granted to the State of Florida for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, under an act of Congress approved May 17, 1856, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3268) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia; and

A bill (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Fla., a port of entry.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for printing the report of Lieut. Henry T. Allen of his explorations in Alaska; for printing the Flags of all Nations, prepared by order of the Secretary of the Navy by the Bureau of Navigation; and for printing 4,000 additional copies of Wharton's Digest of International Law.

CANADIAN NON-INTERCOURSE.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gravity of the question now before the House and the importance to the country that some legislation should be had it seems to me that the gentlemen on the other side will be willing to come to some agreement as to the limit of the debate. There is no difference in the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to the necessity for legislation. There should be legislation, but there is for the present a certain party difference as to the phraseology of the bill and the extent of the authority to be given to the President. That is not in itself sufficient to create a long debate in this House, and I know that I speak for the majority of the committee and I think I may also for the minority (although not by authority) in saying that we must come to a vote. I trust, therefore, that my colleague on the committee [Mr. RICE], or any gentleman who speaks for the minority of the committee, will agree to limit the debate to two hours, giving each side an hour.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I am a little sorry to hear the word "party" dropped by my friend, the chairman of the committee. There is no party division here. Gentlemen of his party voted for the Senate bill in committee as well as gentlemen of the other party. If he will make the distinction between the Senate bill and the Belmont bill that is all right. I think that each side requires about two hours to discuss this bill. For the Senate bill I am content to accept two hours; for the Belmont bill I am content that the same amount of time shall be had for discussion. As I understand there are half a dozen gentlemen who desire to speak in favor of the Belmont bill and there are three or four gentlemen who desire to speak briefly in behalf of the Senate bill. I am willing to agree to a debate of two hours.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, before reaching the agreement I desire to say to the House that my colleague on the committee [Mr. RICE] is mistaken in describing this bill as "the Belmont bill." It is the bill of the majority of the committee, adopted after mature consideration. So far as I am concerned in the matter I did introduce a bill, but this is not the same bill which I introduced, and I would regret very much if any gentleman should think that there was any personal consideration involved in the advocacy of this bill, which I know has the approval of those best qualified to judge of the condition of our relations to other governments.

Mr. RICE. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is. There is really no question being debated. Gentlemen are endeavoring to arrive at some arrangement with regard to the length of the debate.

Mr. HATCH. I understood that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] had made a motion to limit the debate to one hour.

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order. This matter is being considered in the House, not in committee, and the only way to limit debate is by agreement or by demanding the previous question.

Mr. HATCH. It seems to me that we are wasting a good deal of time.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt in the minds of gentlemen as to the importance of reaching a conclusion to-day. Legislation is pressing upon us and the end of the session is not far off. I trust that no gentleman will assume the responsibility of endangering the necessary legislation, and my friend on the committee [Mr. RICE] will, perhaps, agree to a debate continuing for three hours, giving each side an hour and a half.

A MEMBER. That is not enough.

Mr. BELMONT. But I would prefer two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachuseetts [Mr. RICE] proposes that the debate shall contiuue for four hours, allowing two hours to each side. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] suggests three hours, giving each side an hour and a half. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts agree to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, is an amendment in order?

Mr. RICE. I agree to the proposition of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Then three hours will be allowed for debate, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] has the floor. Does the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] apply to amendments to the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. No; I mean an amendment to the proposition as to the time to be allowed for debate.

The SPEAKER. There is no motion with regard to the time. The gentlemen are making an agreement between themselves.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand that my colleague on the committee [Mr. RICE] has accepted my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. BELMONT. Then I ask unanimous consent that that be the agreement as to the length of the debate.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by limiting the debate to two hours, giving an hour on each side.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the debate on this bill be closed at the expiration of three hours, the time to be equally divided among the opponents and the supporters of the substitute, and that the previous question be considered as ordered at the expiration of that time. Does the proposition include the right to offer and vote upon amendments or not? There had better be an understanding upon that subject.

Mr. BELMONT. That is included.

Mr. RICE. We desire to offer no amendments on our side. We suppose that the vote will be a direct vote between the two propositions.

The SPEAKER. Then that will be the understanding. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] object to the arrangement proposed?

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make a motion at this time.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that the gentleman from Texas ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to two hours.

The SPEAKER. That request has been already made and has been objected to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE]. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] objects to the proposed agreement as to time.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] will now state that at the end of three hours from this time he will move the previous question this whole matter will be settled.

Mr. BELMONT. If that will facilitate the arrangement I state that at the end of three hours I will call the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, the question of the American fisheries on the Canadian coasts is one that has engaged the attention of this Government since its foundation; and although from time to time temporary arrangements have settled it, yet it has now reached a point, by the lapse of those temporary arrangements through the abrogation of the fisheries clauses of the treaty of Washington of 1871, when it again demands the serious consideration of the country. It is not a mere commercial question affecting simply the restrictions upon American fishermen or upon fish coming into the United States from Canada. The important question for us from a national standpoint is whether we are willing to acquiesce in repeated violations of a treaty.

The treaty of peace of 1783 declared independence, defined boundaries, and was permanent in its provisions. By the third article of that treaty the people of the United States were confirmed in certain "rights" to the deep-sea fisheries—rights as clearly defined and as permanent as the boundaries. There were also conferred upon them certain "liberties" as to the inshore fisheries; and this distinction between "rights" to the deep-sea fisheries and "liberties" to the inshore fisheries has been maintained in our negotiations ever since, and is to-day maintained.

The war of 1812 did not disturb our rights to the fisheries; nor were the fisheries mentioned in any of the articles of the treaty of Ghent in 1814. There were disputes about the fisheries, resulting mainly from the system of commercial non-intercourse with the colonies of Great Britain existing at the time. These disputes led to the treaty of 1818, by which the area of American inshore fisheries was reduced; but in no article of that treaty are the deep-sea fisheries alluded to in any manner.

Following upon the treaty of 1818 were certain concerted legislative enactments which finally put an end to the commercial non-intercourse. Preceding these, however, in 1827 a proclamation was issued by President Adams declaring commercial non-intercourse, which is a very appropriate precedent for the present proposed legislation, and it can well be referred to here. It reads as follows:

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas by the sixth section of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States and certain British colonial ports," which was approved on the 1st day of March, in the year of our Lord 1823, it is enacted "that this act, unless repealed, altered, or amended by Congress, shall be and continue in force so long as the above enumerated British colonial ports shall be open to admission of the vessels of the United States, conformably to the provisions of the British act of Parliament of the 24th of June last, being the forty-fourth chapter of the acts of the third year of George IV; but if at any time the trade and intercourse between the United States and all or any of the above enumerated British colonial ports, authorized by the said act of Parliament, should be prohibited by a British order in council, or by act of Parliament, then, from the day of the date of such order in council, or act of Parliament, or from the time that the same shall commence to be in force, proclamation to that effect having been made by the President of the United States, each and every provision of this act, so far as the same shall apply to the intercourse between the United States and the above enumerated British colonial ports, in British vessels, shall cease to operate in their favor; and each and every provision of the 'act concerning navigation,' approved on the 18th day of April, 1818, and of the act supplementary thereto, approved on the 15th of May, 1820, shall revive and be in full force;" and

Whereas by an act of the British Parliament, which passed on the 5th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1825, entitled "An act to repeal the several laws relating to the customs," the said act of Parliament of the 24th of June, 1822, was repealed; and by another act of the British Parliament, passed on the 5th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1825, in the sixth year of the reign of George IV, entitled "An act to regulate the trade of the British possessions abroad," and by an order by His Britannic Majesty in council, bearing date the 27th of July, 1826, the trade and intercourse authorized by the aforesaid act of Parliament of the 24th of June, 1822, between the United States and the greater part of the said British colonial ports, therein enumerated, have been prohibited upon and from the 1st day of December last past, and the contingency has thereby arisen on which the President of the United States was authorized by the sixth section aforesaid of the act of Congress of 1st March, 1823, to issue a proclamation to the effect therein mentioned:

Now, therefore, I, John Quincy Adams, President of the United States of America, do hereby declare and proclaim that the trade and intercourse authorized by the said act of Parliament of the 24th of June, 1822, between the United States and the British colonial ports enumerated in the aforesaid act of Congress of the 1st of March, 1823, have been, and are, upon and from the 1st day of December, 1826, by the aforesaid two several acts of Parliament of the 5th of July, 1825, and by the aforesaid British order of council of the 27th day of July, 1826, prohibited.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, this 17th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1827, and the fifty-first year of the Independence of the United States.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

By the President:
H. CLAY, Secretary of State.

Interdiction of commerce with Canada and the British colonies was the uniform policy of Great Britain for many years after the treaty of peace with the United States. In 1822–'23 Parliament opened these ports to our commerce, and Congress, in return, opened our ports to Canadian vessels. Under this system trade greatly flourished between the provinces and the United States. Great Britain, however, was far from agreeing to regard this as a permanent concession. By a statute passed in 1825 the colonial ports were opened to foreign commerce on condition that British shipping should be placed on the footing of the most favored nation. A year was given for the acceptance of this condition. Through causes which it is not necessary to detail, the United States did not accept the condition, and at the expiration of the year United States vessels were interdicted from entering British colonial ports. On February 8, 1826, our Government was notified that our vessels were interdicted from entering the port of Halifax in particular, and in general all other British colonial ports. And Mr. Adams, in his message of December 8, 1827, said:

The British Government have not only declined negotiation upon this subject, but by the principle they have assumed with reference to it have precluded even the means of negotiation. It becomes not the self-respect of the United States either to solicit gratuitous favors or to accept as the grant of a favor that for which an ample equivalent is exacted.

No action, however, was taken by Congress on the subject, whereupon the President, on March 17, 1827, issued the proclamation I have referred to declaring trade with the British colonies prohibited, and reviving the restrictions of the acts of 1818 and the following years. This was the condition of our relations when Mr. Adams' administration closed.

When Mr. Van Buren was Secretary of State, in the succeeding administration of General Jackson, negotiations ensued by which the restrictions on both sides were withdrawn.

We have, therefore, in these proceedings a precedent for interdiction of colonial commerce, not as a war measure but as incident to a negotiation by which a relief from prior restrictions was obtained.

The arrangements through these legislative enactments of our disputed fishery rights and the questions arising therefrom were temporarily superseded by the reciprocity treaties of 1854 and 1871, and by the rescinding in 1885 of the fishery clauses of the treaty of 1871 we are to-day brought back to the treaty of 1818, and the present contention is founded upon the interpretation of that treaty.

The fact that the treaty of 1818 in no part of it refers to the deep-sea fisheries is another confirmation of the permanent rights to the deep-sea fisheries which were declared in the treaty of peace of 1783, and arising out of both of these treaties there is a zone of inshore fishing free and open to American fishermen. There is also another zone into which by the treaty of 1818 our fishermen are prohibited from entering for the purpose of fishing. We have no desire or intention of entering the prohibited waters as defined in the treaty of 1818, but we do ask that that treaty be interpreted according to its provisions, which refer only to the inshore fisheries.

This is practically our contention as exhibited in the correspondence before the House and in the message of the President. The Canadian contention is shown by that correspondence, and also by the expressed opinions of the Canadian officials as contained in the documents before the House. I cite, for instance, the declaration of the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries of June 5, 1886, that a particular vessel, being a fishing vessel, was "as such debarred by the treaty of 1818 from entering Canadian ports."

On June 7, 1886, the Canadian governor-general advised the secretary of state for foreign affairs at London:

The two vessels which have been seized are both of them beyond all question fishing vessels, and not traders, and therefore liable, subject to the finding of the courts, to any penalties imposed by law for the enforcement of the convention of 1818 on parties violating the terms of that convention.

Again, on August 14, 1886, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said:

There seems no doubt, therefore, that the Novelty was in character and in purpose a fishing vessel, and as such comes under the provisions of the treaty of 1818, which allows United States fishing vessels to enter Canadian ports "for the purpose of shelter and repairing damages therein, and of purchasing wood and of obtaining water," and for no other purpose whatever.

And in one of the latest communications—an answer to a communication of the State Department to the British minister in Washington, bearing date the 20th of May last, this answer having been received only on the 28th of January, 1887, eight months after the date of the original communication—this reply is given as embodying the approved minutes of the Canadian privy council, approved by the Government of Great Britain:

If the United States authorities are the judges as to what is prejudicial to those interests—

Meaning the fishery interests of Canada—

the treaty will have very little value. If the provinces are to be the judges, it is most prejudicial to their interests that the United States fishermen should be permitted to come into their harbors on any pretext; and it is fatal to their fishery interests that these fishermen, with whom they have to compete at such disadvantage in the markets of the world, should be allowed to enter for supplies and bait, even for the pursuit of the deep-sea fisheries.

That places the contention in a nutshell, and shows that the Canadian purpose is to strain the treaty of 1818 to cover the deep-sea fisheries, and virtually to make our deep-sea fisheries territorial waters of Great Britain, covered by the restrictions of the treaty of 1818 upon inshore fisheries. Not only does this appear from their statements, but also from their legislative enactments—the Canadian acts of 1844, of 1868, of 1870, and finally the act which has caused the greatest dissatisfaction in this country, not alone by reason of its particular provisions, but because this Government, after its passage by the Canadian Parliament, earnestly protested in London against its proclamation by the Queen and council; and yet the proclamation was issued.

The third section of that act reads as follows:

3. Any one of the officers or persons hereinbefore mentioned may bring any ship, vessel, or boat, being within any harbor of Canada, or hovering in British waters within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, into port and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in command does not answer the questions put to him in such examination, he shall incur a penalty of $400; and if such ship, vessel, or boat is foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and (A) has been found fishing, or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing, in British waters within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of Canada, not included within the above-mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the term named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel, or boat under the first section of this act, or (B) has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by treaty or convention, or by any law of the United Kingdom or of Canada for the time being in force, such ship, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited.

This act it will be perceived not only forfeits any American vessel which shall enter Canadian ports in violation of Canadian law (the Canadians themselves being the judges of what is in violation of their own local laws), but confers the right of search on the high seas and the power of seizing American vessels on suspicion.

I will ask the Clerk to read, or perhaps it would be as well for me to read myself, the statement of the Secretary of State in regard to this statute:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 29, 1886.

SIR: I have just received an official imprint of House of Commons bill No. 136, now pending in the Canadian Parliament, entitled "An act further to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," and am informed that it has passed the house and is now pending in the senate.

This bill proposes the forcible search, seizure, and forfeiture of any foreign vessel within any harbor in Canada, or hovering within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, where such vessel has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by the laws of nations, or by treaty or convention, or by any law of the United Kingdom or of Canada now in force.

I hasten to draw your attention to the wholly unwarranted proposition of the Canadian authorities, through their local agents, arbitrarily to enforce according to their own construction the provisions of any convention between the United States and Great Britain, and, by the interpolation of language not found in any such treaty, and, by interpretation not claimed or conceded by either party to such treaty, to invade and destroy the commercial rights and privileges of citizens of the United States under and by virtue of treaty stipulation with Great Britain and statutes in that behalf made and provided.

I have also been furnished with a copy of circular No. 371, purporting to be from the customs department at Ottawa, dated May 7, 1886, and to be signed by J. Johnson, commissioner of customs, assuming to execute the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded October 20, 1818, and printed copies of a warning, purporting to be issued by George E. Foster, minister of marine and fisheries, dated at Ottawa, March 5, 1886, of a similar tenor, although capable of unequal results in its execution.

Such proceedings I conceive to be flagrantly violative of the reciprocal commercial privileges to which citizens of the United States are lawfully entitled under statutes of Great Britain and the well-defined and publicly proclaimed authority of both countries, besides being in respect of the existing conventions between the two countries an assumption of jurisdiction entirely unwarranted and which is wholly denied by the United States.

In the interest of the maintenance of peaceful and friendly relations, I give you my earliest information on this subject, adding that I have telegraphed Mr. Phelps, our minister at London, to make earnest protest to Her Majesty's Government against such arbitrary, unlawful, unwarranted, and unfriendly action on the part of the Canadian Government and its officials, and have instructed Mr. Phelps to give notice that the Government of Great Britain will be held liable for all losses and injuries to citizens of the United States and their property caused by the unauthorized and unfriendly action of the Canadian officials to which I have referred.

I have, &c.,

T. F. BAYARD.

This letter was addressed to the British minister in Washington last May; and yet the statute so earnestly complained of was proclaimed by the Queen, in council, on the 24th December, last.

During the last fishing season, as appears from the detailed statement appended to the report now before the House, four American vessels have been driven off from Canadian ports in storm or stress of weather; fifteen vessels have been detained for alleged violations of customs; three vessels have been seized outright for alleged violations of the treaty of 1818; twelve vessels have been warned off; three vessels have been boarded and searched; forty vessels have been refused the privilege of landing to buy provisions; one vessel, wrecked, was refused the right to land its shipwrecked crew until the revenue-cutter gave permission; fifteen vessels have not been allowed to land, to ship, or discharge crews, and three vessels have been refused permission to forward their fish to home ports by steamer.

It will be evident to the House that after the adjournment of Congress, when the fishing season will recommence, this statute may be put in operation much more seriously to our detriment. It is for this reason that in self-defense we are obliged to confer upon the President the power of defensive retaliation now proposed.

There has been no question in the Senate as to the necessity of granting this power; but in the opinion of a majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs the bill which has come to the House from the Senate is, with all due deference, open to certain objections. It provides in one section that the President shall issue his proclamation in case he is satisfied that our vessels are denied the rights granted to the vessels of the most favored nations.

But we have no treaty with Great Britain containing any favored-nation clause, nor do we intend to put ourselves upon the same footing as any other nation, since under the treaty of peace we have certain rights to the deep-sea fisheries—rights acquired by joint conquest, rights which no other nation, excepting Great Britain and ourselves, possess. It would be a great mistake and most unfortunate in my opinion if the idea contained in that clause of the Senate bill should be imported into the discussion; and if Congress should adopt the bill in that form, undoubtedly our opponents in the negotiations would take advantage of it to raise some question hitherto not thought of.

Mr. Speaker, it is but fair to the Executive, when Congress is to place upon him this very grave responsibility, that it should be conferred in the most distinct terms. The Senate bill provides for the exclusion of fish and for the exclusion, in the discretion of the President, of the products of Canada, and it further contains a provision for the exclusion of "all other goods" coming from Canada.

If the merchandise whose entrance into the United States is to be prohibited is merely that which is the product of Canada how could such a provision be enforced? The fact that a Canadian car contained merchandise would be no proof that such merchandise was the product of Canada. If, on the other hand, under the Senate bill all merchandise coming to the United States from Canada is to be shut out the people of the United States would thereby be deprived of the benefit of land transit for merchandise through Canada, while under the continuing Article XXIX of the treaty of 1871 Canada would still have the right to send merchandise through the territory of the United States in sealed cars during the winter, when her own ports are closed.

According to the London Quarterly Review for January, 1887, the Canadian Pacific Railroad, now complete between Montreal and the Pacific, will, when the "short line" to the Atlantic it proposes is finished, establish the shortest line in existence between the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific, the distance between New York and San Francisco being 3,271 miles, and between Montreal and Vancouver 2,905. In this way the present route to Japan from England (by way of Brindisi) will be reduced fifteen days, and that to Hong-Kong seven days, while the whole foreign interoceanic commerce will be transferred from the United States to Canada roads.

The short line—

Says the Quarterly—

will, of course, as it passes for some 150 miles through the State of Maine, not be available for troops and war materials; but commerce fortunately can, by sealed cars and bonding arrangements, afford to disregard political boundaries.

In other words, according to this statement, if true, transit over territory of the United States, by "sealed cars and bonding arrangements," is to be used to take from our transcontinental roads the whole business between Europe and Asia, when, at the same time, the transit rights, not merely of ancient title and treaty, but of humanity, are to be refused to our fishermen on the northeast Atlantic coast.

The House bill, it will be observed, provides in terms for the inequality which would arise from the treaty of 1871, under the Senate bill.

The Senate bill does not provide, in the belief of many gentlemen, for the stoppage of railroads. By some it is held that it might so provide. I shall not undertake to say whether it does or does not, although I believe it does not; but the House bill does clearly, distinctly, and unequivocally confer upon the President discretionary power to stop the rolling-stock of such roads. It is only a discretionary power, and such a law if enacted to produce any beneficial results should be unquestionable in its prohibitory effects. There should be no doubt either in the mind of those who legislate upon the subject or upon our opponents in the pending negotiations as to the effect of such legislation, and the stronger measure is the House measure, for which reason, under these circumstances, it is the wiser and more prudent.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman takes his seat I desire to ask a question. I wish to call his attention to one provision reported in the substitute bill on which I would like to have his interpretation. The gentleman has stated that he favors the bill reported by the committee for the reason that it is more definite.

Mr. BELMONT. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman has stated that he favors the substitute bill as being more definite than the Senate bill. I would like to understand what the phrase beginning in the twelfth line in the following words means:

Vessels owned wholly or in part by a subject of Her Britannic Majesty.

What is that intended to cover?

Mr. BELMONT. The language of the twelfth line of the House amendment refers to vessels owned wholly or in part by subjects of her Britannic Majesty.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that intended to cover simply British vessels?

Mr. BELMONT. It is intended to provide for the difficulty, in case there should be a transfer of ownership. If we simply shut out vessels under the British flag it would not be sufficiently definite. There might be a transfer of ownership. But this provides that vessels owned wholly or in part by a subject of her Britannic Majesty will come within the provisions of the proclamation.

Mr. DINGLEY. The language is "or in part." But supposing a French vessel is owned partly by a British subject, would it not also be brought under the provisions of this act?

Mr. BELMONT. It would.

Mr. DINGLEY. Would not an American vessel owned partly by a British subject also be brought under the provisions of this act?

Mr. BELMONT. It would; and it is exactly to provide for the danger—and I regret very much to refer to it—that some of our citizens, notwithstanding the grave importance of the question from a national standpoint, might perhaps come to some arrangement with our Canadian neighbors for their own interest. It is to meet that danger that this provision has been introduced. It may perhaps be injurious to certain fishing industries. But if we are brought into this difficulty by reason of the trouble upon the Eastern coast, certainly our friends from Maine must concede that the country at large in taking up this question can not undertake to provide also for protection to individuals——

Mr. MILLS. Who are evading the law.

Mr. BELMONT. Yes; who are evading the law.

Mr. DINGLEY. But what I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to is the fact that under this provision we are liable to violate treaty obligations.

Mr. BELMONT. I do not yield further. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The gentleman has occupied twenty-five minutes and has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. RICE. This is no time for speech-making. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has well stated the historical facts in issue, or rather the historical facts which are connected with the subject now under discussion. I do not propose to review them. I desire the House to understand that this is a question which belongs to and affects the entire nation. I regret that any word of party reference has been uttered on this subject. When I inadvertently called the bill which is before this House, reported as a substitute for the Senate bill, the Belmont bill, I but borrowed the term from the numerous publications which have been put upon our desks upon that subject from members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is there called the Belmont bill, and I inadvertently borrowed the term.

But, sir, the Senate bill is no party bill. It is a bill which was adopted unanimously by the Senate after a long and exhaustive debate, in which members of both parties, and prominent members of both parties, participated. Let not my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, seek to carry his bill through this House on the shoulders of his party. Let us discuss the bill as Americans desirous of vindicating the honor of our country and doing that which will most promptly and most efficiently secure that end.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this question has been stated already by my friend from New York, and it has been stated clearly. The question is just this: By the treaty of 1818, made by this country at the heel of an unfortunate war in which the greatest glory to the American flag was won by the fishermen of New England on the sea, certain rights were renounced by the Americans which they had secured in the treaty of 1783; rights to certain inshore fisheries. Let the gentlemen of the House understand no question is made as to the right of American fishermen to the deep-sea fisheries. Those are not involved in this discussion. But by the treaty of 1818 we renounced certain liberties in reference to inshore fisheries, that is, fisheries within 3 miles of the Canadian and Newfoundland coasts; and in that treaty there was a proviso that the fishing vessels of the United States should not visit Canadian ports except under stress of weather, to repair damages, for wood and for water.

Out of that provision the contention comes, and as indicating that there is nothing of partisanship in this matter I cordially admit that the claim made by our Government has been most ably argued and sustained by Minister Phelps, our minister at the court of St. James. It is claimed by our Government and ably argued by Mr. Phelps that the treaty provision of 1818 referred to inshore fisheries, to things as they were then, that the deep-sea fisheries were not included in that treaty provision, and that the fishing vessels which now sail from our ports for deep-sea fishing have an unquestionable right, if they are provided with proper permits from this Government, to touch at Canadian ports for no purpose of inshore fisheries but for trading purposes, to procure bait or other supplies like other vessels.

The British Government claims, or the Canadian Government claims, and is supported in the claim by the British Government, that the treaty provisions cover all these vessels as well as the little inshore fishing smacks, and during the past year more than a hundred of our vessels have been subjected to search by Canadian officers, and some of them to seizure, not for violating the Canadian rights to the inshore fisheries, but for touching at Canadian ports for trading and other purposes proper, as we claim. That is the question here; there is no other. It is not a very broad, but it is a very vital question to American honor, when a Canadian officer claims the right to board, search, and in his discretion seize a vessel under the American flag which has only touched at a Canadian port for trading purposes on its way to the deep-sea fisheries. The Canadian Government has claimed and exercised that right during the past year in many instances. A vessel named Grover Cleveland was stopped by the Canadian officials, and a vessel named T. F. Bayard was warned off as a suspicious character [laughter]; and it is rather important that there should somewhere be found power to protect American honor when attacked in so vital points as these. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say a word for the fishermen of New England. They ask nothing in regard to these in-shore fisheries. They do not ask to be ever again allowed or secured the right to float their vessels or drop their hooks or their nets in those Canadian inshore waters at any expense of honor or money by this Government. We do not very much want to go there any more. The fish have got to liking the Yankees best, and they are found better off our own New England coast than off the Canadian coasts. Therefore we do not need to go any more into those inshore waters, and we do not ask our Government to make any treaty or to have any commission whatsoever appointed to consider upon what terms our vessels may be permitted to go into those Canadian inshore waters. Therefore we may put that out of the consideration of this question.

Again, it is really no vital matter that we shall go into the Canadian ports at all. If they see fit to shut out of their ports our deep-sea fishing vessels, which go there for the purpose of buying supplies upon the sale of which many of their poor people live, let them do it. We say there is no treaty provision that we shall not go there; they say there is. That is the question upon which the two governments have joined issue. But suppose that their contention is correct, and that our vessels have no right there, still we can get along without going there. But—and here let gentlemen of the House understand—Great Britain has no treaty rights whatsoever with us on this point. If the Canadians can shut our vessels out of their ports, we can shut theirs out of our ports. We are under no treaty obligation to let them in. If they can shut our fishermen out of their ports, we can shut their fish out of ours.

If they lock their front door in our faces, we can say "Not at home" to them when they next leave their card. That is all there is to it. They say to us, "Under the treaty of 1818 we have the right to exclude your fishermen from our ports." We say, "Very well; under the right of the mightiest nation on the face of the earth, with no treaty obligations to interfere with us in this respect, we have a right to shut your fish and your other products, if we see fit, out of our markets, and we are going to do it. Just so long as you say—treaty or no treaty, whether you are right or we are right in that respect—just so long as you say that our fishing vessels shall not touch at your ports for supplies and for legitimate trading purposes, just so long we say that your fish shall not be sold in our markets, and if that is not enough your hay, your potatoes, and your lumber shall not be sold in our markets."

It seems to me that the question is easily understood. They shut our fishing vessels out of their ports, and we shut their fish out of our market.

Now, then, that brings me to the consideration of this bill, for here is the only question to discuss. The Senate, after full debate, unanimously adopted a bill which it sent to the House. Now, it seems to me, gentlemen of all sides, that that bill should have been at once reported back favorably to this House, and should have been passed here with the same unanimity with which it was passed in the Senate, unless there is some serious defect in it. I admit that the House committee is a great deal abler than the Senate committee. I admit that the chairman of the House committee can draw a better bill than the chairman of the Senate committee; but I want to know if we are going to stop and haggle here about words?

Does not the Senate bill embrace everything that is necessary? I say that it does. Here it is. It gives to the President of the United States the necessary authority—and I am glad to say that the fishermen of New England have confidence in the President of the United States that he would courageously and promptly exercise the authority it gives him—not only when our vessels are in any way deprived of rights which belong to vessels of the most favored nations, a matter which my friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. BELMONT], has intimated might raise some doubt—not only in that case, but whenever those vessels are deprived of any right——

Mr. BELMONT. Will my friend excuse me a moment?

Mr. RICE. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. Does my colleague on the committee himself (if it is a fair question) approve of that section referring to the favored-nation clause? Would he himself have put such a provision in the bill?

Mr. RICE. Well, if I had undertaken to write a bill, I have no doubt I could have written a better one than either of you. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELMONT. Very well; then my question is answered. I understand the gentleman would not have put that section in the bill.

Mr. RICE. I doubt very much, and I presume the gentleman has heard me say so, whether I should have put that clause in; but it does not do any harm——

Mr. BELMONT. I think it does.

Mr. RICE. It does not do any harm, as some of your clauses do, as I will show before I get through.

Mr. Speaker, it does no harm to say that our vessels shall be protected by this Government, or that the President shall have certain authority given him when they are deprived of any right which vessels of the most favored nations have in Canadian ports. That does not do any harm, especially when there is added to it the provision contained in the Senate bill, a provision which my friend forgot. He appears to have lost the Senate bill; he did not even have it read here this morning; he did not even put it in his report. His report is printed four times (for I have the literature of this subject before me) and the Senate bill does not find a place anywhere in any of this literature.

Mr. BELMONT. The report contains the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and my friend will find in that the Senate bill.

Mr. RICE. The Secretary of the Treasury is not the chairman of the committee; and as I have said four documents on this subject have come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Senate bill is not in any one of them. If my friend had read that bill as carefully as he has his own——

Mr. HITT. The Senate bill was printed originally as a part of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury; but in the reprint of that letter, as included in the report of the gentleman from New York, the bill is omitted.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. RICE. I am always afraid of my friend from Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN. You need not be in this matter.

Mr. RICE. I believe the gentleman at heart sides with me on this question.

Mr. CRAIN. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury is made a part of the report; and the Senate bill appears as a part of that letter, consequently the gentleman's animadversion upon the chairman of the committee is not well founded.

Mr. RICE. The Senate bill is left out in the reprint of that letter.

Mr. CRAIN. I think not.

Mr. RICE. You will find that to be the fact if you read it carefully.

Mr. CRAIN. Is that so? The chairman of the committee just suggested to me that it was included.

Mr. BELMONT. It was intended to be, at any rate.

Mr. RICE. There is a bad place which is "paved with good intentions." [Laughter.] I wanted to find the Senate bill in order to have it printed with the views of the minority. I was told that the chairman of the committee had it in his pocket, and I have not been able to find it for any purpose up to the present moment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the favored-nation clause, there is in the Senate bill a provision that the President be authorized to intervene whenever our vessels are deprived of any rights belonging to them by treaty or by law, or whenever they are unjustly treated or harassed in any respect. Can anything be broader than that? Has my able friend, the chairman of the committee, been able with all his study and all his consultations, and by the aid of my ingenious friend from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], very recently rendered——

Mr. CRAIN. You mean just now.

Mr. RICE. Has he been able to construct any broader statement than that contained in the Senate bill? Whenever one of our vessels, according to the judgment of the President of the United States, is unjustly or improperly treated in any of the Canadian ports or waters by Canadian officials, then the President of the United States has power under the Senate bill to do what? To issue his proclamation prohibiting Canadian vessels from entering our ports. Not all vessels coming from Canadian waters, for my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], a good investor, may happen to own a principal interest in such a vessel, and a citizen of Saint John's may also have an interest in it to the extent of $100. There is no need of stopping those vessels. There is no need of stopping any other vessels than those that come under Canadian papers. There is no need of putting in that extra clause which we find in the Belmont bill. It will only create confusion unnecessarily. But the President, under the Senate bill, is authorized to prohibit all Canadian vessels—that is, vessels bearing Canadian papers—from coming into our ports. What else? To prohibit the importation into our ports of all Canadian-caught fish and of all Canadian products.

Now, is not that enough in all conscience? Stopping the importation into our country, into our great market, of Canadian fish, would be enough. I will warrant, and give my bond for it, if it is good for anything, that one year of exclusion of Canadian fish from the American market would bring these Canadians to terms. If not, we are willing to have our vessels kept out of their ports just so long as their fish is kept out of our market.

The Senate bill goes to that extent; it goes far enough. It says all that is necessary. The occasions for exerting authority are all covered. The authority is ample. It is all the fishermen of New England ask. They want no more. They want that. They want it quick.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will it disturb the gentleman at this point to let me ask him a question?

Mr. RICE. Not at all.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I would like to have the gentleman explain briefly the distinction between the Senate idea and the Belmont idea on that point?

Mr. RICE. I will do it; and am glad the gentleman has made that suggestion, because he comes from a section that will be seriously affected by the Belmont idea.

The Senate bill excludes all Canadian products from the markets of this country. What does my sagacious and far-seeing and comprehensive friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, seek to do? He says not only shall the products of Canada be excluded from this country, but they shall not run a locomotive or car or any vehicle, not even a baby's carriage, across the line of Canada into this country.

President Cleveland has to stop all these. Cars are to be stopped; locomotives are to be stopped.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me ask a question there?

Mr. RICE. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. Does not the House proposition propose to give President Cleveland any power in case it becomes necessary to go a step farther than the Senate amendment proposes? Is not that the difference?

Mr. RICE. The House proposition proposes to give the President power——

Mr. HERBERT. It does not say to him you shall, but gives him the power to go that far. It does not say shall.

Mr. RICE. It does not.

Mr. HERBERT. You are mistaken, then, in using the word "shall."

Mr. RICE. If I used it I will substitute the word "may" for "shall"—may in his discretion.

Mr. HERBERT. The House bill gives more power and indicates a disposition to go further than the Senate bill.

Mr. RICE. Neither bill makes it obligatory. Both bills leave it in the discretion of the President what to do within the power given.

Mr. HERBERT. That is what I understood.

Mr. RICE. The Senate bill leaves it in the discretion of the President to exercise his authority to a certain extent. Then, if that does not meet the exigency, to rescind, to add, to change, to modify.

There is no difference between the two bills, and I challenge my friend, the chairman of the committee; I will give him two minutes——

Mr. BELMONT. It is very kind of you, Mr. RICE.

Mr. RICE. To point out any other difference except verbal between your bill and the Senate bill, except that your bill authorizes the President to stop locomotives, cars, and other vehicles in crossing the line.

Mr. BELMONT. Since the gentleman has been kind enough to give me time——

Mr. RICE. Two minutes.

Mr. BELMONT. Two minutes is quite enough. The Senate provision stops short of the sensitiveness created among the railroads. There is no intention in the House bill to injure the railroads, but there is no disposition, on the other hand, to be controlled by the unnecessary fears which have been created in certain quarters as to the effect of such legislation. While Canada has, under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871, the right to use our territory for transmission of goods in bond in sealed cars, non-intercourse would be the practical effect, unless we could stop the rolling-stock. We do not violate the treaty for car passage, as the gentleman will observe by reading the bill from line 24 to line 31. It is not a matter of convention, but a matter of convenience, and we are not bound to provide Canada with facilities for transmitting goods in bond.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Would not that be good for intercourse between the East and West?

Mr. BELMONT. I think not. It is intended to cover the whole.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? Under what peculiar legislation is the great West and the Northwest of this country, now supplied by these grand trunk railroads, to be cut off from its supplies because of these negotiations, or what has that region to do with the fisheries question?

Mr. BELMONT. Nothing whatever except that the burden of a great national question should be borne in common by all the country.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And the fisheries question you regard as such a question affecting all characters of transportation by railroads?

Mr. BELMONT. There is no railroad question about it; but if we are to have non-intercourse let us make it as effective as possible by proper legislation.

Mr. RICE. I decline, Mr. Speaker, to yield the floor further.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, for information, if fish, under the Senate bill, could not be imported into this country by rail?

Mr. RICE. They can be imported in any way, and be excluded in whatever way imported as well under the Senate bill as under the House bill.

It is as easy to exclude them by rail as by water. We have custom officers watching every avenue of entrance into the country, and carrying into execution the regulations of the Treasury Department with reference to the introduction of Canadian products into this country, whether they come by rail over our border or by water. There is no trouble about stopping them however brought.

So that, Mr. Speaker, this bill of the House not only does not do any better in all proper respects than the Senate bill, but it introduces a new and ugly suggestion, and that is of stopping the cars which carry the goods in bond, entered at Boston and New York, to Saint Paul, Minneapolis, Chicago, Saint Louis, and the great West generally.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman right there—does not my friend think this bill violates a part of the treaty?

Mr. RICE. It suggests, and it was intended to suggest—for I have the right to refer to what I have heard, as the chairman of the committee has seen proper to refer to a little admission I made in regard to the favored-nations clause—I say that this was intended to suggest a suspension of our obligation under Article XXIX of the treaty of Washington.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And that can only be done, as I understand, on notice.

Mr. RICE. And which is as advantageous to us as it is to Canada.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That, I say, can only be done on notice, as I understand the law.

Mr. RICE. Yes, sir; on two years' notice.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Two years' notice before abrogation.

Mr. RICE. So the Belmont bill suggests a violation of our treaty obligations with Great Britain, which to my mind is absolutely unnecessary, and not only unnecessary but impolitic.

Mr. BELMONT. Permit me, having made the statement——

Mr. RICE. Well, I will yield to the gentleman for just a quarter of a minute. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELMONT. I only desire to answer this criticism of my colleague by reading from the section of the bill referring to this twenty-ninth article.

Mr. RICE. I object to that; the bill has been read.

Mr. BELMONT. Well, it is the answer to the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. RICE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken more time than I had intended. I have endeavored to show that the Senate bill covers perfectly and effectually every necessity of the case; and that instead of being a partisan measure it was advocated, adopted, and supported warmly by all parties in another place than this. It was there supported on all hands; and the only suggestion of partisanship comes from my friend, the chairman.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does not this House bill go further and suggest more extreme measures than are recommended by the fishing interests and their representatives?

Mr. RICE. Much further than the representatives of those interests recommend; so far as to endanger the success of the whole measure.

Mr. BELMONT. This does not interfere with the transportation of goods to the great West and Northwest.

Mr. RICE. It suggests it very strongly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As I understand, the gentleman claims that under this bill the goods may be taken, but the means of taking are excluded.

Mr. RICE. They are to be carried on men's shoulders, if men's shoulders are not regarded as vehicles; or perhaps they might be better carried on the shoulders of jackasses. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. Does not this deprive of the benefit of competition all that Western region if it shall be carried into execution?

Mr. RICE. Certainly it takes away the advantage of competition in the transportation over Canadian roads to the West and Northwest.

Mr. BELMONT. I think it would be well for the gentleman to read the bill before making that statement.

Mr. REAGAN. The Canadian through roads to the coast are 395 miles longer than our roads, and hence they could ship cheaper over any one of our four trunk roads than over the Canadian lines.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, can goods from Detroit, for instance, be taken by the Grand Trunk Railway through Canada and brought back into this country?

Mr. RICE. No, sir; not under this provision if enforced. Now, we do not want anything more of protection in this matter than there needs to be. We do not want any war with Great Britain. This gasconading talk of war with Great Britain is nonsense in this nation. We could not afford to go to war and do not want to go.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman think that Great Britain can afford to go to war with us in our present condition?

Mr. RICE. Why, of course. Even if we should go to war we would be victorious in the end; of that I have no doubt.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. RICE. That we would whip her in the end, if that is any satisfaction to my friend from Maine.

Mr. LAIRD. Which end?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I happen to be situated a little differently from my friend. I happen to live where a six-pounder gun can throw a shot from where the Great Eastern can float right through my house. But I am not troubled in the least about war with England or any other country.

Mr. RICE. But there is no necessity of any thing of the kind. All we want is to say, "You shut our vessels out of your ports; very well, we will shut your fish out of our market;" and that will bring them to time and will not increase the price of fish to the gentleman from Texas either; for it can be proved that fish was just as high during the days of the reciprocity treaty as it has been since the reciprocity treaty was abrogated..

Now, Mr. Speaker, reserving the rest of my time——

Mr. LAIRD. Before the gentleman sits down I desire to ask him a question. At this stage of the business of the session if the House does not adopt the Senate bill will it not defeat the legislation entirely?

Mr. RICE. I was intending to refer to that. This bill passed the Senate one month ago. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has been laboring in grievous travail with it from that day to this. Now, let us adopt the Senate bill, and the thing is ended. The President of the United States, with a power behind him unequaled elsewhere on earth, has then all the authority that is necessary to rebuke in an effective manner our neighbors at the north for the outrages which they have perpetrated upon our fishermen; and my word for it, as I said before, one year of exclusion of Canadian fish from American markets will bring about a termination of all the injuries and outrages and unjust statutes which they have inflicted upon this country during the past year.

I reserve my time and yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has twenty-one minutes of time remaining.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, as the present controversy between our Government and that of Great Britain respecting the North Atlantic fisheries concerns very deeply the interests of my constituents, it becomes my duty to address the House briefly upon the subject. It is within the knowledge of the House and country that during the year just passed, which immediately followed the abrogation of the fisheries provisions of the treaty of 1871, and as soon as our fishermen began their season's operations the provincial authorities prohibited American fishing vessels from enjoying any commercial privileges in their ports, and that while attempting to do so they were seized and subjected to heavy fines and detentions which were damaging and, in some cases, ruinous to their business; and that while exercising their undoubted treaty rights they were harassed and annoyed, threatened and driven away from shelter under circumstances of danger and in clear infraction of treaty obligations, and at least in one instance subjected to damaging detention and the imposition of a heavy fine.

These outrages have been numerous and flagrant, and have been repeated and continued, and are likely to continue, in defiance of the vigorous protests of our Government until the grave question confronts us of how we shall best protect our citizens while engaged in peaceful and honorable industry against these hostile and injurious attacks, and vindicate our national honor which longer submission to these outrages can not fail to sully. The main facts which comprise the history of our relations with Great Britain on this subject are doubtless familiar to most of you, and I will only briefly allude to them.

The colonists, prior to the Revolution and after the conquest of Canada from France, had always enjoyed the undisputed right to fish upon the provincial coasts (as well inshore as deep-sea fishing) in common with the people of the Canadas. It was a right which they had earned by their important and indeed essential agency in wresting that extensive region from French control and attaching it to the British crown.

In the treaty of 1783, which recognized our independence and established peaceful relations with our late antagonist, this common right was admitted, and it continued to be exercised for a generation, until, by the treaty of 1818, the right of inshore fishing was renounced along a portion of the provincial coasts, although all our previous rights were expressly recognized as regards other parts of these coasts and certain islands. Along a certain portion of them American fishing vessels were prohibited from fishing within 3 miles of the shore and from entering waters under British jurisdiction unless for the purposes of shelter, repairing damages, purchasing wood, and obtaining water.

There have been two treaties since, in which, because of very material concessions on the part of our Government, the privilege of inshore fishing was conceded to us. It is enough to say here that neither of them proved satisfactory, and both terminated by our act. The provisions of the treaty of 1871, under which the Halifax award occurred, were peculiarly obnoxious, and their expiration was greeted with universal satisfaction. The compensation which the United States were compelled to pay by the decision of the commissioners for the privilege of exercising an ancient right was so enormously in excess of the actual value of the concession (we having paid $5,500,000 for what was worth less than $500,000) as to arouse general indignation and lead to suspicions of fraud.

For some years past, owing to a change in the methods of fishing and also in the habitat of the mackerel, which is more disposed to frequent the open sea than formerly, the privilege of inshore fishing has become valueless, and our fishermen do not ask our Government to make any concession for the purpose of securing it.

The American fisherman no longer finds it necessary to use the shores for the purpose of curing fish, as they are now preserved on board until the vessel reaches the home port.

On the other hand, the entrance of provincial fish free of duty into our ports has inflicted a serious damage upon our own fishermen. In proof of this I wish to refer to the statement of James Gifford, deputy collector of Provincetown, which appears in the report of the Senate committee, with reference to the disastrous influence of the fisheries provisions of the treaty of 1871 upon the fishing interests of the ancient county of Barnstable, whose connection with this pursuit dates back to the earliest colonial times. Mr. Gifford is known to the people of Massachusetts as a gentleman of the highest character, for the truth of whose statements I have no hesitation in vouching.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES GIFFORD—STATISTICS SHOWING THE EFFECT OF DIFFERENT TREATIES.

Q. Will you state, in your own way, to the committee your knowledge of the fishery business, the effect of the treaties upon the business of this country, &c.?

A. I will state that I have examined the official reports of Canada, the annual reports before and during the treaty, and also the annual reports of our Government during the same time, and I have compiled from them some statistics. I have the reports for each year with me, but for the sake of making a brief statement to the committee I have compiled my figures, the result of which I will give you. I will first give you the products of the British fisheries, to show the effect of the treaty from 1872 to 1884, and the amount of importations into this country.

In 1872 the value of British products was $7,532,200. We imported that year into the United States $1,020,081 worth.

By Senator EDMUNDS:

Q. That is fish products?

A. Yes, sir. The intervening years I will not give, but give them for 1884.

Q. Have you the figures for the intervening years?

A. I have them.

Senator EDMUNDS. Then make up a table and give it to the stenographer to be made a part of your testimony.

The WITNESS. In 1884 the value of British products was $17,852,521; we imported that year $5,633,566; the gain being in products of Great Britain $10,320,521, and the gain in importations, from 1872 to 1884, inclusive, into this country was $4,613,455.

The increase of Canadian fishing vessels and boats during the same time was as follows:

In 1873 the fishing vessels numbered 402, and fishing boats 9,009.

In 1884 they had 902 fishing vessels and 12,772 boats, a gain of 500 sails of fishing vessels and 3,763 boats.

In 1883 the Province of Nova Scotia alone added 143 fishing schooners, chiefly bankers, and 1,526 men to her already large fleet.

And in this connection I refer the committee to report on the canadian fisheries for the year 1883, page 21. I have that report with me.

I will now state the decrease in American tonnage during the same period.

In 1873 the fishing tonnage of the United States was 109,519 tons.

In 1884 it was 82,565 tons, the loss amounting to 26,954 tons.

I will now state the decrease in the number of fishing vessels in the six ports of Cape Cod, that is, in this county.

Q. That is, the district of Barnstable?

A. That includes the whole district of Barnstable.

In 1873 the number of vessels belonging to Provincetown was 190 sail. (I would say that this is taken from the official records at Barnstable, from the latest authority.) In 1885 there were 118 sail.

In Wellfleet in 1873 there were 71 sail; in 1885 there were 47 sail.

Dennis had in 1875 46 sail, and 19 sail in 1885.

Chatham had 18 sail in 1873, and 20 sail in 1885, being a gain of two and the only one that has gained.

Plymouth had 1 in each of those years.

Hyannis had 1 each year.

The total for the six ports in this district was 266 sail in 1873, and 206 sail in 1885, a loss of 60 sail and 2,000 tons during that time.

I will now state the catch of vessels belonging to Barnstable County that fished in British waters during the treaty.

By Senator FRYE:

Q. What do you mean by "British waters"—within the three-mile shore line?

A. No; inside and outside altogether, in British waters.

By Senator EDMUNDS:

Q. That is, the waters of the Canadian Provinces?

A. Yes, sir; over which they claim jurisdiction.

One from Dennis took 240 barrels of mackerel in 1879.

Six from Wellfleet took 70 barrels in 1880, none in 1881, none in 1882 and 1883. The product altogether there in 1884 was 185 barrels.

Five from Provincetown in 1884 took 500 barrels. One from Provincetown took 206 barrels in 1885.

During this term of four years from those six ports there were sixteen vessels that made voyages to the British waters, and they took a little over 110 barrels. I should say that this year we had several, but there was but one that made a successful trip.

By Senator FRYE:

Q. Can you tell as to the cost of that mackerel, whether they paid for the sixteen vessels?

A. No, sir.

Q. State as nearly as you can as to that.

A. There was a loss. Amongst the sixteen voyages there may have been two or three that were profitable, but the rest suffered serious loss; and during that time two vessels were lost from this port, one with an entire crew, the loss exceeding by far the gross stock caught in those waters during that time.

The causes of this decline are fully accounted for in the evidence of Mr. Gifford, given on pages 64 and 65 of the report.

THE COST OF CANADIAN OUTFITS, ETC.

By Senator FRYE:

Q. You have investigated somewhat the cost of outfits, and of supplying vessels, and generally the advantages the Canadian has over us?

A. I have a little statement here that I took from a Canadian captain who happened in here with a load of salt fish last winter, and that will perhaps give you as good an idea in reference to that as I could give you in any other way.

By Senator EDMUNDS:

Q. What kind of salt fish was it?

A. Cod.

Q. Dry, or pickled?

A. Dry fish, exported in bond. They were bonded here and exported because they could get them so much cheaper than they could get our fish, although the fish were rather inferior to ours in quality. In this statement I do not give the name of the vessel, because I thought if I gave the name of the master and vessel it might annoy the captain when he reached home, for of course the statement I make would be known, and consequently I thought it prudent not to state the name of the vessel.

The vessel belonged to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and was of 79 tons burden. She made two trips to the Banks in the season of 1885 and returned with 2,400 quintals of codfish. The American schooner Benjamin F. Rich, of Provincetown, of 65 tons, owing to the greater distance from the fishing grounds, made one trip the same season, and brought into port 1,600 quintals of codfish.

The cost of the British vessel, prepared for fishing, was $4,000, or $50.63 per ton. The cost of the American schooner—17 tons less than the other, prepared for fishing—was $6,500, or $100 per ton. The outfits of the former—salt, bait, provisions, and fishing-gear, together with wages paid the crew—amounted to between $1,900 and $2,000. The same items cost the American vessel $3,025. The wages paid the British crew were $75 to $82 per man. Those paid the American crew were from $125 to $190 per man.

Q. That is for the whole season?

A. Yes, sir. The season is one voyage with us. If our vessels are gone but two months it makes no difference, they get the same pay.

Q. The British vessel made two trips to the Banks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that $75 per man for each trip?

A. I understand that is for the entire season.

The Canadian crew were required to prepare the vessel for sea, to receive and stow cargo, and to discharge her, and wash and stack or store the fish on her return to port. The American fishermen did not perform this service. The crew on the former vessel were obliged to wait for their pay until the fish were sold and money for them received, whereas the latter, the American crew, were promptly paid and discharged on arrival in port.

The curing, drying, and handling of the Canadian fish was done by women and girls, who received 6 cents an hour and 25 cents by the day. The curing, drying, and handling of the American fish was done by men, who received from 20 to 25 cents per hour, and that is always so.

Of course under these circumstances successful competition is impossible. Under the most favorable circumstances the fishing business of New England is, when compared with other industries, not profitable. You find few instances of men who have become rich through the prosecution of this business. Let me add that the small duty of 1 cent per pound on mackerel and one-half cent per pound on codfish, while it protects the fisherman, does not appreciably enhance the cost to the consumer. This will appear when it is seen how small a proportion of the cost to the consumer is paid to the fisherman and how large a proportion to those who handle the fish subsequently.

I quote again from the testimony of Mr. Gifford:

RETAIL AND WHOLESALE PRICES OF FISH.

I have some statistics in relation to the retail and wholesale prices of fish.

Senator EDMUNDS. We should like them very much.

The WITNESS. I took pains to write to New Orleans, to Chicago, Milwaukee, New York, and Philadelphia, and saw some parties from Concord, N. H., and some fresh-fish dealers of Boston, who were here, in regard to these prices. Generally we know here what the wholesale price of fish is in New York. The prices thus asked for and given were for December in 1872 and 1873, and up to 1885, so as to include the years before and after the treaty.

Q. Have you the prices for every month in the year, or only December?

A. I got only for December. It is a very difficult matter to get at these prices, and I had a good deal of trouble to get them.

Q. You have the prices for the same months in all the years for purposes of comparison?

A. Yes, sir. I thought December was perhaps as nearly a representative month as any.

In Boston fresh cod sold in 1872 from 8 to 10 cents retail; No. 1 mackerel from 20 to 25 cents.

Q. Twenty to 25 cents a piece?

A. Yes, sir. But the other item was 8 to 10 cents a pound.

In 1885 I found the prices the same as they were in 1872 and 1873.

In Philadelphia in 1872 cod sold for from $6 to $8 per quintal; the retail price of No. 1 mackerel was 18 cents.

Q. Do you mean salt mackerel, or fresh?

A. I mean salt mackerel.

In 1873 the prices were the same.

In 1878 cod sold at from 5 to 6 cents a pound, and mackerel 15 cents. I will state that in that year the quality of the mackerel was exceedingly poor, and that accounts for the low price.

In 1885 cod retailed at 5 to 6 cents a pound, and mackerel were 18 cents.

In Concord, N. H., in 1883 and 1884 cod sold at 10 cents, as also in 1885; mackerel sold in those three years at 20 to 22 cents.

Q. Every time you speak of the price of mackerel do you mean by the piece?

A. Some were returned by the piece and some by the pound; but most of them by the piece.

Senator EDMUNDS. Then when you speak of the price of mackerel hereafter and mean to speak of the price per pound, say so, and then we will understand when you give the price of mackerel only that you mean the price by the piece.

The WITNESS. In Milwaukee in 1873 and in 1878 cod sold for 8 cents a pound, and mackerel at 20 to 25 cents each.

In 1885 the prices were precisely the same—8 cents for cod and 20 to 25 for mackerel.

In Chicago in 1873 cod sold at 10 to 12 cents a pound, and mackerel 20 cents each.

In 1878 they sold the same.

In 1886 they sold for 10 cents a pound, and mackerel 18.

In New Orleans in 1872 cod sold for 12½ cents a pound, and mackerel at 23 cents a pound.

In 1873 cod sold for 10 to 12½ cents a pound, and 20 cents a pound for mackerel.

In 1874, 10 cents a pound for cod, and 20 for mackerel.

Q. How much will No. 1 salt mackerel ordinarily weigh?

A. A good mackerel ought to weigh a pound and a quarter.

Q. That would be the average in half a barrel?

A. They ought to weigh that.

In 1878 in New Orleans the price of cod was 10 cents a pound, and mackerel 17½.

In 1879 and 1885 the price of cod was 10 cents a pound, and mackerel 20 cents a pound.

The average during the treaty for No. 1 mackerel was $16.01 per barrel.

The average price of No. 1 mackerel in Boston in 1871, 1872, and 1885 was $12.84½.

Q. For each of those years?

A. Yes sir.

By Senator FRYE:

Q. Less than the average during the treaty?

A. Yes. It was $16.01 during the treaty, and was $12.84½ before and after the treaty.

During the present season, to show how this thing operates, our vessels have been to Boston with fresh cod, and could not obtain 25 cents a hundred pounds for them.

Q. Fresh cod in good condition?

A. Fresh cod in good condition. At the same time they were retailing for 8 to 10 cents a pound. The truth is that they have all over the country been kept up at the high prices that were established during the war.

Q. You mean the retail prices?

A. Yes.

It may be that some of the gentlemen present can give you better than I can the average prices for codfish in Boston, but according to the best information I have, I judge they have not been over $2 a quintal; that is, 112 pounds.

Q. That is the wholesale price?

A. That is the wholesale price during that time. I had a minute somewhere showing what the wholesale price was in Philadelphia during this time; but the wholesale price was not half these last three years in Philadelphia what it was from 1873 up to 1884, and the retail price is unchanged, or is a trifle lower.

EFFECT OF DUTY ON THE CONSUMER.

By Senator FRYE:

Q. Then your idea is that the duty has nothing to do with the consumer?

A. Nothing at all. The fisherman cannot realize the cost of his catch, while the consumer has to pay these large prices. Of course that tends to destroy consumption and operates to cut it off largely.

By Senator EDMUNDS:

Q. Your conclusion is, then, from your information and observation in this business—and your opportunities certainly have been very good—that the provisions of the treaty of 1870 and 1871 did not operate at all to the actual advantage of the people who ate the fish?

A. No, sir; I think that is fully demonstrated.

Q. And that it operated to the disadvantage of the men who fitted out fishing vessels and the men who sailed in them?

A. Yes, sir. The profit is really reaped by the middlemen, by the dealers. It is for their advantage, undoubtedly, to have free fish; they invest a good deal less money and get larger profits.

Now, sir, the fisherman is handicapped, as I have shown, by our protective system, and if he should bear his share of its burdens and reap none of its advantages, as would be the case if provincial fish were allowed to enter our ports free, he could not survive such unjust and ruinous competition. His foreign rival would be doubly protected through the bounty paid by his own government and the relatively low wages of crew and laborers and cost of vessel and outfit. The American fisherman would indeed be delivered naked to his enemies.

Such a fate would not only be undeserved but signally unjust. The New England fishermen have deserved well of their country in every period of its history. Coming from a sturdy, God-fearing ancestry, whose traits they have inherited, they have always illustrated in their lives and characters the virtues which should distinguish citizens of free commonwealths—frugality, industry, temperance, and an unyielding and enduring love of learning and liberty. They have been taught fortitude and courage by the hardships, sufferings, and dangers of their vocation where every voyage is a campaign and every storm upon the wild Atlantic a battle with the tremendous forces of nature.

Taught in such a school the brave and hardy fishermen of Cape Cod and Cape Ann have always been ready to serve their country in her every hour of trial and conflict from the Revolution to the war of the rebellion. In the struggle for independence they helped to man our infant navy and win its victories over its mighty foe. With Decatur and Perry and Stuart and Porter they have carried the terrors and splendors of our flag into distant seas, and beneath its glorious folds have fought and conquered. They stood on the decks of the Constitution when the Guerrière went down, and the odious British doctrine of the right of search sank with her to be succeeded thenceforth and forever by the grand American doctrine of the freedom of the seas. They were with the immortal Farragut when he sailed through the jaws of death and New Orleans and Mobile were won. And what the New England fisherman has done that he will do again wherever and whenever his country calls him.

Mr. Chairman, this class of men are worth preserving and their interests are worthy of protection. It is the policy of maritime nations to protect their fisheries, because they regard them as nurseries of seamen who will be ready to man their navies in time of war, and our own country should furnish no exception in this regard. Doubtless these considerations determined the action of Congress in revoking the fisheries provisions of the treaty of Washington. This proceeding could not be cause of just offense to Great Britain, it being explicitly provided for in the treaty and in no respect unfriendly, but simply a just recognition of the rights and interests of our own citizens.

It was purely a matter of domestic concern, effecting, as it did, a change in one feature of our revenue system, and therefore not to be questioned by any foreign power. And yet the attitude of the British Government is an obvious attempt by a series of unfriendly, injurious, and offensive acts to force a change in our tariff policy which shall redound to the advantage of her North American colonies. In pursuance of this policy she has during the last fishing season boarded or seized, detained, driven from shelter, or unjustly fined more than one hundred American fishing vessels, in many, if not in most, instances, in violation of law and treaty obligations, and has inflicted great injury upon their owners. These outrages have been of two descriptions. First, where vessels, which had since 1830 enjoyed such privileges and had entered Canadian ports to purchase bait or supplies, were prohibited all commercial privileges, and seized and heavily fined for attempting to exercise them.

The second class of offenses which appear to be plain infractions of our treaty rights on the part of the provincial authorities relates to vessels having entered harbor for the purpose of shelter or to obtain water, and which have been boarded, and in one case heavily fined and in others driven off without being allowed to obtain a needed supply of water. The case of Captain Jacobs, of the Mollie Adams, is most extraordinary, and I will ask the Clerk to read his letter to the Secretary of State, and which appears in the official correspondence.

GLOUCESTER, November 12, 1886.

SIR: I would most respectfully ask your attention to the following facts as showing the spirit and manner of the application of law on the part of the officials of the Dominion of Canada.

On or about the 26th of September, when off Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, I fell in with the British schooner Neskilita, of Lockeport, Nova Scotia, which had run on Malpeque bar in making the harbor. It was blowing very heavy; sea running high. The crew was taken off by my vessel about 12 o'clock at night. There were seventeen men in all. We took care of them, and fed them for three days. The Neskilita became a total wreck. We saved some of the material.

The cutter Critic, Captain McClennan, one of the Canadian cruisers, was lying in the harbor of Malpeque. The captain boarded my vessel, and I reported to him the facts of the wreck and the condition of the men. They had saved a portion of their clothing. He neither offered to care for the wrecked crew, to feed them, nor to give them or myself any assistance whatever. Having some of the wrecked material on board, I asked the captain of the cutter for permission to land it. He referred me to the local collector. I went to the collector, and he referred me back to the captain of the cutter. As the cutter had gone out, the captain of the Neskilita assumed the responsibility and took the things ashore. The captain of the cutter told me that I could put the saved material on board a Nova Scotia vessel if I went outside of the 3-mile limit to do it. I endeavored to get some of the people on shore to take the wrecked crew, but no one would do it unless I would be responsible for their board. Finally, I gave the crew $60, enough to pay their passage home on the cars, and also gave them provisions to last during their journey.

Malpeque is a barred harbor, and it is only in smooth water that it is safe to go out over the bar, and my vessel drawing fourteen feet of water, and there was only fourteen feet of water on the bar, it was impossible for me to go out. By being detained in port in disposing of this wrecked crew I lost over ten days of valuable time before I could get out to fish, and during that time the fleet took large quantities of mackerel. Having to feed so many on my vessel left me short of provisions, and in a short time afterwards I put into Port Medway, and stated the circumstances, and asked permission to buy half a barrel of flour or enough provisions, to take my vessel and crew home. This was absolutely refused, and the collector threatened me that if I bought anything whatever he would seize my vessel. I was obliged to leave without obtaining anything and came home in three days, on short rations, a distance of 300 miles. The wind and weather being favorable, we had a good passage, but yet we were without provisions for one day before we arrived home. I wish to state most emphatically that the officials differ in their construction of our rights. Fees are different in every port, and as there is no standard of right fixed by our own Government, the fishermen are at the mercy of a class of officials hostile to them and their business, and with but little knowledge of law or its application.

For instance, at Souris, Prince Edward Island, 15 cents is charged. For reporting at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, 50 cents is charged. At Port Hood, I being sick, my brother went to the custom-house to report. The official charged him 25 cents, and told him that unless the captain reported in person the report was invalid; that men from the vessel would not be allowed ashore unless the captain reported.

In the afternoon of the same day I was able to go to the office, and was charged 25 cents for my report, making 50 cents. In the matter of anchorage fees, at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, I paid $1.50; at Malpeque, $1; at Sydney, $1.17. At some ports we have to pay anchorage fees every time we go in, as at Halifax; at others twice for the season.

Now, I would most respectfully state that the official service throughout is actuated apparently from a principle of annoyance wherever and whenever it can be so applied; that there is only harmony of action in this regard alone, and that local laws and regulations are enforced against us without regard to any rights we may have under treaty; that the effect of this enforcement is not to promote but to interfere and to limit by unjust pains, fees, and penalties the right of shelter, obtaining wood and water, and making of repairs guaranteed by treaty of 1818; that instead of the restriction contemplated the local laws make a technical obligation that is without their province or power, and enforce penalties that should never be admitted or allowed by our Government.

And I would pray that in the case recited, and many others that can be shown if required, we may be protected from local laws and their enforcement that abridge our rights and have never received the sanction of the two great contracting powers in the construction and agreement of the treaty of 1818.

I have, &c.,

SOLOMON JACOBS.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE.

It is difficult to conceive of such brutal inhumanity practiced by the authorities of a civilized country. Such practices, although not likely to occur even there, would not be surprising in the South Sea Islands, in the Malay Archipelago, or in Central Africa, but they ought not to be possible within the Dominion of Canada and by the authority of her Majesty's Government. We claim that we have a right under the treaty of 1818 to enter the waters, ports, and harbors of British North America for the four purposes named therein without being subjected to molestation, annoyance, or injury of any description, and that the prohibition coupled therewith refers and can only refer to fishing within the 3-mile limit, and the curing and drying of fish on the shores, or other processes of like nature, and that it has never heretofore been held even by the British Government to apply to commercial transactions.

The circumstances surrounding the treaty of 1818 clearly show that its fisheries stipulations refer to that subject exclusively and can not reasonably refer to anything else. The British provinces bordering on the Atlantic were at that time weak in resources, inconsiderable in population, and their commercial relations with our country were so extremely limited as to be of no importance. The entire trade of British North America with the United States amounted to only $2,284,834 in 1823, five years after the date of the treaty, while in 1886 it aggregated $72,281,359. Since that time these colonies have grown and prospered, and are to-day a dignified and important appanage of the British Crown.

I repeat that in the light of contemporaneous history that treaty could only refer to and define the fisheries relations between the two governments. This view of our treaty relations upon this subject was taken by the Halifax commission when it decided commercial considerations to be outside its jurisdiction. No other interpretation was given to the treaty from the date of its passage until the present controversy, and now after a lapse of nearly seventy years we have a new, unreasonable, and mischievous definition given to its provisions. We claim that by reciprocal legislation outside of treaty stipulations our vessels, including those engaged in fishing, have been permitted to trade in provincial ports, and that, in the absence of specific legislation, arrangement, or regulation, the spirit of comity and good neighborhood would permit within certain limits such intercourse between friendly powers.

It is true that Great Britain, from the period of our independence to 1830, had pursued a restrictive commercial policy toward us, but this policy was general and did not specially discriminate against fishing vessels. Again, when by the reciprocal legislation of 1830 the commercial intercourse of the two countries was liberated from these restrictions, fishing vessels were not excluded from its operation, but have been, up to last year, when engaged in commercial transactions, treated precisely like other vessels similarly employed. So that the history of our relations with Great Britain and her North American provinces previous to the treaty of 1818, as well as contemporaneous with and subsequent to its adoption, abundantly proves that the claim now for the first time made that fishing vessels are by the terms of that treaty prohibited from commercial intercourse with British North America is unfounded.

This prohibition can only stand upon that principle of international law which permits each country to decide for itself upon the extent of intercourse, commercial or otherwise, which it will maintain with other nations. A government which assumes this position and initiates a policy so unfriendly and illiberal must accept the responsibility of possible consequences, and can not fairly complain if similar measures are enforced against her. If Great Britain is determined to sustain the Canadian authorities in a policy of commercial non-intercourse with a class of our vessels engaged in a legal and laudable occupation wholly without her jurisdiction and in the great territory of the nations, we must prove to her that such policy will be inconvenient and injurious to her interests.

This can not be done by diplomacy, as the executive branch of our Government must by this time be convinced. The correspondence relating to this dispute has been conducted on the part of our Government with signal ability and in a true American spirit. The Secretary of State has in each instance vigorously protested against the flagrant outrages that have been committed against our citizens and our flag; and the communications addressed by Mr. Phelps to the British foreign secretary are models of statement and reasoning at once clear, forcible, and conclusive. But our representations have been wholly futile. No adequate reply has been vouchsafed, for certainly the curt and unsatisfactory responses we have received can not be dignified by that term.

We have been turned over to a subordinate Canadian official, who has been deputed to answer the remonstrances of a great power justly incensed at the treatment it has received. Our Government can fairly take umbrage at the contemptuous attitude assumed by the British Government in this correspondence. It is now full time to vindicate by other steps our rights, interests, and honor. Fortunately, this can be done without war or danger of war by the simple application on a wider scale of the policy that has been adopted toward us.

During the first session of this Congress I introduced a bill for this purpose, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and favorably reported to the House, and is now upon the Calendar. Soon afterward my colleague in the Senate [Mr. DAWES] introduced a similar bill; one has also recently been introduced in the House by Mr. BELMONT, and a little earlier the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations reported a bill which has passed that body with but one dissenting vote, and for which the House Committee on Foreign Affairs now proposes a substitute. With the Senate bill I am entirely satisfied, for one feature of it if carried into effect with due energy will, in my judgment, lead the British authorities to reconsider their hasty and offensive action.

I refer to that clause which authorizes the President to deny entry into the United States "of fresh fish or salt fish, or any other product of said dominion, or other goods coming from said dominion to the United States." This touches the weak point of our antagonist, for it demonstrates to him that the course he is pursuing so far from accomplishing his avowed object of forcing the products of his fisheries duty free into our ports has shut them out altogether. It is strongly to be hoped that this measure, which substantially represents the sentiment of Congress, should pass before the close of this session, in order that its influence, which can not fail to be salutary, may be promptly exerted, and that our fishermen may know that the strong arm of the Government is uplifted in their behalf.

If it be urged that these retaliatory or responsive measures look toward war, we answer that they will have an exactly contrary effect and will be eminently peaceful in their tendency. When a nation finds that she can pursue an intemperate and aggressive policy without retaliation and with impunity she will be very likely to overstep the bounds of patience and commit acts which can not be endured, and which will inevitably produce hostile collision and war. If she, however, is met upon the threshold of these aggressions and becomes convinced that her course will result in greater injury to her own interests than to those of her antagonist she will be induced to pause and reflect upon the probable consequences of her proceedings, and in this way a settlement of grave difficulties may be arrived at.

In conclusion, let me say that the character of this legislation is in harmony with international law and numerous precedents furnished by our own Government.

The history of our relations with Europe from 1794 to 1815 furnishes many instances of the prohibition of commerce as a retaliatory measure. An embargo was laid on British vessels March 26, 1794, for sixty days, and on June 4 of the same year the President was authorized to lay an embargo at any time between that date and the meeting of Congress in November. By the act of June 12, 1798, commercial intercourse was prohibited with France and her colonies. An act was passed April 18, 1806, which prohibited after a certain date the importation of certain products of Great Britain and her colonies.

On the 11th of November, 1807, the famous British orders in council were passed. These orders prohibited any direct trade to any port or country of Europe from which the British flag was excluded; it allowed direct trade in American produce only between the United States and Sweden; it ordered all articles of domestic or colonial production exported by the United States to Europe to be landed in England, whence their re-exportation on paying duties would be permitted and regulated; and it declared any vessel and cargo good prize if it carried a French consular certificate of the origin of the cargo.

In consequence of this injurious and offensive act the embargo was passed by Congress December 22, 1807, and continued till March 4, 1809; and was followed by the non-intercourse law, which was enacted a few days before its termination.

This act was revived and continued by the acts of June, 1809, May, 1810, and March, 1811. It forbade the entrance to American ports of public or private British or French vessels, all commercial intercourse with France or Great Britain, and the importation after May 20 of goods grown or manufactured in France, Great Britain, or their colonies.

This policy was repeated in 1818 by the passage of a law enforcing non-intercourse by British vessels between our ports and those closed against us by the action of Great Britain; and in 1820 a law still more vigorous was passed applying to all the British North American possessions. All these very stringent measures were in the interest of peace, which our Government was anxious to maintain, and their adoption proves that our proposed action is in the line of numerous precedents and in accordance with our early policy.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, if that policy be repeated to-day with the necessary firmness and to the necessary extent, it will prove sufficient to bring about a peaceful and satisfactory solution of this question.

Mr. CLEMENTS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Do I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] still has control of the balance of the hour that he did not occupy?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. How much more time is there on this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are the thirty-five minutes controlled by the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] is recognized for thirty minutes, the remainder of the time indicated by the gentleman from New York when he proposed that there should be an hour and a half on each side before he called the previous question.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I regret that my genial and able friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has seen proper to throw into this discussion somewhat of apparent partisanship. It seems contrary to his nature that in the consideration of a grave question like this small matters of partisanship should be introduced. For some purpose he has seen proper to designate the substitute offered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the Senate bill repeatedly as the Belmont bill, and to give the discussion a political tinge. These matters are entirely foreign to the great question we are called on, not as partisan politicians but as Americans, to consider. The bill proposes to authorize the President to declare and enforce non-intercourse with Canada, if necessary, to protect American rights. Let us deal with it in the spirit of American patriotism and with fidelity to American rights, without regard to what the bill has been called.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has read all of the bills that have been proposed, and he must well know that the bill offered by the committee as a substitute is not literally or substantially the Belmont bill and that there are material changes in it. It is in fact a substitute for that and the Senate bill. But I can not in the short time allotted to me discuss these immaterial questions. This is not a local issue. It is not a mere "skirmish about fish," as I have heard it designated elsewhere. It perhaps originated in what may have been denominated properly a mere "skirmish about fish;" but it has gone beyond that sort of question. It has assumed proportions larger than a mere business question about fish or protection upon fish. I must say that if it were confined to the question of protection on fish, which is an important item of food, in the interest of New England, I would not be opposed to free fish, which means to that extent free food to the American people. But I am not willing to say that Canada shall revise our tariff and that Canada shall dictate whether we shall have protection on fish or not. It goes beyond the question of mere protection to a New England interest.

The American flag on one of the American vessels has been hauled down by Canadian officials. More than one hundred and fifty American fishing vessels have been warned off, entered by the officials of Canada, and searched or interfered with in some way that was injurious to this important industry and to American rights.

It is true an apology was made by Canada for the interference with our flag; but under the operation of the harsh Canadian statute recently enacted serious and unjust vexations will continue to interfere with the just rights of our fishermen. This statute is as follows:

An act further to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels.

(Reserved by the governor-general on Wednesday, 2d June, 1886, for the signification of the Queen's pleasure thereon. Royal assent given by Her Majesty in council on the 26th day of November, 1886. Proclamation thereof made on the 24th day of December, 1886.)

Whereas it is expedient for the more effectual protection of the inshore fisheries of Canada against intrusion by foreigners, to further amend the act entitled "An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," passed in the thirty-first year of Her Majesty's reign, and chaptered 61:

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The section substituted by the first section of the act thirty-third Victoria, chapter 151, entitled "An act to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," for the third section of the hereinbefore recited act is hereby repealed, and the following section substituted in lieu thereof:

"3. Any one of the officers or persons hereinbefore mentioned may bring any ship, vessel, or boat, being within any harbor of Canada, or hovering in British waters, within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada into port and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in command does not truly answer the questions put to him in such examination, he shall incur a penalty of $400; and if such ship, vessel, or boat is foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and (A) has been found fishing, or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing in British waters within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of Canada, not included within the above-mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the term named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel, or boat under the first section of this act, or (B) has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by treaty or convention, or by any laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada for the time being in force, such ship, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited."

The questions of difference between the British Government and this Government as to those treaties have been specifically defined by other gentlemen who have preceded me. There is no difference between the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the minority as to what the issue is between the two governments. There is no difference between us as to what have been the infractions of the rights of American fishermen. We agree upon the facts. At this point allow me to read from the treaty of 1783, which, upon this question, is as follows:

The treaty of peace defined, in 1783, the area of American fisheries which might in that portion of the world be prosecuted by American vessels. Its third article declares:

ARTICLE III.

It is agreed that the people of the United states shall continue to enjoy unmolested the right—

1. To take fish of every kind on the Grand Bank and all the other banks of Newfoundland;

2. Also in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence;

3. And at all other places, in the sea, where the inhabitants of both countries used at any time heretofore to fish.

And also that the inhabitants of the United States shall have liberty—

1. To take fish of every kind on such part of the coast of Newfoundland as British fishermen shall use (but not to dry or cure the same on that island);

2. And also on the coasts, bays, and creeks of all other of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America.

3. And that the American fishermen shall have liberty to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of Nova Scotia, Magdalen Islands, and Labrador, so long as the same shall remain unsettled; but so soon as the same, or either of them, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such settlement without a previous agreement for that purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

The provisions of the treaty of 1818 upon the fisheries are as follows:

Whereas differences have arisen respecting the liberty claimed by the United States, for the inhabitants thereof, to take, dry, and cure fish on certain coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, it is agreed between the high contracting parties that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have, forever, in common with the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind—

1. On that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands, on the western and northern coasts of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands;

2. On the shores of the Magdalen Islands;

3. And also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks from Mount Joly, on the southern coast of Labrador, to and through the Straits of Belle Isle, and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company.

And that the American fishermen shall also have liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland, here above described, and of the coast of Labrador; but so soon as the same, or any portion thereof, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

And the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the above-mentioned limits.

Provided, however, That the American fishermen shall be permitted to enter such bays or harbors (1) for the purpose of shelter and (2) of repairing damages therein; of (3) purchasing wood and (4) of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them.

In relation to this article I read a paragraph from the report of the committee. It is as follows:

That article does not allude to or attempt to interfere with our rights in the open sea, on the banks, or in the Gulf, which were confirmed by the concession of the independence of the thirteen States. It refers only to the liberty claimed and recognized by the treaty of 1783, "on certain coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks." It begins by a recital that differences have arisen respecting the "liberty" claimed by American fishermen in those places. It neither mentions nor alludes to any differences about fishing on the high seas. It stipulates that American fishermen may fish on certain specified coasts, bays, harbors, creeks, and shores, and may dry and cure fish in certain unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks, and especially dry and cure on the coasts of Newfoundland, which last the treaty of 1783 did not embrace. The United States "renounces" any "liberty" to take, dry, or cure fish within 3 miles of any other coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors than those specified in the article, but the sentence of renunciation contains a stipulation that the American fishermen may enter "such bays or harbors" for four specified purposes, "and for no other purpose whatever," under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent fishing, drying, or curing "therein."

Now, it has all the time been contended by this Government, and has never before been disputed by the British Government, as I understand, that the deep-sea fishermen—and by that I mean those Americans who engage in fishing outside of the 3-mile limit of the Canadian coasts—had the right to enter Canadian ports for the four purposes mentioned in the treaty of 1818, to "touch and trade," to buy bait and supplies. There was a concession upon the part of our Government that our people should not carry on this industry within 3 miles of certain parts of that coast. It is undisputed by Canada or by Great Britain that American fishermen have the right to catch fish along part of it, to cure and dry them in the ports thereof.

The concession on our part applied to only a limited portion of the coast. Therefore we have an absolute right to fish or to land, for the purpose of buying supplies or for other proper purposes, on a part of the coast, but as to another part we are restricted so that we can not enter within the 3-mile limit. But our vessels engaged in the deep-sea fisheries outside of that limit, which are free to the world, have heretofore been allowed to enter for other purposes than the four mentioned in the treaty, to wit, for "shelter and repairing damages there, of purchasing wood and obtaining water." Now, we insist that those rights of our fishermen have been violated.

The people of all the colonies shared equally in unrestricted rights in these fisheries prior to the separation of those afterward forming the United States from great Britain. The people of these States retain those rights in full except as modified by these treaty stipulations. There are many thousand brave American fishermen engaged in this great industry, there are many thousand American people dependent upon it. There are many millions of dollars invested by Americans in the business. It is an important source of our food supply; the Government of the United States is bound to protect these important rights of her people.

We are now coming near to another fishing season. It is not deemed expedient by the committee to which this question was referred, and which has given it that consideration which its gravity demands, that Congress shall adjourn without giving the President power to act for the protection of our fishermen and American rights. Now, how far shall we go? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] contends that the difference between the bill of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and that of the Senate is merely a question about words. That is presenting fairly the true question that is involved between the two bills. There is a broad and material difference between them. Mr. Speaker, at a time when negotiations are being attempted between the two Governments in regard to this dispute, why should we improperly define our rights by saying that we claim such as are granted to the most favored nation, as the Senate bill does?

We have distinctly defined and long recognized rights there that no other nation has or claims to have. We have not and have never had a treaty with Great Britain with a "most favored nation" clause in it. But while gentlemen admit that this language about the rights of the "most favored nation" has no proper place in the bill, they say it is surplusage and is harmless. Do we not know that to deliberately base by express language our rights upon such a pretension as this is misleading and is calculated to produce confusion and embarrassment in further dealing with the matter of dispute? Why cloud our well-defined rights by words that are worse than superfluous?

Suppose we put our claim on this ground, the reply will be that we have no such treaty with Great Britain. If such claim were admitted without a treaty provision, would not its continuance depend upon the continuance of the rights of such favored nations? If lost to them by treaty or otherwise, would not our right fall? It is true that the Senate bill goes on to say "or shall be otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed." That is the only saving clause in the Senate bill, which is to cover any other right claimed by Americans outside of treaty, law or the most favored nation provision. "Or shall be otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed." What is it to be "unjustly vexed or harassed?" Who is to say what that is?

Mr. RICE. President Cleveland is to say.

Mr. CLEMENTS. And how are our people to be "unjustly vexed or harassed" if their rights under the law or under the treaty are all that they have, and those are not violated? If those strict rights are all that we have, and they are not violated, how can we be "unjustly vexed or harassed?" In such a case, how can vexation be unjust without being illegal? And if it is not in violation of law or treaty, how is it illegal?

Mr. RICE. How is your bill better?

Mr. CLEMENTS. My friend from Massachusetts asks me in what respect our bill is better. I will read, in answer to that question, the first part of the bill:

That hereafter whenever the President shall be satisfied that vessels of the United States are denied, in ports or territorial waters of the British dominions in North America, rights to which such vessels are entitled by treaty or by the law of nations——

Mr. RICE. Who is to say what are their rights "by treaty or by the law of nations?"

Mr. CLEMENTS. The gentleman will allow me to read on:

or are denied the comity of treatment or the reasonable privileges usually accorded between neighboring and friendly nations, he may, in his discretion, &c.

Mr. RICE. Now, if there is any vagueness to be complained of, is there not just as much vagueness about that language as about the phraseology of the Senate bill?

Mr. CLEMENTS. We are unwilling that the American fishermen should be confined to their rights by treaty, and the executive department of our Government through this whole controversy has not stopped at complaining of the violation of our strict, narrow rights under treaty, but has insisted all the while upon that "comity of treatment or the reasonable privileges usually accorded between neighboring and friendly nations," and has complained of the almost savage disregard of such. We ought not to pass a bill which waives all such claims, particularly when the cause of this controversy has by the executive branch of our Government been placed largely upon this claim, so far as commercial priviliges are concerned. Shall we waive the basis upon which we claim these privileges which have been insisted upon by the Administration, and add the surplusage, as my friend would perhaps call it, about a favored nation clause, when we have none and when such language leads only to confusion and misconstruction, and complicates the whole question?

Permit me here to read an extract from the strong letter of the Secretary of the Treasury as to commercial privileges:

The treaty of 1818 secured to our fishermen what, up to that time, they did not have as a treaty right, which was admission to Canadian bays or harbors "for the purpose of shelter, and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever." As colonists we had those rights, but as colonists we lost them by just rebellion. They should not be called commercial rights, for they were simply rights of humanity, decency, good neighborhood, and international kindness to one another. To refuse a fishing vessel such hospitality would be an act of barbarism fit only for savages.

It would be as contemptible and odious as for a government, conducting a naval war, to fire, in these days, on a hospital ship, attested by her color and flag, and filled exclusively with the sick, wounded, or dying, their surgeons and nurses. Such hospital vessels are now, by the common consent of civilized nations, as I am told, even more perfectly and completely neutralized than are hospitals and tents on land over which floats the yellow flag. It is impossible not to recognize how justly my colleague, Mr. Bayard, has portrayed the inhumanity and brutality with which certain Canadian officials treated defenseless American fishermen during the last summer, even those who had gone out of their way to rescue Canadian sailors, and, having entered a Canadian bay to safely land those they had saved, attempted to procure food to sustain their own lives.

The other material difference between the House and the Senate bill is in regard to authorizing the President to forbid the entrance of locomotives, cars, or other vehicles coming into this country from Canada. And why should this not be authorized, if we propose to have non-intercourse at all? Can not the President be trusted in this matter. If during the coming fishing season these complications continue to grow, if the American flag is to be disregarded and our fishermen denied their rights, if they are to be "unjustly vexed and harassed," why should we hesitate in regard to non-intercourse? Why should we not give the President the discretion which this bill proposes? It does not require him to go to the full extent authorized, nor indeed to act at all; but simply gives him the discretion to go to such extent as he may deem necessary. He may confine his action to the prohibition of fish alone; and if he thinks that sufficient, no doubt he will stop there. But in the recess of Congress he ought to be authorized to go as far as may be in his judgment necessary. If you put the responsibility upon him, give him the power necessary to discharge it and provide an adequate remedy for the evils complained of.

Our friends from the Northwest ought not to complain of this. This is a national question, which means an American question. It is not a New England question. It should not be made a merely local business question for one purpose and a national question for another. The people of that section I have the honor in part to represent are as jealous of the honor of this country as are the people of any other section. We have but little interest in this question so far as fish are concerned, but we have an interest in it because it affects the honor of our Government. If it should unfortunately become necessary for the President to exercise the power proposed in the bill, and it should interfere somewhat with the commerce of the Northwest, if it should stop some of the cars entering that section from Canada, I ask my friends from the Northwest whether they are not willing, if need be, for the proper settlement of this question, for the protection of the rights of American citizens and the honor of our common Government, to do without a little trade temporarily, involving merely a question of dollars and cents only?

Under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of Washington the right to land goods in Canada and ship them overland in bond to the United States is guaranteed. But are we bound under the treaty to furnish cars—vehicles upon which to transport such goods? But suppose it does violate the treaty, the President must first be satisfied that our treaty rights have first been violated. In that event are we not justified in disregarding it when necessary to our protection? The power should be broad and the discretion ample. The rights we claim should be well defined and put upon just grounds, as they have been by the Executive. Because our bill goes further than that which the gentleman from Massachusetts advocates, he, desiring protection to the fishermen in New England, ought not to complain.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has eleven minutes.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, it is well for us in looking at this subject to consider, first, how far we agree; then to discover whether or not there are such substantial reasons of divergence as ought to guide any gentleman to prefer the Senate bill to that which has been submitted by your committee. There is a happy concurrence on all sides, an opinion which seems to be unanimous in the Senate, and so far as we can discern is unanimous here, that the treatment of American fishermen by the laws of the provinces of Great Britain in North America, by their custom-house officers, and by the authorities of the provincial government, has been such not only to suggest but to demand the attention of Congress.

I have not time, sir, even to summarize the details of the gross and very insulting course of conduct pursued toward American fishermen, but if any gentleman will take time to read the reports which have been submitted to this House he will discover that that has been such as to require the gravest consideration and the most emphatic condemnation at our hands.

THE BASIS OF OUR RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Our relations with our Canadian neighbors are to be regarded in the light of, first, treaty obligations arising out of our convention with Great Britain; second, international law; and, third, the comity usually practiced between friendly and neighboring States.

So far as treaty obligations are concerned, they are comprehended, as is well understood, by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of 1818, and by article 29, of what is commonly called "the Alabama treaty," which was left in force by the act of Congress of June 28, 1883, and the President's proclamation made in pursuance thereof.

The first article of the treaty of 1818 is as follows:

Whereas differences have arisen respecting the liberty claimed by the United States, for the inhabitants thereof, to take, dry, and cure fish on certain coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, it is agreed between the high contracting parties that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have, forever, in common with the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind—

1. On that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands, on the western and northern coasts of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands;

2. On the shores of the Magdalen Islands;

3. And also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks from Mount Joly, on the southern coast of Labrador, to and through the Straits of Belle Isle, and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company.

And that the American fishermen shall also have liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland, hereabove described, and of the coast of Labrador; but so soon as the same, or any portion thereof, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

And the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the above-mentioned limits.

Provided, however, That the American fishermen shall be permitted to enter such bays or harbors (1) for the purpose of shelter and (2) of repairing damages therein; of (3) purchasing wood and (4) of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges herein reserved to them.

And article 29 of the Alabama treaty relating to the passage of goods across Canadian and Federal territory is in these terms:

It is agreed that, for the term of years mentioned in article 33 of this treaty, goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at the ports of New York, Boston, and Portland, and any other ports in the United States which have been or may, from time to time, be specially designated by the President of the United States, and destined for her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America, may be entered at the proper custom-house and conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, through the territory of the United States, under such rules, regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue as the Government of the United States may, from time to time, prescribe; and under the rules, regulations, and conditions, goods, wares, or merchandise may be conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, from such possessions through the territory of the United States for export from the said ports of the United States.

It is further agreed that for the like period, goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at any of the ports of her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America and destined for the United States, may be entered at the proper custom-house, and conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, through the said possessions, under such rules and regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue, as the governments of the said possessions may from time to time prescribe; and under like rules, regulations, and conditions, goods, wares, or merchandise may be conveyed in transit, without payment of duties, from the United States through the said possessions to other places in the United States, or for export from ports in the said possessions.

CONCURRENCE OF OPINION AS TO THE GRIEVANCE OF THE UNITED STATES.

I will not spend my brief time in relating the particulars of the violations of the treaty of 1818 by the Canadian authorities, or of their breach of those principles of international law and comity between friendly and neighboring States which call for the retaliatory legislation now proposed. In the reports of the Senate and House Committees of Foreign Affairs, and in the communications from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury, which are accessible to all, they will be found amply spread out.

Suffice to say that there is concurrence of opinion that the treaty has not been observed in the right spirit by Canada; and that comity and international law applicable to the matter have been trenched upon by numerous provincial statutes subjecting our fishermen to rigid and unreasonable rules and harsh penalties; that they and their crafts have been seized and held in durance vile; that they have been warned off from Canadian waters when in no dereliction; that they have been refused harbor in Canadian waters, even when storm raged upon the ocean; and in short, it is now the sense of all departments of this Government that some such legislation as is now proposed is called for.

I say this much as necessary introduction to a due understanding of the competing measures now before the House—the one embodied in the bill that has been passed by the Senate, the other in the substitute therefor, which the House Committee on Foreign Affairs now submits and commends to your adoption.

THIS NOW A NATIONAL QUESTION.

I have heard none of that gasconade about war which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] referred to. I hope that there may be no war, but I believe that the way to prevent war is for every government whose dignity is assailed or whose rights are infringed to meet the hostile act on the threshold with becoming resentment, and with the gravity that projects the question at once before the eyes of all the people.

It has been well said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] that this is not a mere question of the fisheries. It is in the person of the fisherman, in the ship of the fisherman, in the property and right of the fisherman, that injury has been received, but the injury, when done, is an injury to the country and all its citizens. And this controversy can not be dwarfed into a local issue, and dealt with as a "mere scrimmage about fish."

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE BILL.

Now, coming down to consider the bills before us, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has challenged the Committee on Foreign Affairs to show wherein their bill diverges from the Senate bill save in a single point, and he declares that the sole point of difference is that in the House relating to the matter of railroad intercourse.

I think I can point out to that gentleman several differences between the House bill and the Senate bill, in all of which differences the House bill appears to greater advantage.

THE "MOST FAVORED NATION" PHRASE IN THE SENATE BILL A BLUNDER.

In the first place, the term "most favored nation" is used in the Senate bill as the predicate of the proclamation of non-intercourse to be made by the President, in three different sentences. That bill proposes that the President be authorized to suspend intercourse between Canada and the United States, to a certain limited extent, whenever he shall be satisfied that our fishing vessels or fishermen—

Having a permit under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places in the British dominion of North America, are or then lately have been denied the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places, in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nation.

Second. Or when such vessels or fishermen—

Shall be unjustly vexed or harassed in respect thereof, or otherwise be unjustly vexed or harassed therein, or shall be prevented from purchasing such supplies as may there be lawfully sold to trading vessels of the most favored nation.

And again:

Third. Or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any other vessels of the United States, their masters or crews, so arriving at or being in such British waters or ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied any of the privileges therein accorded to the vessels, their masters or crews, of the most favored nation.

"The most favored nation" is herein made three times the standard by which the Canadian authorities must regulate their conduct toward us. What does it mean? What do we care for the "regulations" which Canada enacts as to some favored nation? What do we care for the conditions under which Canada sells "supplies" to "the most favored nation?" What have we to do with the privileges which it may please her to accord to "the most favored nation?"

Which is "the most favored nation?" Suppose these questions show us conclusively that the terms "most favored nation" were improvidently and bunglingly and ill-advisedly used on the Senate bill; and it is now conceded by gentlemen on the other side that the phrase was most unhappily chosen. These words in the Senate bill——

Mr. RICE. The gentleman does not mean to say I have conceded it as unhappily chosen. I admit I would have chosen a different phrase.

Mr. DANIEL. I admit the gentleman did not employ the language I used, but he has conceded in effect all that I claim. He says he would not have chosen the words "most favored nation," and couples with that statement a declination to tell us the reason why any other gentleman would have chosen them. Nor has any gentleman on that side explained these words. They are challenged to explain, and they are dumb. And I submit, when you read in the forefront of this bill that it is three times provided that the refusal of Canada to grant to the United States with reference to her fishermen and their ships rights accorded to the "most favored nation," that we shift the matter of this controversy, and, although clearly on the right in the just grounds stated, we go out of the way to throw a cloud over her proceeding and put ourselves in the wrong.

Why does any one put the clause "most favored nation" in this bill? What is the propriety of lugging in a phrase not in pari materia? We do not care what Canada does for the most favored nation or what Great Britain does for the most favored nation. All we demand is that as to us she shall observe her treaty, that she shall respect international law, and shall conduct herself toward us with comity and friendship and good neighborhood.

Now if she does this, and that is the postulate of our position, why should we go out of the way to reach out for some foreign and alien matter and say you have not treated us as you treat your most favored nation?

No, Mr. Speaker, the House takes the right ground firmly and with precision. It authorizes action:

Whenever the President shall be satisfied that vessels of the United States are denied, in ports or territorial waters of the British dominions in North America, rights to which such vessels are entitled by treaty or by the law of nations, or are denied the comity of treatment or the reasonable privileges usually accorded between neighboring and friendly nations.

When it is remembered that we have no treaty with Great Britain which requires the treatment of our fishermen to be after the fashion accorded "the most favored nation," it must be realized that "some one has blundered" on the Senate bill, and that the House bill corrects the blunder; and herein I answer in one respect the challenge of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

THE HOUSE BILL BETTER DEFINES THE CLASS OF PROHIBITED VESSELS THAN THE SENATE BILL.

In the second place, sir, there is another objection to the Senate bill, or rather a defect in it, by contrast with the House bill. We, in my judgment, should give preference to the latter. The Senate bill, or Edmunds bill, as it is commonly termed, gives authority to the President of the United States to make a proclamation of non-intercourse with reference to vessels, merchandise, and goods of the British dominions of North America.

It says that it shall be the duty of the President of the United States under the conditions set forth—

In his discretion, by proclamation to that effect, to deny vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America, any entrance into the waters, ports, or places of or within the United States (with such exceptions in regard to vessels in distress, stress of weather, or needing supplies as to the President shall seem proper) whether such vessels shall have come directly from said dominions on such destined voyage or by way of some port or place in such destined voyage elsewhere.

Now, why is the refusal of intercourse thus limited to "vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America?" I think the Secretary of the Treasury in his published letter has made a just criticism on this language, and it is so much to the point that I quote it. It says:

Is there not possible ambiguity in the phrase "vessels of the British dominions of North America?" Does it mean only vessels whose home port is in those dominions, or vessels wholly owned by those having domicile in those dominions? Will it exclude a British vessel whose home port is outside of those dominions, or not owned therein? Will it permit a vessel with her home port in England, Scotland, or Ireland, or the British West Indies, to enter and clear at our ports, and do carrying trade between Canada and our ports? I infer that the bill was framed to exclude only Canadian or Newfoundland owned vessels, and that other British vessels, French or German vessels, or vessels of any other nationality, may enter our ports, although coming from ports of Canada or Newfoundland, but that our ports may be closed to any and all merchandise coming from those British colonies even if on board a friendly vessel.

The House bill removes all ambiguity as to the vessels to be denied entry. It substitutes for the words "vessels of the British dominions of North America," the better words:

Vessels owned wholly or in part by a subject of Her British Majesty.

This is a phrase to which indeed objection has been suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], but against which no formal or specific argument has been made.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Virginia desires to proceed, I will yield to him five minutes more time.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, and again we ask why limit, as the Senate bill does, the President's authority to deny entry into the United States only "of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States."

THE HOUSE BILL MORE COMPREHENSIVELY DEALS WITH THE MATTER THAN THE SENATE BILL.

Instead of this stinted measure of authority the House bill confers on the President powers adequate to the dignity of the subject and to his responsibility.

It authorizes him to interdict or forbid the entrance or importation—

Either by land or water into the United States of any goods, wares, or merchandise from the aforesaid Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland or any locomotive, car, or other vehicle with any goods that may be therein contained from the Dominion of Canada.

There is no ambiguity there. There is no chance of misunderstanding that language; there is no cheese-paring; there is a broadside declaration of our purpose that if the people of Canada continue to treat our fishermen in the manner in which they have been treating them that the whole United States will at once lift up its hands to forbid further intercourse, and will treat the subject not as a mere skirmish, in one corner of the country, but as one whichs affects the honor and calls forth the power of the nation.

THE HOUSE BILL SUGGESTS NO VIOLATION OF TREATY, BUT FIRMLY RESPECTS TREATY OBLIGATIONS.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has said in his remarks that this bill "suggests" the violation of our treaty stipulations with Great Britain.

That was an extremely guarded statement—"suggests" a violation. He does not say it violates it, but simply to his mind there is a suggestion of violation. I think, sir, that a perusal of the bill will not only remove the suggestion to any man's mind that there is anything that points to a violation of the treaty, but such perusal will, on the contrary, satisfy him that it is impossible for guarded language more perfectly and precisely to hold forth the idea that we intend most squarely to protect and keep our treaty obligations. Let me read.

The specific clause of the treaty to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers is the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871, which secures to Canada the right to transfer across our territory, without paying duty, her goods, and the corresponding right on the part of the United States to ship our goods without paying duty across Canadian territory. Let us see now what there is here to suggest a violation.

The language of this bill is:

And upon proof that the privileges secured by article 29 of the treaty concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 8th day of May, 1871, are denied as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving at the ports of British North America, the President may also, by proclamation, forbid the exercise of the like privileges as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving in any of the ports of the United States.

Mr. RICE. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. RICE. If the President should prohibit the cars from passing over our territory into the Canadian territory, and back and forth, conveying these bonded goods, which under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty have a right to be carried, would he not in spirit violate that article of the treaty?

Mr. DANIEL. "If" is the smallest and the greatest word in the language.

Mr. RICE. Why do you suggest it? Why do you give him the power if you do not suggest a violation?

Mr. DANIEL. We do not. If the President, with a mind oblivious to the fair interpretation of the English language and utterly regardless of the plain meaning of that language as applied to the subject-matter, chooses to do so, of course it would be done, but it would be done not in accordance with this law but in violation and defiance of it, for it only gives him a right to do it on proof submitted to him that Great Britain has violated the treaty first as to all of those goods that pass across the territory without the payment of duty.

Mr. RICE. But it gives him the right to stop cars conveying goods where there has not been the payment of duty.

Mr. DANIEL. It gives him the right in his discretion to stop such cars. His discretion applies to every item of this bill. And just there let me call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentlemen on the other side of this bill have argued as if Congress of itself undertook to do everything which is specifically authorized here and as if one of those things is done all must be done.

On the contrary, all that is attempted to be done by this bill is to repose in the Chief Magistrate of this nation power to do each and all of these things under the corresponding circumstances and conditions which are related. And when it refers to the matter of treaty and to those cars which are comprehended by the treaty, it says to him in general terms, "You may stop the passage by water or by land of all cars; but when you touch those that come under the treaty, take care that you have first the proof before you that Great Britain has violated her treaty." I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts does he not believe that to be the fair, direct, and honest interpretation of this bill?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DANIEL. I yield a half minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts to answer me.

Mr. RICE. You have no time to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has expired.

Mr. DANIEL. I know my friend from Massachusetts is too good a lawyer to desire time to answer the question, and with it unanswered I am content to end.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] has thirty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BELMONT. I believe there is some time remaining on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirty-six minutes remain on the other side.

Mr. BELMONT. I desire to hold the floor to call the previous question, and shall not occupy the remainder of my time just now.

Mr. RICE. I have agreed to yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] has agreed to yield ten minutes to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will be recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the necessity of such legislation as is proposed by the pending Senate bill and the advantages of that bill over the substitute presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] must be apparent to the House when the situation is clearly understood.

By the treaty of 1818 American fishing vessels were accorded the liberty of fishing in certain territorial waters of the British North American provinces and were denied such liberty in other Canadian waters within 3 miles of the coast. There is no question that Canada has the right to protect such inshore fisheries as are reserved exclusively for her own fishermen by all proper measures. It is important that this fact should be kept in view, because it is the policy of Canada, seconded by some of our own citizens, I regret to say, to create the impression that we are seeking to encroach on Canadian fishing grounds. Let it be once for all understood that we do not desire to fish within Canadian jurisdiction.

There has been some dispute in the past as to whether the boundary of the inshore fisheries is a line drawn 3 miles from the coast, as we have always claimed, and as Great Britain practically conceded in 1870, or a line drawn from headland to headland so as to include great arms of the sea 20 miles or more from the shore, as Canada has claimed. At the present time, however, there is no dispute over this point.

The controversy that has arisen between this country and Canada is not over the question of fishing in Canadian waters, but whether American fishing vessels engaged in fishing in deep waters where even Canada admits they have a right to fish, and authorized by our laws to touch and trade at a foreign port, shall have the privilege of entering a Canadian port and purchasing supplies such as ice, bait, or provisions in the same manner as other vessels, and in the same manner as Canadian fishing vessels are permitted to enter the ports of the United States.

The Canadian authorities, acting under the authority of a dominion law and a proclamation issued March 5, 1886, by their minister of marine, which withdrew all commercial privileges thereafter from our fishing vessels except shelter, repairs, purchasing of wood and obtaining water, have since that time seized every American fishing vessel which has entered Canadian waters, harbors, or ports for any purpose except these four, and have enforced their laws with so much rigor and, as Secretary Manning well says, so great "brutality" as to practically deprive us of even these four conceded privileges.

The Canadians attempt to justify their course by claiming that they are enforcing another provision of the treaty of 1818, which provides that American fishing vessels might enter ports of British North America for the four purposes named and for no other.

In order to understand the force of this provision of the treaty of 1818 it should be borne in mind that at that time the policy of Great Britain was to not allow any foreign vessel to enter the ports of her colonies on the same terms as she allowed her own vessels to enter.

The same policy prevailed in the United States. Thus, in 1818 no Canadian vessel could exercise commercial privileges in the ports of the United States on the same terms as an American vessel. And on the other hand, American vessels were discriminated against in Canadian ports. The provisions of the treaty of 1818, allowing fishing vessels of the United States to enter Canadian ports on the same terms as Canadian vessels for four purposes, was a special favor granted to such vessels at that time at the request of the American commissioners, and would control to-day if there had not been since that time legislative arrangements between Great Britain and the United States which have set aside the old discriminating policy as to foreign vessels entering the ports of the two countries, and established instead the policy of maritime reciprocity.

In 1822 the United States, by an act of Congress, authorized the admission to our ports, on equal terms with our own vessels, of all vessels of any foreign country which would extend similar privileges in their ports to our own vessels, the coastwise trade alone excepted. In 1830 partially, and in 1850 wholly, Great Britain accepted this offer for herself and her colonies, and her Parliament enacted a law extending similar privileges to our vessels in her home and colonial ports without any exception but the coastwise trade.

From that time a new rule for the admission of British and Canadian vessels into our ports, and of American vessels into Canadian ports—the rule of maritime reciprocity—was inaugurated, and all prior arrangements and treaties conflicting with it were set aside under this arrangement. We have admitted, and continue to admit, Canadian fishing as well as trading vessels to the same privilges in our ports that we extend to our own vessels, on the condition that Canada shall extend the same privileges to our fishing as well as trading vessels.

The contention of Canada that the legislative arrangement was not intended to cover fishing vessels has neither the text of the reciprocal laws enacted by Great Britain and the United States nor the practical construction of the same to stand upon. These laws apply in terms to all vessels of both countries except coastwise vessels. There is no reservation of fishing vessels. The United States has from that time to the present construed it thus, and Canadian fishing vessels have sought and received in our ports the same privileges as other Canadian vessels.

The claim of Canada that a fishing vessel of the United States authorized by our laws to touch and trade is not an American vessel of a commercial character is disproved by the fact that our laws make her such. By the law of nations every nation determines for itself what requisites and documents shall entitle a vessel to be recognized as a vessel of that country in every foreign port. Every vessel documented under our laws and authorized to touch and trade at a foreign port is entitled to equal recognition everywhere.

When on the 5th of March last Canada withdrew from American fishing vessels all privileges in her ports except the four heretofore named, she withdrew the consideration on which we had given her fishing vessels full commercial privileges in our ports, and we should have been justified in immediately canceling these privileges. And this would not have been retaliation in the ordinary sense of that term, but simply an enforcement of the policy of maritime reciprocity.

But instead of at once doing what we have a right to do, our Government brought the unwarrantable acts of Canada in excluding our fishing vessels from dominion ports to the attention of Great Britain, in expectation that she would disavow them and restore to all vessels of the United States privileges which her own laws had pledged us.

For nine months Secretary Bayard and Minister Phelps have been carrying on negotiations on this point with Great Britain—negotiations ably and convincingly pressed by both our Secretary of State and minister to Great Britain, I desire to say—but without any progress. Great Britain has simply referred our notes and protests against each seizure of our vessels to the Canadian authorities, and forwarded their stereotyped reply that under the treaty of 1818 American fishing vessels authorized by our laws to touch and trade have no right to enter Canadian ports for any purpose except the four heretofore named, without up to this time deigning to say whether or not she approves of that view.

Seventy-six American fishing vessels have been detained, warned, or seized—only one of them for alleged illegal fishing—and twenty-five for simply entering a Canadian port for purposes which we freely allow Canadian fishing vessels to enter our ports. And on the 26th of November the Queen approved a supplementary act of the Dominion Parliament, which, under the guise of protecting the fisheries of Canada, authorizes any Canadian official to seize, take into port and search any American vessel which may appear in Canadian waters or harbors, without any evidence that such vessel has attempted to fish in Canadian waters or has violated Canadian laws—a law evidently designed to afford an excuse for harassing every American fishing vessel engaged in the lawful business of fishing in deep waters, whenever such vessels shall enter the Canadian jurisdiction, even for shelter, repairs, purchasing wood, and obtaining water.

American fishing vessels, authorized by the laws of the United States to touch and trade, have been refused the privilege of landing and entering at the appropriate Canadian customs-houses fish caught by such vessels in deep water, either for sale in Canada on payment of the duty provided by Canadian laws, or for transit in bond to the United States.

The object of this discrimination against American fishing vessels and the exclusion of the fish which they may catch in deep water is to injure the legitimate business of American fishermen to a sufficient extent to compel them to give up fishing altogether or to drive the Government of the United States to modify its tariff laws so as to admit Canadian fish into the markets of this country free of duty.

That such is its purpose and that such is the animus of the unwarrantable course of the Canadian authorities is so manifest that Minister Phelps (whose communication is warmly approved by Secretary Bayard) has felt warranted in using the following language in an official communication addressed to the British secretary for foreign affairs:

> It seems impossible for me to escape the conclusion that these seizures were made by the Canadian authorities for the deliberate purpose of harassing and embarrassing the American fishing vessels in the pursuit of their lawful employment. * * * The opinion appears to have gained ground in Canada that the United States may be driven, by harassing and annoying their fishermen, into the adoption of a new treaty by which Canadian fish shall be admitted free. It is not necessary to say that this scheme is likely to prove as mistaken in policy as it is indefensible in principle. * * * The United States will not be coerced by wanton injury into the making of a new treaty.

Recent semi-official dispatches from Ottawa make no secret in declaring that Canada will continue her unwarranted and unfriendly discriminations against our fishing vessels and fish caught by them until the United States shall accede to the Canadian demand for a so-called reciprocity treaty, by which they mean an arrangement that will admit Canadian fish products free of duty. In other words, she demands a free admission of Canadian fish to our markets as a price for the admission of American fishing vessels to such commercial privileges in her ports that we have granted Canadian fishing vessels.

I may add in passing—although this question is not involved in the present controversy with Canada—that when this question of the reciprocal privileges of all the vessels of the United States and Canada in the ports of each country shall be settled, I shall for one, and in my judgment this country will, be ready at any time to give a candid consideration to any propositions looking to real reciprocal trade relations with Canada. By real reciprocal trade relations I mean such as will admit the manufactured products of this country into Canada free of duty, while retaining a duty on the manufactured products of Great Britain and other countries, in return for an admission of Canadian products into our country free of duty while we retain duties as to similar articles imported from other countries. But such one-sided reciprocity as that provided by the treaty of 1854 we do not care to repeat.

The difficulty, however, in negotiating a real reciprocity treaty as to the trade relations between the United States and Canada is, that Canada is a dependency of Great Britain, and the latter power will not permit her colony to admit American manufactures on better terms than she admits English manufactures.

But I take it for granted, Mr. Speaker, that whatever view Congress may take of a reciprocity treaty with Canada, all will agree with Minister Phelps that we can not entertain the suggestion of such miscalled reciprocity as that of 1854, or indeed consent to consider the subject at all until Canada shall extend to our fishing vessels the same privileges in our ports that we extend to Canadian fishing vessels, or (if she continues to withhold these privileges from our vessels) until similar privileges are withdrawn from her vessels. Let Canada understand once for all that we do not propose to give anything more for commercial privileges for our fishing vessels in her ports than what we have been giving, namely, similar privileges for her fishing vessels in our ports. If we can not have them on these terms, we do not want them at all.

Negotiations have been going on during the past eight months between the United States and Great Britain for the settlement of the question as to whether American fishing vessels, authorized by our laws to touch and trade at a foreign port, shall be permitted to enter Canadian and Newfoundland ports on the usual terms accorded foreign commercial vessels, and as to whether fish caught by American vessels in deep waters where they have a right to fish may be entered at Canadian custom-houses on the same terms as any other merchandise entered by a foreign vessel.

But, notwithstanding this, the dispute rests where it did when the negotiations began; and the sole reason why no progress has been made in the negotiations—why no progress is likely to be made under existing conditions—is that the delay works solely to our injury, and Canada believes that if this injury to our fishing interests is continued long enough we shall concede what she wants. If at this juncture in the negotiations we shall withdraw from Canadian fishing vessels and Canadian fish in our ports and collection districts substantially the same privileges which she refuses to concede to our fishing vessels and fish, then the two countries will stand on the same basis, and Canada and Great Britain will have the same interest in reaching a speedy settlement by negotiations that we have.

The Senate bill, which passed the Senate with so entire unanimity, meets this situation exactly. It is not a bill looking to retaliation, but it is simply responsive to the policy of Canada. It authorizes the President to withdraw from Canadian vessels and Canadian products—naming fish as the article particularly intended, although all other products of the British North American possessions may also be prohibited—substantially the same privileges as are withheld from us. It simply says in effect that the privileges which we accord to Canadian fishing vessels and fish were given on condition that Canada extended the same privileges to American fishing vessels and the fish caught by such vessels. If she chooses to withdraw such privileges from our fishing vessels and fish products, we propose to withdraw the same from her fishing vessels and fish products so long, and only so long, as she continues to discriminate against us.

The so-called Belmont bill proposes to go further than this, and to authorize the President to stop communication by rail with Canada. I regard this as unnecessary and unwise. Canada has not discriminated against American locomotives and cars passing into her territory as vehicles of transportation. Why, then, should we propose to arm the President with authority to go so far as this? Is there not danger that it will defeat rather than promote the object we have in view?

The bill reported by the House committee is also objectionable in that it describes "vessels owned wholly or partially by British subjects" as subjects for exclusion, overlooking the fact that the ownership of a vessel does not determine her nationality.

There are other objections to the Belmont bill to which I called attention when the gentleman from New York explained his bill, which I will not now repeat.

The parliamentary situation is such as to make it wise to accept the Senate bill if we would make necessary legislation sure. It is now within almost one week of the close of the session, and there is grave danger that if the House should substitute a new measure for the Senate bill, all legislation would be defeated.

If, however, the House should see fit to substitute the Belmont bill for the Senate bill, I trust that that bill may be passed, in order that both bills may be placed in conference and some satisfactory measure may be agreed upon.

The Senate bill is justified by any view of the merits of the question at issue. Concede for a moment that the Canadian view that our legislative arrangement with Great Britain does not cover fishing vessels, and that American fishing vessels have no right to enter Canadian ports for any purposes except the four named in the treaty of 1818, is correct. What follows? Evidently that we have been in error in supposing that the legislative arrangement between the United States and Canada binds us to give Canadian fishing vessels the same privileges in our ports that we grant our own vessels, and therefore that we should hasten to pass this bill authorizing the President to withdraw privileges from Canadian fishing vessels which are refused to our fishing vessels and which we granted on the supposition that our fishing vessels were to receive similar treatment in Canadian ports.

On the other hand, if we are right in our assumption that the legislative arrangement with Great Britain obligates the United States to extend commercial privileges to the fishing vessels of Canada in return for similar privileges granted our fishing vessels by Canada, then it is obviously our duty to arm the President with authority to withdraw such privileges from Canadian fishing vessels when and so long as Canada declines to concede them to fishing vessels of the United States.

And on the same principle, so long as Canada singles out fish caught by fishing vessels of the United States and refuses to allow it to be landed in her ports from one of our fishing vessels authorized to touch and trade, for shipment in bond to the United States, or for any other commercial purpose, it is our duty to arm the President with authority to exclude Canadian fish from our territory. While the Senate bill gives authority to the President to exclude other than Canadian fishing vessels or fish products, yet it goes to this extent only, to arm the President with full authority in case Canada should hereafter extend the discrimination she is now making against American fishing vessels and fish to the vessels and other products of the United States.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, looks to a peaceful solution of the differences between the United States and Canada by making it for the interest of both to grant full commercial privileges to the vessels of each other. Without the passage of such a measure as this there would be grave reason to fear that serious conflicts will take place during the coming season between the dominion armed vessels and our fishermen in case of attempted seizures of our fishing vessels which had entered Canadian waters for shelter or other legitimate purposes. Gentlemen hardly appreciate the indignation which rises in the breasts of patriotic American fishermen who, having seen Canadian fishing vessels accorded every privilege in the harbors of Portland, Boothbay, Gloucester, or Boston, find their vessels seized as soon as they enter Canadian waters for the exercise of similar privileges.

But if our fishermen shall see that Canadian fishing vessels are denied the same privileges as are denied them; if they shall see that Canadian fish are denied entrance into our territory while American fishing vessels are denied the privilege of landing their fish in Canadian ports, they will be content and will willingly suffer the increased inconvenience and expense caused them by being compelled to use larger vessels and to carry more extensive supplies in order that they may be under no necessity of entering Canadian ports for supplies or discharge of part of cargo.

The Senate bill, therefore, furnishes a lawful and peaceful method of solution of the controversy with Canada—a method which can not fail to work out equitable and reasonable results, and at the same time affords just protection to that large body of American fishermen who are engaged in carrying on the sea-fisheries of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I need not remind the House and the country of the obligations which the nation owes to the 100,000 hardy men who sail the 6,000 vessels of the United States engaged in the sea and lake fisheries. A large proportion of these men pursue their hazardous calling amid dangers such as are faced by no other class of our citizens, and are entitled to most favorable consideration for maintaining an industry whose annual products are valued at $45,000,000.

But the men who carry on the sea and lake fisheries of every maritime nation have always been regarded as worthy of the special fostering care of the government, because it is to such men, trained to maritime pursuits, that the nation must look to man her cruisers in time of war.

The sea and lake fisheries are in all maritime countries the nurseries of seamen. It was our fishermen who manned the armed vessels with which Paul Jones did such good service for the patriot cause in the war of Independence. It was our hardy fishermen who sailed and manned the Constitution and other naval vessels of the United States, which performed such splendid service for the American cause in the war of 1812. It is to our men engaged in the lake and sea fisheries that we must look in the future to man the Navy which we hope and expect to have when American honor and American interests shall require defense on the ocean. Regard for our commercial independence and national safety, as well as a sense of justice to the hardy men who are carrying on our sea and lake fisheries, demand that not only now, but hereafter, we shall see to it that these fishery interests are protected and fostered.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the general merits of the fishery question and the wrongs to which our fishing vessels have been subjected have been detailed to the House fully in this debate. We are all on both sides of the House agreed on that subject; and all who have listened to the speeches to-day are informed of the long series of vexations and wrongs to which our fishermen and fishing vessels have been subjected by harassing Canadian officials. We know the necessity for action by the Executive for their relief and the urgency with which the hearty support of Congress seems to be required in backing up the President and clothing him with adequate power.

The question immediately before us is as to our choice between the methods proposed by these two bills, that which has passed the Senate and awaits our concurring action and that proposed by the House committee. Passing the Senate the Senate bill makes it law without delay. Substituting the House bill is beginning a new and separate measure. The first thing to be remembered now, when the session of Congress is almost over, is the necessity for prompt action. The voice of the nation, if it is uttered promptly, clearly, and unanimously, as the united voice of both Houses of Congress in support of the President, will have tenfold force. We can utter such a voice now by a vote given to enact into law this afternoon a measure (needing only the approval of the President to make it law) clothing our Executive with power which I believe are wide, ample, complete, and which will so impress public opinion across the Atlantic and in Canada that the exercise of those powers will probably not be required.

We have very little time in which to act. If a new and separate measure be adopted now, to go from here to the Senate for consideration, and then upon disagreement, which is morally certain, to go to a conference committee, it will endanger everything. And this new measure called the Belmont bill, what is it? It is in fact the Senate bill rewritten, the words turned around, the phrases changed about, and then the railway car prohibition clause added. That provision for arresting the entrance of cars and locomotives across the line from Canada is the very thing which was proposed in the Senate and which the Senate rejected; and we have here a document from the Executive, signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, notifying us of that fact.

The Senate measure is strong and efficient; it confers full powers on the President to retaliate for the ill-treatment of our fishing vessels by excluding all Canadian vessels, all their fish, and all their productions, if he chooses in his discretion to do so. When it passed the Senate, no party voice was heard, but all were Americans. And we, in acting upon that measure, are asked now to substitute for it a new bill containing a provision which was rejected in the Senate by an overwhelming vote, and which, if adopted here, is certain to cause delay and to endanger all action.

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has said—and in saying it he voices the thought of all gentlemen around me—that we are willing in this great question to trust the President. What I would rejoice to see now would be a unanimous vote for the Senate bill in this House such as there was in the Senate, so that this afternoon the British minister might cable to his government, "The Americans are all as one on the fishery question." There is no more time to waste and much has been wasted. It is a month to-morrow since the Senate passed this bill. It was there thoroughly considered. The committee which reported it had investigated the question through all last summer, their report making a volume. The measure is most carefully framed. It has been subjected here and there to the most searching criticism. All these weeks have passed, and we are upon the eve of final adjournment. Is this a time to commence putting on amendments which we know in advance are objectionable to almost the whole membership of the co-ordinate body?

Congress has proved heretofore, early last year, that it was disposed to support and strengthen the Executive. It then showed how the heart of the nation beat on this question. We passed an act last summer providing that where privileges were denied by any nation to our ships in its ports, the President should be authorized to deny like privileges in our ports to the vessels of that nation. That perhaps was not a very strenuous law; but not a thing has been done during all these nine months in respect to the exercise of the power then conferred. Are we to make up by stronger legislative declaration for the inaction of the Executive? Well, if it is necessary, let us give our aid, and we will be the more effective if all parties are united. I hope that whatever we do——

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Under the power conferred by the act just referred to, was not something done with regard to our treaty with Spain?

Mr. HITT. Nothing. I will answer the reference contained or implied in the gentleman's question. Under the provisions of a law far older than that, our Government did, since the passage of the law to which I have just referred, respond to the unfavorable action of the Spanish authorities in a case in some degree similar to that contemplated in this Senate bill, by notice of a retaliation in kind, and brought that government to our terms within fourteen days.

I heartily wish success to the Executive in this matter. It is a question surrounded with difficulty. Great men have wrestled with it for over fifty years; and how often they thought they had settled it. Yet its whole history since the war of 1812 has been an almost unbroken series of reverses or disastrous, costly, fruitless arrangements. The present Secretary of State was hardly warm in his seat before he entered into that remarkable correspondence concerning the fisheries with the British minister which, at the end of eight notes, was turned practically into a protocol, the whole correspondence arranging for a continuance of inshore fishing privileges to our fishermen temporarily, and for a reciprocity treaty in prospect, and a new commission to pass upon the value of the fisheries and similar questions. In this correspondence, which closed with a declaration from our Secretary of State that the correspondence itself embodied the agreement, and I may say it was in the nature of a preliminary to a treaty, Mr. West had skillfully inserted this language:

> And the acceptance of such a modus vivendi does not, by any implication, affect the value of the inshore fisheries by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland.

And in another place before this he had even stated:

> The Government of Newfoundland do not make refunding of duties a condition of their acceptance of the proposed agreement, but they rely on it, having due consideration before the international commission which may be appointed.

They did not propose to claim less than of old for the value of the inshore fisheries and even expected to claim repayment for the tariff duties paid on Canadian fish during the interval. That would have been an interesting commission! To have met to consider the value of the inshore fisheries which are practically worth nothing and not desired at any price by our fishermen, with the old $5,500,000 estimate of the value of the inshore fisheries staring them in the face—a sum we had to pay after that unlucky negotiation which resulted in the Halifax commission, besides $4,000,000 more of remitted duties, and all this nine millions paid for the fish caught by us in the inshore fisheries, when the whole of the mackerel caught within the 3-mile limit in twelve years sold in the United States for but $778,582. Is it any wonder that the country was amazed when this correspondence was published, and shrank from any new commission or reciprocity like that? The words have unwelcome associations.

And let me not speak of "reciprocity" without expressing a hearty hope that we shall yet have reciprocity complete with our northern neighbors—no one-sided game—as it was the last time when we made a treaty in 1854, in which we were so thoroughly outwitted, that under it we gave to the Canadians a market for $229,000,000 worth of their products, to come in without paying duty during the time that reciprocity treaty was in force, while under it they gave us a market free of duty for scarce more than half as much. So ingeniously was it framed at our expense that it admitted free of duty 94 per cent. of all Canada had to sell to us and left 42 per cent. of all we sold to Canada still burdened by their tariff. In spite of kindly feeling for neighbors and desire to see enlarging commerce we soon had enough of such costly reciprocity and terminated the treaty.

Of a far different stamp is that wider, fairer reciprocity contemplated in the bill introduced a day or two ago by my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], which would abolish all duties on the Canadian border, make a common tariff and customs union, sweep away all custom-houses across the whole continent, dispense with the whole consular service in Canada, and remove all custom-house lines to follow the lines of the ocean. I would gladly see that done. But it will not be a reciprocity like the last, which denied to our manufactures the market of Canada and gave to Canadian agriculture the vast market for their products which our splendid manufacturing system and populous centers had slowly built up.

The Secretary of State has pursued with his best abilities all the turns of this question of fishery rights and fishermen's wrongs, and I have no remarks to make or reflections to cast upon our minister at London in this matter, but as yet there has been no success. It is pending; our fishermen are being harassed and the Canadians vex them at their ease. It is time to respond by retaliation in kind. I think we should cheerfully go forward on all sides in the House since the Senate has the example shown us in this Senate measure unanimously passed there, which grants, I think, great, ample, and adequate powers.

The criticism on the phrase "most favored nation," used by the Senate, I have not heard answered, as I understand it. The most favored nation clause may mean two different things, depending upon how it is used and to what it refers. Where it is used in a treaty between two nations, declaring that each is entitled to the privileges of the most favored nation, it means all privileges granted gratuitously to any other nation; it does not include any favor which another nation enjoys which is bought and paid for specifically by a compensation stated. That is never included in the most favored nation clause in a treaty with another government. Only those general rights or favors accorded among nations gratuitously are contemplated in the phrase "favored nation" in this bill, where it is conveniently used as a brief form of description of what our fishing vessels are justly entitled to when they come in from the deep-sea fisheries, which are open to all the world, and belong to us with the rest, We find the phrase used in this sense in most of the treaties which we now make with foreign nations. Those treaties granting no special favor and receiving none, contain the general favored-nation clause, but it never touches any of that class for which there is compensation. As, for example, in our treaty with Hawaii, we secure certain advantages and in return admit their sugar free. This does not grant remission of the duty on sugar to other nations with which we have treaties containing the most favored-nation clause. The Secretary of the Treasury seems, in his letter on this bill, to be wholly unaware of this distinction.

Now, this clause in the House bill providing for stopping locomotives and cars from coming from Canada has a specific though hidden purpose which has not been brought out plainly until a few moments ago the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] disclosed it and the way it was to work to set at naught a treaty. Under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871 with Great Britain goods in transit have a right to go either way, through the United States to Canada from our seaports, or through Canada to the United States from their seaports, and the reverse. No man will propose here a law which squarely defies that treaty and violates national faith. The Senate had no such thought in the bill it passed. Goods in transit are allowed to go through by the treaty, and the only way it can be done away with is to give two years' notice for its termination; or, if one or the other party violates it, then, under universally accepted international law, it is at an end. One party to it can not be held to grant the privilege or right when the other denies it. That may happen any day, and no law of Congress is then necessary to end it. It expires when violated. You can not reach it by law.

But it is intended here to reach it by an adroit phrase including cars and locomotives among things that may be stopped, though they are loaded with goods in transit which you admit the man has the right by treaty to take in transit through our country. You stop the cars, and then say to him, "Go on with your goods in transit; your treaty right is unquestioned; put your goods under your arm, and take them to New York and ship them; but the car which carries them can not go any farther!" Now, if such a proposition as that were presented by some crafty, savage chief in making one of the so-called treaties which we are in the habit of signing with them—by some cunning Crazy Horse or pensive Sitting Bull—we would laugh at the shallow fox. Yet it is deliberately proposed here to the American Congress in order to evade and set at naught, not to violate squarely, a treaty which we all admit to-day is in force.

The Senate bill is framed in view of the obligations of that treaty, and carefully avoids its violation. When an attempt was made there to include such a proposition as this it was promptly and overwhelmingly voted down. Shall we, at the moment that we are charging our adversary with disregarding and perverting the treaty of 1818, subject ourselves to a still graver charge—disregarding a treaty not by some petty official's insolence but by a solemn act of Congress? I fear this construction may be put on the words of this House bill, but if it passes I am comforted in the belief that the President will never use it for any act that will touch the honor of the country.

The Senate bill is one which attempts to do a thing in the very best way in which the experience of nations shows it ought to be done. It is an answer to an injury by responsive action and retaliates in kind. In the language of the books it is called retorsion. That is the first means of pacific redress usually resorted in disputes of this kind between nations. It is ordinarily successful between civilized Christian nations; or it is followed by other retaliation, reprisal, non-intercourse, seizure of enemy's goods, display of force, and then war.

The Senate proposes this retorsion for denial to our fishermen and fishing vessels of their rights. It says, "As you will not cease to annoy our ships by petty vexations in your harbors, we will not let your ships enter our harbors at all." The Canadians resort to harassing legislation and insult and vex our fishermen in order to constrain us to change our laws so as to grant again the free admission of their fish to our market without paying duty, and we answer by saying, "Instead of changing our laws, you can not bring fish in at all." We do not propose to compete with them in acts of petty annoyance, but keep them out, vessels, fish, and, if necessary, all other goods.

This is the method of pacific redress that is ordinarily adopted in such disputes, and ordinarily brings about adjustment. There is a veteran who now sits before me [Governor CURTIN] familiar with scores of similar instances in diplomatic history, and I am sure he will unite with me in saying that this is always the first step taken by wise statesmen.

Mr. CURTIN. That is true.

Mr. LONG. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. If it were the purpose to defeat all legislation on this subject at this time, by indirect methods, can you think of any better way of doing it at this stage of the session than to adopt the substitute proposed by the House committee?

Mr. HITT. I do not now think of any that would more certainly accomplish that end, because this proposed House bill has in it the only proposition in the world on this subject which we know the Senate has refused to accept; and hence the adoption of the House bill with the railcar prohibition clause would again bring before the Senate the very feature to which it objected and refused its assent.

Mr. Speaker, it is not likely that the giving of this power, and the power is enormous in both bills, will result in war or even in any great disturbance in our affairs. I hope it will result in a speedy adjustment of the questions at issue. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. COX] asked a question just now that brings up an analogous case very recently occurring which shows how quickly questions of this kind can be settled.

The Spanish Government by harsh, and we thought unwarranted, construction of the Foster convention, placed our goods of a certain kind in the fourth or higher-dutied column of the Cuban tariff instead of the third or lower-dutied column; just as the Canadians put a very harsh, unwarranted construction of the treaty of 1818 against our fishermen. We urged that it was wrong and unjust, but without avail; and the President thereupon, acting upon an old act of Congress, by proclamation on the 14th of last October, authorized and directed the imposition of a discriminating duty of 10 per cent. on their goods coming here, this to take effect in fifteen days. But before that time the Spanish Government yielded on the 28th of October, and the President rescinded his proclamation. I would be glad to see and hope to see similar results from this day's legislation, and that the President, using the authority we confer upon him, wisely and firmly will protect our fishermen, obtain a permanent settlement of this long troubled question, and secure the peace of two great nations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a resolution to print the usual number of copies of the compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the construction of bridges; in which concurrence was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriation for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; in which amendments concurrence was requested.

CANADIAN NON-INTERCOURSE.

Mr. BELMONT. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the bill reported by a majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, and am gratified that this debate has indicated to-day that all are in favor of some action upon the subject under consideration. The only question for us to determine is as to what action is proper at this time. But I must at the outstart differ with my friends from Illinois and Massachusetts when they say they know of no step which could be taken so much calculated to thwart legislation on this great question as to adopt the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House as a substitute for the Senate bill. This House is in earnest in desiring legislation on the subject, and we have a right to assume that the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol, from their almost unanimous vote, are also in earnest.

If we pass the bill reported here to-day and it is rejected by the Senate it will send the whole matter to a committee of conference, and proper legislation could be arrived at. But I hope, sir, that we will have no trouble on this point. I believe when the Senators at the other end of the Capitol come to examine and compare the two bills they will confess that the House bill is the better, all things considered.

The Senate bill is not explicit enough because it requires the President to be satisfied that our fishing vessels and fishermen have been denied the privileges accorded the trading vessels of "the most favored nation," yet we have no treaty with Great Britain containing a favored-nation clause. We are claiming for our vessels commercial and trading privileges, which are ordinarily accorded by one civilized nation to another, and such as we have conceded for many years in American ports to Canadian and British vessels.

The majority of the committee think the Senate bill defective also in other important respects. "It empowers the President to deny entry into any port or place in the United States 'of fresh fish or salt fish, or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States.' The question arises, therefore, if the merchandise whose entrance by land into the United States is to be prohibited is merely that which is the product of Canada, how could such a provision be enforced? The fact that a Canadian car contained merchandise would be no evidence that the merchandise was of the prohibited kind, for under our treaty foreign merchandise is entered in Canadian ports for land transit to the United States. Canadian products might be mixed in Canadian cars with foreign merchandise. Every car would have to be examined and wholly unloaded as soon as it reached the border of the United States, and even then it would not be difficult to evade the law."

Strong legislation is the wisest and most prudent legislation. The time has arrived when we ought to be in earnest, and our legislation should be such as to prove to Canada, to Great Britain, and the world that we are in earnest. Forty-eight American vessels have been seized, detained, or warned off from Canadian ports during the last year, while many other United States vessels have been involved one way and another in our fisheries controversy with the Canadian authorities. The statement of our minster to England, Mr. Phelps, shows that the seizure and detention of certain vessels of our citizens was not only unfriendly and discourteous but unwarranted. I present one case. He says of the seizure of the David J. Adams:

The seizure was much aggravated by the manner in which it was carried into effect. It appears that four several visitations and searches of the vessel were made by boats from the Canadian steamer Lansdowne, in Annapolis Basin, Nova Scotia. The Adams was finally taken into custody and carried out of the Province of Nova Scotia, across the Bay of Fundy, and into the port of Saint John, New Brunswick, and, without explanation or hearing, on the following Monday, May 10, taken back by an armed crew to Digby, Nova Scotia. That, in Digby, the paper alleged to be the legal precept for the capture and detention of the vessel was nailed to her mast in such manner as to prevent its contents being read, and the request of the captain of the David J. Adams and of the United States consul-general to be allowed to detach the writ from the mast for the purpose of learning its contents was positively refused by the provincial official in charge. Nor was the United States consul-general able to learn from the commander of the Lansdowne the nature of the complaint against the vessel, and his respectful application to that effect was fruitless.

Every case in which vessels were seized by the Canadian authorities was in violation of the spirit of the treaty of 1818. Every one was in violation of that comity, hospitality, and good feeling which the civilization of this age requires between neighboring nations. When two countries adjoining each other, with their people living as close neighbors, are left to provide for their mutual interests by legislation, it is very clear that if the Dominion of Canada, supported by the Government of Great Britain, shall legislate in hostility to our trade and in hostility to the interests of our citizens, it becomes not only our duty but our only alternative to legislate in hostility to theirs, and retaliate for their bad conduct.

Mr. Phelps, our minister to England, in his letter to Lord Rosebury, dated June 2, 1886, speaks like an American ought to speak on an important subject. He said:

It seems to me impossible to escape the conclusion that this and other similar seizures were made by the Canadian authorities for the deliberate purpose of harassing and embarrassing the American fishing vessels in the pursuit of their lawful employment. And the injury, which would have been a serious one if committed under a mistake, is very much aggravated by the motives which appear to have prompted it.

I am instructed by my Government earnestly to protest against these proceedings as wholly unwarranted by the treaty of 1818, and altogether inconsistent with the friendly relations hitherto existing between the United States and Her Majesty's Government; to request that the David J. Adams, and the other American fishing vessels now under seizure in Canadian ports, be immediately released, and that proper orders may be issued to prevent similar proceedings in the future. And I am also instructed to inform you that the United States will hold Her Majesty's Government responsible for all losses which may be sustained by American citizens in the dispossession of their property growing out of the search, seizure, detention, or sale of their vessels lawfully within the territorial waters of British North America.

The real source of the difficulty that has arisen is well understood. It is to be found in the irritation that has taken place among a portion of the Canadian people on account of the termination by the United States Government of the treaty of Washington on the 1st of July last, whereby fish imported from Canada into the United States, and which so long as that treaty remained in force was admitted free, is now liable to the import duty provided by the general revenue laws, and the opinion appears to have gained ground in Canada that the United States may be driven, by harassing and annoying their fishermen, into the adoption of a new treaty by which Canadian fish shall be admitted free.

The letter of Mr. Phelps is clear, forcible, and, to my mind, a full and satisfactory statement of the case. After reading it I do not see how any citizen of the United States can doubt the necessity for immediate and prompt action by the United States Government.

The bill reported by the majority of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs I think meets the demands of the times. It contains three distinct propositions, and the President is authorized to enforce either or all of them in his discretion. The first declares that whenever the President shall be satisfied that vessels of the United States are denied in ports or territorial waters of the British dominions in North America rights to which such vessels are entitled by treaty or by law of nations, or are denied the comity of treatment or the reasonable privilege usually accorded between neighboring and friendly nations, he may in his discretion, by proclamation, prohibit from entering the ports of the United States or from exercising such privileges therein as he may in his discretion by such proclamation define vessels owned wholly or in part by a subject of Her Britannic Majesty, and coming or arriving from any port or place in the Dominion of Canada, or in the island of Newfoundland, whether directly or having touched at any other port, excepting such vessels shall be in distress of navigation and of needed repairs or supplies therefor.

The second authorizes the President to forbid the entrance or importation, either by land or water, into the United States of any goods, wares, or merchandise from the aforesaid Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland, or any locomotive, car, or other vehicle with any goods that may be therein contained from the Dominion of Canada.

The third authorizes the President, upon proof that the privileges secured by Article XXIX of the treaty concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 8th of March, 1871, are denied as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving at the ports of British North America by proclamation to forbid the exercise of the like privileges as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving in any of the ports of the United States.

A penalty is provided in the bill, so that if any person in charge of any vessel excluded from ports of the United States shall do, in the ports, harbors, or waters of the United States, for or on account of such vessel, any act forbidden by the proclamation of the President, such vessel shall be liable to forfeiture to the United States; and any goods, wares, or merchandise, and any car, locomotive, or other vehicle coming into the United States in violation of the President's proclamation shall be seized and forfeited to the United States.

The bill is not a war measure, but a peace measure. It takes the fisheries controversy from local disturbances and resentments and places it on broad and comprehensive ground. It is an announcement to our people and to the people of Great Britain that the Government of the United States proposes to maintain its dignity and protect the rights of its citizens. The provisions of the bill are in no respect rash, but they are well considered; not harsh, but conservative, everything considered. The President will exercise the power confided to him intelligently, carefully, conservatively, courageously. There can be no doubt that the President has a proper appreciation of the honor and dignity of the great Republic over which he presides, and the power put into his hands will be used for the protection of American dignity and American rights.

It is by no means certain that he will be required to issue a proclamation of non-intercourse, or a proclamation of even partial suspension of commercial relations with Canada, or any other port of Great Britain. When the bill under consideration is enacted into a law I hope and believe the usual wisdom and good sense of Canadians and English will again be manifested, and all difficulties will be arranged without resort to anything that will break up the cordial relations which have so long existed between the United States and Great Britain. If the bill becomes a law the President will be supported in his efforts to exercise the authority granted in the bill by all the people of the United States, and while I believe no trouble will occur, yet if a serious issue is made by Great Britain with the United States, it will be found that there are no sectional lines, but in the South and in the North the men once arrayed in battle against each other will now stand shoulder to shoulder in solid phalanx to defend the rights of our people and maintain the glory and honor of our country.

Mr. BELMONT. I now yield eight minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of this question I do not propose to follow the example of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE], whose line of argument, if not the intent, was calculated to array party feeling. The subject of which we are treating is one of international importance, and while it may more immediately affect the constituents of my friend it is not circumscribed in its operation. It concerns the whole American people, whom I would have appreciate that this administration in its dealings with foreign powers will assert and maintain the principle enunciated by Lord Palmerston, who, in the case of Don Pacifico, asserted that a British subject "in whatever land he may be may feel with confidence that the watchful eye and strong arm of England will protect him against wrong and injustice."

The question of the Canadian fisheries formed a vital element of the Revolutionary war itself. Their commercial and naval importance entered into the contest between England and France for over a hundred years in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Nova Scotia, after various vicissitudes of fortune, after the seven years' war, was transferred into the possession of Great Britain, and about the same time Canada passed from the hands of the French and the Gaul acknowledged the ascendency of the Briton in the New World. The contention between Great Britain and the United States in regard to these fisheries has been a recurring theme of controversy for over three-quarters of a century. As subjects of Great Britain, the colonists enjoyed all the liberties of fishing in these waters which were accorded to any other British subjects. After the Revolutionary war, when the independence of the colonies was recognized, in the preliminary treaty of 1782 the agreement in regard to two subjects was held to be final. One of these was the ascertainment of the territorial limits of the United States, the other a right to the fisheries which are now in dispute.

In the final and definite treaty of 1783 it was provided and fully understood that the privilege we had enjoyed as British subjects, in these waters, should be continued to the people of the United States, as is clearly manifested by the third article of this treaty, which is as follows:

It is agreed that the people of the United States shall continue to enjoy unmolested the right to take fish of every kind on the Grand Bank, and on all the other banks of Newfoundland; also in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, and at all other places in the sea where the inhabitants of both countries used at any time heretofore to fish; and also that the inhabitants of the United States shall have liberty to take fish of every kind on such part of the coast of Newfoundland as British fishermen shall use (but not to dry or cure the same on that island); and also on the coasts, bays, and creeks of all other of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America; and that the American fishermen shall have the liberty to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, or creeks of Nova Scotia, Magdalen Islands, and Labrador, so long as the same shall remain unsettled; but so soon as the same or either of them shall be settled it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such settlement without a previous agreement for that purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

The same section was embodied in the final treaty of 1783. The American citizens continued to enjoy all the rights herein accorded until after the second war with Great Britain. This war was followed by the treaty of peace at Ghent in 1814, when British negotiators claimed that the war of 1812, just terminated, had put an end to all existing treaties; that our treaty rights about these fisheries had expired, and if revived, must be by new stipulations. They might have as well contended that our independence was surrendered by this war as that new stipulations were required to keep alive our fishery rights. This treaty recognized three facts as fully established, to-wit: The independence of the colonies, the territorial boundaries of the States, and the rights of the United States in the common fisheries of the colonial waters which were enjoyed and exercised by English subjects.

The effect of the negotiations which led to the treaty of Ghent did not deprive us of our right to these fisheries. The war itself had been indecisive, virtually determining nothing. It might be denominated a drawn battle between these two nations. Unfortunately for the United States, the result of the battle at New Orleans had not been made known, or more favorable terms might have been secured. In the month of October, 1818, a treaty was concluded at London by which some of the most important provisions in regard to the fisheries which were embodied in the act of 1782 were surrendered. By the provisions of the first article of this treaty of 1818 the right to take fish on the coasts of New Foundland and Labrador was limited to certain coasts. The right to dry and cure fish was granted on limited portions of this coast. And for this privilege of drying and curing fish, as stated, this Government "renounced forever any liberty theretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants to take, dry, or cure fish on or within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the limits so described."

The difficulty of determining the limits agreed upon, the presence of armed vessels to prevent its violation, the vexatious seizure of American vessels, and the injustice of the British local courts in their condemnations, exasperated both parties and threatened to bring the two governments into actual collision. This led up to the reciprocity treaty of 1854, which was subject to be, and was, terminated in 1866, and embraced certain new stipulations revived from the treaty of 1818. The first article of the treaty of 1818 has been the cause of unnumbered international controversies and disputes, and which, after reciting other matters agreed upon, proceeds as follows:

Provided, however, That the American fishermen shall be permitted to enter such bays or harbors (1) for the purpose of shelter and (2) of repairing damages therein; (3) of purchasing wood and (4) of obtaining water, and for no other purpose. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them.

Upon the construction proper to be placed upon the meaning and interpretation of the clause of the treaty in italics hinges the whole contention between the United States and Great Britain, as will be seen from the letter of the American minister, Mr. Phelps, to Lord Salisbury, of the 2d of June, 1886. The letter is as follows:

* * * * * * *

Recurring, then, to the only real question in the case, whether the vessel is to be forfeited for purchasing bait of an inhabitant of Nova Scotia, to be used in lawful fishing, it may be readily admitted that if the language of the treaty of 1818 is to be interpreted literally, rather than according to its spirit and plain intent, a vessel engaged in fishing would be prohibited from entering a Canadian port "for any purpose whatever" except to obtain wood or water, to repair damages, or to seek shelter. Whether it would be liable to the extreme penalty of confiscation for a breach of this prohibition in a trifling and harmless instance might be quite another question.

Such a literal construction is best refuted by considering its preposterous consequences. If a vessel enters a port to post a letter or send a telegram or buy a newspaper, to obtain a physician in case of illness or a surgeon in case of accident, to land or bring off a passenger, or even to lend assistance to the inhabitants in fire, flood, or pestilence, it would, upon this construction, be held to violate the treaty stipulations maintained between two enlightened maritime and most friendly nations, whose ports are freely open to each other in all other places and under all other circumstances.

If a vessel is not engaged in fishing she may enter all ports; but if employed in fishing, not denied to be lawful, she is excluded, though on the most innocent errand. She may buy water, but not food or medicine; wood, but not coal. She may repair rigging, but not purchase a new rope, though the inhabitants are desirous to sell it. If she even entered the port (having no other business) to report herself to the custom-house, as the vessel in question is now seized for not doing, she would be equally within the interdiction of the treaty. If it be said these are extreme instances of violation of the treaty not likely to be insisted on, I reply that no one of them is more extreme than the one relied upon in this case.

I am persuaded that your lordship will, upon reflection, concur with me that an intention so narrow, and in its result so unreasonable and so unfair, is not to be attributed to the high contracting parties who entered into this treaty.

It seems to me clear that the treaty must be construed in accordance with those ordinary and well-settled rules applicable to all written instruments, which without such salutary assistance must constantly fail of their purpose. By these rules the letter often gives way to the intent, or rather is only used to ascertain the intent.

The whole document will be taken together, and will be considered in connection with the attendant circumstances, the situation of the parties, and the object in view, and thus the literal meaning of an isolated clause is often shown not to be the meaning really understood or intended.

Upon these principles of construction the meaning of the clause in question does not seem doubtful. It is a treaty of friendship and not of hostility. Its object was to define and protect the relative rights of the people of the two countries in these fisheries, not to establish a system of non-intercourse or the means of mutual and unnecessary annoyance. It should be judged in view of the general rules of international comity and of maritime intercourse and usage, and its restrictions considered in the light of the purposes they were designed to serve.

Thus regarded it appears to me clear that the words "for no other purpose whatever," as employed in the treaty, mean no other purposes inconsistent with the provisions of the treaty, or prejudicial to the interests of the provinces or their inhabitants, and were not intended to prevent the entry of American fishing vessels into Canadian ports for innocent and mutually beneficial purposes, or unnecessarily to restrict the free and friendly intercourse customary between all civilized maritime nations, and especially between the United States and Great Britain. Such, I can not but believe, is the construction that would be placed upon this treaty by any enlightened court of justice.

And here follows the reply of Mr. Thompson, minister of justice of Canada, duly indorsed by Minister West:

* * * * * * *

But even at this barrier the difficulty in following Mr. Phelps's argument, by which he seeks to reach the interpretation he desires, does not end. After taking a view of the treaty which all authorities thus forbid, he says: "Thus regarded it appears to me clear that the words 'for no other purpose whatever,' as employed in the treaty, mean for no other purpose inconsistent with the provisions of the treaty."

Taken in that sense the words would leave no meaning, for no other purpose would be consistent with the treaty excepting those mentioned. He proceeds "or prejudicial to the interests of the provinces or their inhabitants." If the United States authorities are the judges as to what is prejudicial to those interests, the treaty will have very little value; if the provinces are to be the judges, it is most prejudicial to their interests that United States' fishermen should be permitted to come into their harbors on any pretext, and it is fatal to their fishery interests that these fishermen, with whom they have to compete at such a disadvantage in the markets of the United States, should be allowed to enter for supplies and bait, even for the pursuit of the deep-sea fisheries.

Thus it will be seen the whole controversy is embraced in a nutshell, and with such differences of opinion it is hardly possible that a satisfactory conclusion can be reached through mere construction. The first article of the treaty of 1818 does not attempt to abridge or interfere with our rights to open-sea fishing on the banks or in the Gulf. These concessions were confirmed in the recognition of the independence of the thirteen States. It is not my purpose, however, to do more than merely outline the historical character of this controversy at this time. The animus of the whole matter is contained in the closing words of the paragraph taken from the letter of the British minister. He says:

* * * with whom they (the Canadians) have to compete at such a disadvantage in the markets of the United States.

Free fish in American markets is what they desire, and I have no objection to this concession, provided they obtain the right to enter our markets by a fair and reciprocal treaty. But we can not permit such outrages as were perpetrated on our flag and on our fishermen by these people to force from us negotiations and reciprocal treaties. Neither patriotism nor human forbearance should permit it. I admire in some things the English people. Their statesmen are able, their soldiers brave, their scholars learned, and their government the freest next to our own, they are likewise aggressive, domineering, and grasping. In every treaty they have made with us since 1818 they have secured very great advantages. Of all these treaties, the one of 1878 was the greatest outrage, if not fraud, ever perpetrated upon the American people. For twelve years' use of the inshore British fisheries, which we claimed by treaty were already ours, we paid $5,500,000 and remitted duties to the amount of $350,000 per annum, making $4,200,000 in the twelve years; a grand total of $9,700,000 extracted from the people for New England interests through British rapacity.

Pray what was this treaty worth to our people? Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, has so well summarized the argument against this award in his dispatch of the 27th of September, 1878, I can not do better than introduce it at this time. Among other things, he said: "By these actual and careful statistics, it has been found that from the inshore fishing American fishermen in the five seasons secured 125,961 barrels of mackerel, worth, when packed and ready for exportation, $3.75 per barrel, and in the aggregate $472,353." This was the gross value from which was to be deducted the cost of labor and barrels, leaving a net profit of $25,000 per annum, which in twelve years would be $300,000.

This treaty expired in the midst of the fishing season of last year, when our fishermen, with their vessels, were in Canadian waters. To prevent embarrassment and needless complications, the Secretary of State wisely and judiciously agreed with the British minister to a temporary arrangement for the relief of all parties. For this he was soundly berated and misrepresented by Republican speakers and writers, for what they declared was his truckling towards and sympathies with England, and a few impracticable New England Democrats joined the hue and cry. In the end the correspondence between this Government and Great Britain was called for; then it appeared American rights had been fully vindicated, and the American diplomacy and statesmanship there shown won the approbation of the whole nation.

All parties now vie in doing honor to the wise, conservative, and judicious course of the present Administration. Not only this, but it is proposed not only to sustain the President in his foreign policy, but clothe him with unusual and extraordinary power, the power indeed of precipitating a war, with one of the greatest powers of the world. While I may hesitate to place in the hands of any one man such extraordinary power even in the present emergency, still I consent with less reluctance from my high appreciation of the wisdom, ability, and great discretion of the President. We seek no war with any nation, whether prepared for it or otherwise. Still we will insist that all the rights of even the humblest citizen of this great Government shall be maintained and respected, wherever he may be. A decided and fearless policy, upheld without hectoring or boasting, is the only means of maintaining our rights and promoting permanent peace.

Let us see how far the committee and the minority may concur in regard to the matters now before the House. It is agreed that the recent seizure of American vessels in Canadian waters has been aggravating and unwarranted. It is agreed that the treatment of our fishermen has been offensive and irritating; it is agreed that the hauling down our flag upon the Adams was insulting, for which no sufficient apology has been made; it is agreed that the recent legislation of the Dominion of Canada and its approval by Great Britain was not moved by a friendly spirit—especially when a proposition made by us for the adjustment of our differences was then in the hands of Great Britain.

It is agreed that the course of Great Britain calls for prompt and decisive action on the part of this Government. The difference between the committee and the minority is really very slight. We are aiming at the same object, namely: To declare in unmistakable terms our course in this contention. The minority insist that the Senate bill contains everything requisite to accomplish our purpose. Is that so? The discussion on this floor shows there is a difference on the other side of the House as to the very meaning of the language employed. Take, for example, the following clause from the Senate bill:

> And also to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United Stases.

What is the meaning of the expression, "or any other product of said dominions?"

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] says it relates to fish, in which others concur; while still others insist it means all that is contained in the House bill. What is the section in the House bill? It reads as follows:

> And he may also forbid the entrance or importation, either by land or water, into the United States, of any goods, wares, or merchandise from the aforesaid Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland, or any locomotive, car, or other vehicle, with any goods that may be therein contained, from the Dominion of Canada, and upon proof that the privileges secured by article 29 of the treaty concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 8th day of May, 1871, are denied as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving at the ports of British North America, the President may also, by proclamation, forbid the exercise of the like privileges as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving in any of the ports of the United States.

A glance at these paragraphs will show which is most clear and specific. The friends of the administration have a right to insist that when such unusual power and responsibility is imposed on it that nothing shall be left to implication, nothing to mere construction.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] insists that the authority to stop cars in transit, given in the House bill, is a violation of the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871 between the United States and Great Britain, known as the most-favored nation clause; and he insists that treaty obligations should be religiously respected, &c. I agree with him most fully as to the inviolability of treaties, and must confess my surprise that one usually so accurate should have failed to examine with more care the bill of the committee. When does this bill say this power is to be exercised? "Upon proof that the privileges secured by" this article are denied "as to goods, wares, and merchandise arriving at the ports of North America." The power is not to be exercised until the Canadian authorities violate this treaty, and surely the gentleman would not have us observe a pact ignored by the other contracting party.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] inquired of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] if he knew of any more indirect method of defeating the proposed measure than by adopting the House bill. The gentleman from Illinois responded that he did not. What is the intent of this insinuation? Does not the gentleman—an experienced legislator—know that every bill about which the two Houses may differ and which may be sent to a conference committee is obnoxious to a like criticism? Unquestionably so. We were discussing for a whole day during this session the Chinese indemnity questions. The Senate bill was before the House, and its adoption urged on precisely the same grounds urged here to-day. The House bill was preferred by this body, and when sent to the Senate it was accepted without even a reference to a committee. Such may be the course in this case should we prefer the House bill to that of the Senate, for the latter is far less clear and specific as to the very object we are seeking to secure.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. What is the evidence that the Dominion of Canada or the Government of Great Britain has violated this treaty?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. It is not insisted that either are guilty of a technical violation of the treaty. We do insist that they have disregarded the comity of nations; that they have acted in an unneighborly and brutal manner toward our fishermen, and placed a narrow construction on the treaty.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then, if I understand the gentleman correctly, we propose to put a power in the hands of the President of the United States that he may violate the treaty.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Not by any means.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. As I understood when this treaty was made, it was made as has usually been the case when America was represented.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. The treaty in regard to the fishery question, to which the gentleman doubtless refers, has been abrogated.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The usual result of our treaties with foreign powers has been they get what they want and we get nothing.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. As my friend's remarks imply, we have usually been on the losing side in our treaties with Great Britain on these fishery questions. Her diplomats are trained from their youth. That government relies, as nearly all monarchical governments must very greatly, on diplomacy, while we rely on the justice of our demands, and our isolation comparatively frees us from foreign complications.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Why not have a new treaty?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. That will doubtless eventually follow, and be framed in accordance with right and justice, when Great Britain shall discover we are determined to resist every encroachment on our rights, and submit alone to what may be recognized as right by all.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the boasted importance of the Canadian fisheries, on which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] in his remarks was pleased to dwell, I will remind him that their importance is nothing like as great as it was a half century ago. They are not the peculiar nursery for our Navy, and, indeed, it is seriously questioned whether services on these fishing smacks do not disqualify men for the higher duties of seamen. We all sympathize with these fishermen in their hardships, and admire their daring recklessness. "Poor Jack" ever awakens our sympathy and interest, but he is not always found to be a New England fisherman.

These New England fishermen are frequently composed of Norwegians, Scandinavians, and Canadians, who seek temporary employment at the hands of our merchants by reason of the better wages they pay. Again, our fishing interests in recent years have been greatly extended in the Atlantic, Pacific, and on the Gulf coast, as the appended table will show. But whether few or many, the cause of New England in this contest is our cause. The cause of one of our people is the cause of all, it matters not from what section he may come. We have in various treaties paid handsomely for these New England fisheries, while they benefited a few Northeastern States. Yes, millions and millions of dollars have been thus paid out of the nation's Treasury. Of this we make no complaint; but it should not be insisted they have furnished all the sailors for our Navy and achieved all of our success upon the water. This, however, is beside the present question.

Grant to the President all proper assistance and authority, and he will see the keels of our vessels plowing the waves of every sea and our flag proudly floating as the symbol of our free institutions wherever it may be carried. And in doing so it is a satisfaction to feel the money placed at his disposal will be honestly and judiciously applied.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. It is perfectly apparent from the discussion of this measure that there is no political question in it. I accord to the friends of the Senate bill the same honesty of purpose and sincerity of intention which I claim for those who advocate the substitute; and for myself I have no hesitancy in saying that if the Senate bill was before this House as an original proposition I would vote for it freely and voluntarily. But by comparison with the substitute which is presented by the Committee on Foreign Affairs it is claimed by the advocates of that substitute that the points of difference in the two bills are measurably in favor of the substitute. What are the differences?

The Senate bill has in it this provision that whenever the President discovers that our vessels are denied the same rights which are accorded to the trading vessels of the most favored nation, then he shall have the powers and the rights which are accorded to him in the bill. I ask any gentleman on this floor, on either side of the House, on either side of this question, what are the rights and privileges that are accorded to the most favored nation? We do not propose to limit the rights to those which are accorded to the most favored nation. We know not what they are; we care not what they are. We say we demand the rights and privileges which are accorded to us by treaty and by the law of nations and that comity of treatment which is accorded to friendly and neighboring nations. This substitute strikes out the most favored nation clause, and, in that respect, is perhaps superior to the Senate bill.

It is claimed, however, that we violate Article XXIX of the treaty of 1871 by authorizing the President to prevent cars from going through the two countries with bonded goods. There is a provision in the substitute that that shall only be done on the proof that the same right is denied to American goods to pass through the Dominian of Canada. That provision is in the substitute; so that practically there is no difference in that respect, the only distinction being that the substitute is more specific than the Senate bill.

The Senate bill gives the President the power to forbid the entrance into this country of any produce of the Dominion of Canada, or any goods whether coming from the Dominion of Canada originally or from foreign nations. The substitute says "locomotive car or other vehicle," in order to make the language more specific.

But my friend from Massachusetts tells us that the Senate bill is all that the fishermen demand.

I am surprised to see a gentleman of his ability as a statesman take such a narrow-minded view of this question. It is not what the fishermen demand; they are not to be the judges of how the remedy shall be applied. This is a larger and a broader question than the mere rights of the fishermen. If you limit it to the demands of the fishermen, it simply means that Canadian fish shall not come into this country free of duty. That is practically what the Senate bill is intended to mean.

But, Mr. Speaker, we who are here to legislate for this country ought not to be controlled merely by what any particular class may believe to be their best interest. The honor of this country is involved. We not only protect the fishermen in this specific instance, but we give warning to the Kingdom of Great Britain that unless she prevents the Dominion of Canada from treating us brutally and in a hostile manner we will retaliate in such a way as to make the Dominion of Canada give us the same rights and the same privileges which we are willing to accord to that dominion.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BELMONT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. I can not say that the policy outlined in either one of these measures meets the approval of my judgment. I believe with Mr. Jefferson that our policy toward foreign peoples ought to be a policy of peace, commerce, and honest friendship. But that has not been the policy hitherto adopted by our country. In a large measure we have adopted the policy of non-intercourse. It has been productive of trouble, difficulty, controversy, and we have had this fishery trouble on our northern border ever since we have had existence as a people.

The cause that has produced the anomalous condition of things which now involves the administration in difficulty lies deeper than any of these treaties of which we have heard so much here to-day. It was present in the treaty of 1783, a perplexing question in it. It was present in the negotiation of the treaty of Ghent in 1814, and had to be eliminated from that discussion before a conclusion could be had. It was present in the treaty of 1818, in the reciprocity treaty of 1854, in the treaty of Washington of 1871, and it is here to-day, and, like Banquo's ghost, refuses to down. What is it? It is the desire on the part of a certain portion of our people on the Atlantic coast in New England to derive profit from the fishing trade, on the one side, and the desire also on the part of our neighbors on the Atlantic coast in the Dominion of Canada to derive profit from the same source.

We have one advantage over our friends of the dominion; we have the market. We have sixty millions of consumers—not so many buying their fish, but we are a populous people all along the coast, and we deny our markets to the Canadians to sell their fish. That is our advantage. We put a high duty on fish; that excludes a great portion of their fish from our market; that is an unfriendly act. Their advantage is that they have got the location for catching the fish. We can not go and catch fish even in the deep sea off the Canadian coast without going into Canadian ports to buy bait.

Mr. RICE. Oh, yes; we can.

Mr. MILLS. Well, but you do not do it, and you are always in trouble about that. To-day you are demanding the privilege of going into Canadian ports to buy bait from the Canadians, which was positively refused in the negotiation of the treaty of 1818. You want to land your fish in the Canadian ports; you want to go into those ports to buy supplies, to send your letters home, and to enjoy such other conveniences as you ought to have from a friendly people.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The Canadians are as anxious to sell as we are to buy, so that will take care of itself.

Mr. MILLS. And if you will give them an open market the Canadians are ready to agree that you may catch all the fish there that you want.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, of course they will agree to have free trade between the United States and Canada.

Mr. MILLS. Precisely. But, Mr. Speaker, I am done with that question.

Now, the present administration finds itself involved in this difficulty in consequence of the policy long pursued by our Government, and it is our duty, as we have adopted that policy in the past, to stand by the administration. I have said that I stand upon the platform of Mr. Jefferson, but I also stand upon the platform of Decatur: "My country; may she always be right, but, right or wrong, my country!"

Now, then, if we are going to carry out this non-intercourse policy we must make our language clear, specific, and definite as a direction to the administration, because it is a very difficult work that we are putting upon the Executive to carry out.

We must leave no place for doubt. We must say precisely what we mean, and then we must use the strongest instruments that we can command in order to push the measure of redress we have adopted to a successful termination. For that reason I would rather have the railroad clause than all the other provisions in the Senate and House bills together. And if it were left to me to-day to select the most potent instrumentality to bring the Canadian Government and people to realize the weakness of their position, I would take the railroad clause of the House bill alone. It has been objected to because it will bring great inconvenience and perhaps great loss to our railroad lines.

But we must remember that we can not make a war on our international commerce without incurring loss as well as inflicting it. As non-intercourse is the policy, let it be as complete as possible; let it be felt all along the line and by every industrial interest, and the sooner it will end. Non-intercourse is not a permanent policy; it is only a temporary policy, intended to produce a settlement of the contention between the two peoples, so that peace, commerce, and friendship may be secured. As it is to be a temporary measure, a harsh and hurtful measure, but a necessary measure, it is best for both that we make it as short as possible, and to do that we must lay the interdiction upon every vehicle of commerce, and especially upon the railroads.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question on the bill and the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICE. Does the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] for the previous question cover both the substitute and the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. RICE. Then the vote is first on the substitute proposed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. RICE. And if that substitute is voted down, then the vote recurs upon the Senate bill, and if the substitute is adopted, then the vote is upon the Senate bill as amended by the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] to order the previous question upon the bill and the amendment reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have offered an amendment, which is pending.

Mr. BELMONT. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will be perfectly satisfactory and ought to be adopted as a section of the bill, and I am willing to accept it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that a vote will have to be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] can not accept it for the House.

Mr. BELMONT. Then let it be included in the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

NON-INTERCOURSE WITH CANADA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to the substitute reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 3 the following:

"That any vessel of foreign nationality or ownership, within the meaning of the term "vessel" as defined in section 3 of the Revised Statutes, found engaged in taking fish of any kind within 3 marine miles of any of the marine coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of the United States, or within sea, lake, or river waters of the United States, shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture, and to proceedings to enforce said forfeiture; and any person employed on or with such vessel found taking fish of any kind in such waters shall be liable to a fine of $50 for every such offense; and said penalty shall be a lien upon the vessel in connection with which such person is employed, to recover which penalty such vessel shall be subject to libel: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to affect any right or liberty granted by treaty or reciprocal agreement, or to affect any exclusive rights of a State to regulate fisheries within State jurisdiction: And provided further, That the penalties and forfeitures herein described may be remitted or mitigated by the Secretary of the Treasury, when incurred without willful disregard of law, under such regulations and modes of ascertaining the facts as may seem to him advisable."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the substitute as amended.

The question having been taken,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. BELMONT. I call for a division.

Mr. RICE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 124, not voting 57; as follows:

So the substitute was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. BELMONT, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL said: Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] on this vote; otherwise I would vote in the affirmative.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. WELLBORN with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. WADE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. REED.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. CALDWELL would vote for the House substitute.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. PHELPS.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BELMONT demanded the previous question.

So the bill as amended was passed.

On motion of Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. MCADOO. I wish to state that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] has been unavoidably called away from the House. If present, he would vote in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BELMONT. I have been requested by several members to ask that they have leave to print remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM H. COLE.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a resolution in the nature of a privileged matter, and ask its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, February 26, 1887, the House take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. to 7.30 p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of resolutions relating to Hon. WILLIAM H. COLE, deceased, late a Representative from the State of Maryland.

The resolution was agreed to.

MACKEREL CAUGHT IN SPAWNING SEASONS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to submit a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to submit the report I send to the desk.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the bill (H. R. 5538) entitled "An act relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

C. R. BRECKINRIDGE,
T. B. REED,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOS. W. PALMER,
GEORGE GRAY,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I move to so amend that motion that parties having reports to make may be permitted to hand them in at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. STEELE. That was granted this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not this morning.

Mr. STEELE. General consent was given, as I understood, to file reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was consent given for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference, but not for reports from the committees.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the morning hour, with the privilege extended to members of handing in their reports at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL. Handed in under the rules?

Mr. BLOUNT. Of course.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

L. R. BARKER.

Mr. RIGGS introduced a bill (H. R. 11227) granting a pension to L. R. Barker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. BARKSDALE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1886 be printed, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

STATE NATIONAL BANK OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 710) for the relief of the State National Bank of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MILWAUKEE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (S. 3001) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARKET VALUE OF PROPERTY IN CHICAGO.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10771) to amend an act to provide for the ascertainment of the market value of certain property in the city of Chicago, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey said property, approved May 27, 1886; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COURT-HOUSE AND POST-OFFICE AT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported the bill (S. 3254) for the improvement and enlargement of the public building at Omaha, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MODERN GUNS FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 11026, a bill (H. R. 11228) to provide for the manufacture of first-class modern guns for the Navy and seacoast and other defenses; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 11026 was laid on the table.

ORANGE CULTURE.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported back joint resolution (H. Res. 257) to print a revised edition of the report of the Agricultural Department on insects affecting the orange culture; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REANEY, SON, AND ARCHIBALD.

Mr. KLEINER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 10342, a bill (H. R. 11229) for the relief of Reaney, Son, and Archibald; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 10342 was laid on the table.

DR. MARY E. WALKER.

Mr. KLEINER, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 5086, a bill (H. R. 11230) for the relief of Dr. Mary E. Walker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 5086 was laid on the table.

FIDUS LIVERMORE, DECEASED.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4549) for the relief of the legal heirs of Fidus Livermore, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to beprinted.

CYRENUS BEERS.

Mr. LA FOLLETE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4300) for the relief of Cyrenus Beers and also the personal representatives of Vail and Robinson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

C. J. COWLES.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9260) for the relief of C. J. Cowles; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT GRAND TOWER, ILL.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10649) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 10116, a bill (H. R. 11231) to subdivide the western judicial district of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 10116 was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPRIGGS, the Committee on Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions; and they were referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A petition for the relief of J. Walter Blanford; and

A petition for the relief of Henry Neal.

On motion of Mr. SPRIGGS, the Committee on Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of a resolution to pay B. C. Kuehling for services as locksmith; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MINOR CHILDREN OF LIEUT. GEORGE R. M'GUIRE.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9979) granting a pension to Victor, Gertrude, Margaret, and Helen, minor children of Lieut. George R. McGuire; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. DAVIDSON.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2084) granting a pension to John W. Davidson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELVIRA COOPER.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10174) for the relief of Elvira Cooper; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

C. A. WILLIAMS.

Mr. McKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 10674) for the relief of C. A. Williams and others, owners of the schooner Era; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RICHARD T. BRYAN.

Mr. McKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back the bill (H. R. 7594) for the relief of Richard T. Bryan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on the Territories, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 9087, a bill (H. R. 11233) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 9087 was laid on the table.

DEARBORN PARK, CHICAGO.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 925) to grant Dearborn Park, in the city of Chicago, to said city for the use and benefit of public and benevolent institutions; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RALPH T. MOSES.

Mr. HOLMES submitted a resolution to pay Ralph T. Moses, an employé of the House, for services as assistant in the seal room of the House of Representatives from December 6, 1886, until February 6, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

JOHN PRATER.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, submitted a resolution for the relief of John Prater; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL. I want to raise the question of consideration on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia. My purpose is to take up the bill providing for the admission of Dakota into the Union. I make the point of order against his motion.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the gentleman can not raise the question of consideration. It is not in order at this time. The only way to reach the object the gentleman has in view is for the House to vote down the motion submitted by the gentleman from Georgia.

BRANCH HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRAGG. For the purpose of having the Chair recognize me when I call "Mr. Speaker." [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that unless the gentleman has a privileged motion to submit the Chair can not recognize him.

Mr. BRAGG. When there is a pending motion I have very frequently noticed that the Chair recognized gentlemen when they addressed the Chair respectfully. Now I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia, pending his motion, to yield to me for the purpose of asking the House to non-concur in the Senate amendments to a bill in order that there may be a conference, as a conferee appointed by the Senate is now absent but will be here to-morrow morning to attend to this business.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BRAGG. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request for a conference asked by that body.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the erection and location of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains.

The motion of Mr. BRAGG was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BLOUNT) that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 121, noes 93.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; with amendments by the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. How much time have I remaining?

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me a moment to say that I hope to have a vote on this amendment this evening?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has occupied twenty-one minutes of his time exclusive of the four minutes yielded to him by unanimous consent. If those four minutes are included in the hour, he has occupied twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. If they are not included in the hour I have thirty-nine minutes left?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes so.

Mr. BLOUNT. The permission to the gentleman from Michigan to proceed a few minutes longer yesterday grew out of the fact that we had reached 3 o'clock, when the House was to pass to another order, and the gentleman asked unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed. I do not understand that in granting that permission it was the purpose to rearrange the time for general debate on this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. My friend, I hope, does not struggle for four minutes?

Mr. BLOUNT. I struggle for what is right. The gentleman from Michigan struggled here yesterday for perhaps twenty minutes to speak on the merits of the bill in a debate on the limitation of time. He has used more than his time, and I simply want to get along with this bill; and I think the gentleman from Michigan, instead of rebuking me, ought perhaps to say to himself, "I will not struggle to get four minutes more time than I ought to have."

Mr. BURROWS. When the hour had arrived for the consideration of the special order I had occupied but twenty-one minutes. My friend on my left, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who had charge of the special order, said he would yield for a few moments, and I occupied four minutes beyond 3 o'clock. I hope that will not be taken out of the hour allowed this side for debate. I am content with the statement of the Chair that I have thirty-nine minutes remaining. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that this "is a great national question;" that "it is not a party question;" that "it belongs to no party and to no section, but to all parties and to our whole country." I am not alarmed, sir, by the assertion that it would be voting a subsidy to concur in the Senate amendment. My colleague in the Senate, General MORGAN, has shown upon the discussion of this same amendment in that body that there is no subsidy in authorizing the expenditure of the amount named by the Postmaster-General as therein proposed. He very properly declares:

A subsidy means that you will give to a particular enterprise, or a particular person, or corporation, a monopoly, an advantage, in doing a certain thing. When you appropriate money at large for the good of the mail service, whether it is foreign or domestic, if it turns out that some men are better prepared to carry the mails than others, the idea of subsidy is not involved in any such appropriation as that by any means.

A careful and fair consideration of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, will remove any objections which at first sight appear tenable, but which are wholly unwarranted, in my judgment, by any of its provisions, or by anything which is likely to grow out of it.

We must have mail facilities with a country before we can have any commercial intercourse with it, and the greater our facilities for the former the more speedily will follow the latter. Think of the immense trade there is for some country with Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay. Our share of it heretofore has been merely nominal. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], in his remarks yesterday, very clearly showed how all that immense wealth of trade was being taken from us by countries which ought not to have had it in preference to ourselves.

Mr. OATES. If my colleague will permit me to interrupt him, I would like to ask what meaning he attaches to the provision that the ships shall be American built and of American register?

Mr. MARTIN. I will answer my colleague by saying, very plainly and distinctly, that I am in favor of having every American ship built by Americans on American soil. [Applause.]

Our communication with those regions has been so limited in all respects as to amount almost to nothing. The proposition of the amendment is to secure greater frequency and regularity in dispatch, and a greater speed in the carriage of mails in the countries I have named, to be secured by contract for not less than five years, and for a limited sum; but every contract to be subject to modification and annulment by act of Congress. The appropriation, sir, I consider liberal for experiment and so judiciously guarded that the Government may not be imposed upon or defrauded.

In the limited time allotted me I can do no more than briefly array the considerations which impel me to vote for the amendment.

Proceeding from the standpoint already reached—that of finding no subsidy involved in the proposed appropriation, while the safeguards for the expenditure of the money are ample—I find, at the outset, the Postmaster-General advocating such a measure in language of no uncertain meaning. True it is that certain persons deny it, and for that reason I will ask the Clerk to read the following extract from his official report:

The Clerk read as follows:

In the appended report of the foreign mails office a particular statement is given of the quantities of mail matter transported by, and of the payments and rates to, each of the various companies which participated in this service, with much other interesting matter.

Petitions, numerously signed by well-known and enterprising merchants and manufacturers of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Saint Paul, Minneapolis, and other places, have been presented to the Department for the establishment of direct and regular mail communication with the Argentine Republic, the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and for a semi-monthly service to the Empire of Brazil. These petitions represent that within a few years past the Argentine Republic has increased in population and wealth with greater proportionable rapidity than any other country on the globe; that our manufactures, particularly machinery and coarse cottons, are in demand there, but our trade is limited by the lack of direct mail facilities and direct passenger and freight lines; that our direct monthly mail service to Brazil has increased our exports of manufactures to that empire; and it may be confidently expected further advantageous results would follow the solicited enlargement of mail communication.

No authority of law exists of which the Department can avail itself to meet this request. The statutes now give power to employ only such vessels as may be intending voyages to foreign ports in the course of their trade. It has been a constant study to secure by such means the greatest possible frequency and celerity of dispatch, and every opportunity afforded by the sailing of any vessel promising any such advantage has been promptly seized, so that, at the present time, the Department enjoys the best methods for the transportation of its mails to foreign ports which the existing establishments of lines of ships or the occasional sailings of vessels foreign-bound render possible. No gain in regularity, frequency, security, or speed can be attained unless other ships shall be put upon the seas by private adventure or by foreign powers, or other provision shall be made by the Congress.

The particular application of these petitioners appears to me to be entitled to serious consideration. There is now direct mail communication between this country and no port south of Rio de Janeiro. To the latter the ships of the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company afford but one dispatch a month. To more northern ports of the Brazilian Empire somewhat greater frequency is attained by the occasional use of other vessels; but the sailings of these are not regular, and the gain by their employment is but moderate. It is not to be doubted that the extension of direct service to the southern republics of the continent, and regular semi-monthly service to the Brazilian metropolis, would be valuable and desirable, measured by the principles which should alone govern sound postal administration. The application of the petitioners is entirely distinguishable from the subject which was discussed in the last report, and was thoroughly considered and wisely resolved by the Congress at the last session. The proposal then negatived was to pay all existing American companies for no more and no better service than they now render, and for years had rendered, a compensation much beyond what they had been accustomed to receive, and much beyond the limits of adequate remuneration. It would have secured no additional advantages to the postal service; but, instead, would have multiplied its cost, with no other tendency than to enable existing carriers to intimidate competition, and thereby restrict the increase of facilities available for the service, as well as for commercial intercourse. It would have been not only an unnecessary but a pernicious bestowal of the public money on one class of carriers.

This application suggests the augmentation of existing service and the creation of new with the particular states, in both aspects desirable; the purchase of mail facilities which do not exist, and can not be expected soon to exist in the ordinary manner. The requisite expenditure would be for something worthy of expenditure, and within the general usage and the sound principles of the postal service. It should ever be regarded as wise administration to keep postal facilities rather somewhat in advance than in anything lagging to the rear of all the proper requirements of intercourse excited by the ties of blood or race, popular education and enlightenment, trade and commerce. Upon this footing very many domestic routes are maintained at a cost many times beyond their immediate and direct returns, but undeniably to the great increase of the country's general welfare; and whenever the substantial need of intercourse by the mails arises provision for such communication is promptly made.

These considerations suggest inquiry whether there be the need of such mail communication with the mentioned countries of the southern continent, whether that need be worthy of special effort to meet it, and whether it can be supplied at a cost justifiably adequate to the present and prospective value of the proposed intercourse. The determination of these inquiries rests with the Congress, and the Department is privileged, and by its information able only to express the general opinion that such service would be highly useful and is fairly demanded by the interests of the country, and its early establishment should be attempted; and I respectfully suggest that you invite the attention of that body to the subject in such terms as shall commend it to careful consideration. Should the recommendation meet with favor in its general aspects, the Department might be authorized to solicit proposals for the performance of such a service as the Congress should deem desirable, with limitations as to cost prescribed by its judgment of the probable resulting value to the country or otherwise.

There is good reason for the expectation that such an invitation, open to fair and general competition, for a service of a sufficient duration to warrant the requisite provision of vessels, would result in proposals that would enable a desirable contract to be made and a system of communication to be established of great and lasting advantage to the United States. The rapid development and growth of the countries in view, their lack of manufacturing establishments of their own, the desirable character of their products for exchange, and the advantages of extending the fields of enterprise of our citizens as well as of creating firmer ties between the peoples of our continent, invite the extension and enlargement of our postal facilities by every just, reasonable, and economical method in consonance with sound principles.

No doubt can be felt of the correctness of my interpretation of this language in the light of what the President has said upon this subject. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Petitions have, however, been presented to the Department by numerous merchants and manufacturers for the establishment of a direct service to the Argentine Republic and for semi-monthly dispatches to the Empire of Brazil; and the subject is commended to your consideration. It is an obvious duty to provide the means of postal communication which our commerce requires, and, with prudent forecast of results, the wise extension of it may lead to stimulating intercourse and become the harbinger of a profitable traffic, which will open new avenues for the disposition of the products of our industry. The circumstances of the countries at the far south of our continent are such as to invite our enterprise and afford the promise of sufficient advantages to justify an unusual effort to bring about the close relations which greater freedom of communication would tend to establish.

Such was the language employed by our Democratic President in his message last December, supplementing the recommendation of the Postmaster-General.

The amendment under consideration being commensurate, as I believe, with the end proposed, I might content myself and say no more.

But there are other considerations, equally potential, which appeal to me most earnestly as a Southern man.

I find what I would say so forcibly expressed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] in the debate on this amendment in the Senate, that I will use it. In referring to the proper construction to be put upon the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, and in explanation of his change of opinion upon the subject since last session, he said:

There can be no question whatever, I take it, that if we can understand the English language, that if we can understand arguments which are presented, that if we can understand what an individual intends when he follows a certain process of reasoning in order to make certain recommendations, and where that officer is a Cabinet officer, I say there can be no question whatever but what this amendment reported by this committee is responsive to the recommendations made by the Postmaster-General now in office. It is yielding to the demand which has been made, yielding to the pressure which has been brought upon this administration, recognizing the fact which has been heretofore denied that we must find some outlet for our increasing production, and that the great outlet which is open to us and which we can secure beyond peradventure is with the South American states.

In this connection let us recall the fact that "to-day we are the largest manufacturing country in the world. We manufacture almost as much as England and France combined, as the statistics show; and yet we do not export 3 per cent. of our manufactured goods."

This good day and hour is the witness of such an increase in manufacture and yield of field and mine in the South that in a very few years' time, if we find a market for our wares, that favored section of this great country will rise to a perfect equality with the North in wealth, in enterprise, and in productions of every description.

South America must be to the South what China is to France and what East India is to Great Britain, but with this important difference, namely: South America will seek our markets without compulsion, and will enrich us while developing her own wonderful resources. My highest ambition for the South is such a changed condition of affairs with her that it would seem, when realized, as if we had added another great and rich territory to our own. But this can not be unless we utilize the necessary means, now within easy reach of us. Nor do I believe that the present industries of the South will continue developing unless we can and do open up other markets for our products.

We need not hope to supplant the manufacturing enterprises of the North, for with great wealth to back them, and with skilled labor yielding its fruits upon the most economical basis, we have need to avoid rather than to seek such dangerous competition. Let us indulge the more rational desire of pouring the rich productions of the South into the markets of Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, now so ready for it; for such a hope is rational, and its realization would be easy.

But to return from such an inviting field of thought to the coldest matter of fact, I will ask the Clerk to read the amendment which we are now discussing.

For transportation of foreign mails, $450,000.

(4) For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American republics, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress. One of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River.

It will be observed that the expenditure of this sum is not compulsory; it is merely the setting apart of so much money, which may be used for the purposes designated. But it can only be used in a certain way—after the contract has been made by the Postmaster-General, and for not exceeding a certain sum of money. He is to invite proposals by advertisement, and is bound to secure performance of the service for the minimum sum, bid by a responsible bidder. The Postmaster-General may exercise his discretion and refuse such contract to all bidders, may decline to advertise for them at all, as he did on a former occasion, when the expenditure of the sum of $400,000 was left with him, and he deemed it inexpedient to do so.

Nor is this all; for if that officer make a contract deemed unwise, or otherwise objectionable, the Congress may either modify or annul it. A more unobjectionable measure could scarcely be conceived of; if we are willing to do anything to increase our postal facilities with the countries named; and the provision that "one of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River," commends the measure to me with peculiar force, since it is not left discretionary with the Postmaster-General, but is a compulsory requirement if any such lines should be established by him.

Mr. BURROWS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] for giving me an opportunity to declare myself in favor of this amendment, though in the brief time allowed me I can not give my reasons fully. What the people of this country need is a market for their surplus productions. These South American countries having affinity naturally with ourselves, and being republican in their forms of government, except the Empire of Brazil, which is ruled by a liberal-minded monarch and a representative assembly, we should have their trade, and when proper opportunity is offered it will gravitate to us.

In the figures presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and repeated by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] we see how small a percentage we have of the trade of that continent. It is the only part of the world where we can enlarge our trade and commerce, securing a market for the products of our people and fostering their energy, enterprise, and prosperity. I am in favor of giving the Postmaster-General this sum of money, with a discretion in its expenditure, so that the mails may be properly carried and at the same time our trade enlarged. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN], who has just taken his seat, that our commerce should be carried in American ships, built by Americans, manned by Americans, and sailing under our own flag. [Applause.]

More than that, I would have our commerce protected. Wherever the American sailing or steam vessel appears in any part of the world, carrying the American mariner and transacting the business of the American merchant, I would give such vessel the protection of the naval power, with a gunboat for every place it may go to. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, a canal is being dug across the Isthmus of Darien. I am so much an American that I favor the connection of the two great divisions of this country, east and west. I would have the great empire west of the Rocky Mountains connected with the great empire of the East at the natural point of connection, by railroad or canal; and I would have such a work of communication under the flag of my country, and dominated by the Government of the United States. [Applause.] This is all I have to say. I will vote for the Senate amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BURROWS. I reserve the residue of my time until I hear from those who are opposed to the motion to concur.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman mean to say that he proposes to close the debate?

Mr. BURROWS. That was the intimation which I gave. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman should have some better foundation for his "intimations."

Mr. BURROWS. The Chair will understand that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads recommended non-concurrence in this amendment. On the amendment coming up for consideration I moved to concur, and on this motion took the floor. Hence, I hold the affirmative of the question; and I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, we are in Committee of the Whole for general debate, for which two hours have been allowed. The gentleman from Michigan was recognized for one hour, and I shall occupy the concluding hour and close the debate, if the Chair sees fit to enforce that view of the rule.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course there will be no difficulty about it, but I certainly insist upon the right to close the argument upon this proposition, as it was upon my motion entirely that the debate was had. But if the Chair holds to the contrary, why of course we shall have to proceed now, though I submit it is contrary to all rules and contrary to all practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not prescribe who shall speak, nor the time any gentleman shall occupy. When there is no further debate it is simply the duty of the Chair to submit the question to the House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. But I do not understand the gentleman has yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan stated that he reserved the remainder of his time. He has yielded the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand he has yielded the floor except temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. His statement was that he would reserve the balance of his time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, we will take a part of ours now, and I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] for ten minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the subsidy clauses of the Post-Office appropriation bill of last session and the session previous involve substantially the same principles of public policy as the one now under consideration. Having discussed these at considerable length, it is not my purpose to do more than indicate the objections to this measure without attempting to analyze or elaborate the reasons upon which they are based. That the similarity between the different subsidy clauses may be clearly perceived, I will ask the Clerk to read the subsidy clause of the act of March 3, 1885, the subsidy clause of the Post-Office appropriation bill of 1886 and the amendment now under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSIDY CLAUSE OF ACT OF MARCH 3, 1885.

Office of Superintendent of Foreign Mails: For transportation of foreign mails, including transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $300,000; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the transportation of any part of said foreign mails, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip each way actually traveled between the terminal points: Provided, That the mails so contracted shall be carried on American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts shall not exceed one-half of the sum hereby appropriated.

SUBSIDY CLAUSE OF POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL OF 1886.

For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch, and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil; the republics of Mexico, Central and South America; the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands; New Caledonia, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies; China and Japan, $800,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with the owners of such American steamships, for a term of not less than three years nor more than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip each way actually traveled between the terminal points, in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth. And if he shall be unable to make such contracts for any of such respective services, he shall, so far as possible, cause the mails of the United States to be carried to and from said places, respectively, in the best and most expeditious manner practicable, in American vessels, and for a reasonable compensation, not exceeding the rate aforementioned.

The Postmaster-General, if in his judgment it be practicable, shall contract for a semi-monthly mail service between the ports of New York and New Orleans, alternately, and the port of Rio de Janeiro, under the provisions of this act.

PRESENT AMENDMENT.

For the transportation of foreign mails by American-built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mail to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American republics, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisements for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress. One of the lines of the steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River.

Mr. DOCKERY. In order that the effect of the proposed amendment may be fully understood I will also ask the Clerk to read sections 4007, 4008, and 4009, of the Revised Statutes, constituting the law now in force with reference to the transportation of foreign mails.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRESENT LAW.

SEC. 4007. The Postmaster-General may, after advertising for proposals, enter into contract for the transportation of the mail between the United States and any foreign country whenever the public interests will thereby be promoted.

SEC. 4008. The mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, shall be transported in steamships; but the Postmaster-General may have such transportation performed by sailing-vessels when the service can be facilitated thereby.

SEC. 4009. For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage; and if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage, on the mail so transported.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, since the repeal of the compulsory act of March 25, 1864, American vessels have rested under no legal obligation to perform mail service, and as a result of this repeal they have declined to render such service, putting the Post-Office Department for a time to inconvenience by reason of this action. During the last fiscal year, however, finding themselves unable to coerce the Government and compel it to accede to their terms, they sullenly yielded further opposition, and have since been carrying the mails. As is well understood the compulsory law was repealed in the expectation that Congress would be compelled to award these ocean steamships subsidy compensation; but failing in their coercive policy they now present their third annual plea of lack of communicative facility and inadequate mail compensation, and thus seek to obtain an enormous bounty from the people. Their aggressive perseverance is worthy of a better cause.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that one of reasons assigned by the some gentlemen in this debate for the presentation of the pending amendment is the assumption that the proposition is in harmony with the views of the Postmaster-General. A very eminent Senator in another body recently made the following declaration:

Mr. President, I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, that I should make a statement of the reasons for the proposed amendment giving to the Postmaster-General half a million dollars for the purpose of establishing a certain postal service by sea.

The subject is not a new one in the Senate or in the country. It was discussed at some length at the last session of Congress. At that time the Post-Office Department was, or was supposed to be, against making any special provision for steamship service. This year, however, the Department is in favor of exactly what the amendment under consideration provides for. I could not, if I were to speak all day, add anything to what the Postmaster-General so distinctly, so ably, so exhaustively presents in his annual report.

No differences of political opinion could warrant the Senator in making this statement; for it seems to be a deliberate attempt to put an unfair construction upon the views so ably presented by the Postmaster-General. I will ask the Clerk to read that part of the report to which reference is made that the House and country may be able to determine whether the Senator's statement is warranted by the language of the Postmaster-General.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the appended report of the foreign mails office a particular statement is given of the quantities of mail matter transported by, and of the payments and rates to, each of the various companies which participated in this service, with much other interesting matter.

Petitions, numerously signed by well-known and enterprising merchants and manufacturers of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Saint Paul, Minneapolis, and other places, have been presented to the Department for the establishment of direct and regular mail communication with the Argentine Republic, the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and for a semi-monthly service to the Empire of Brazil. These petitions represent that within a few years past the Argentine Republic has increased in population and wealth with greater proportionable rapidity than any other country on the globe; that our manufactures, particularly machinery and coarse cottons, are in demand there, but our trade is limited by the lack of direct mail facilities and direct passenger and freight lines; that our direct monthly mail service to Brazil has increased our exports of manufactures to that empire; and it may be confidently expected further advantageous results would follow the solicited enlargement of mail communication.

No authority of law exists of which the Department can avail itself to meet this request. The statutes now give power to employ only such vessels as may be intending voyages to foreign ports in the course of their trade. It has been a constant study to secure by such means the greatest possible frequency and celerity of dispatch, and every opportunity afforded by the sailing of any vessel promising any such advantage has been promptly seized, so that, at the present time, the Department enjoys the best methods for the transportation of its mails to foreign ports which the existing establishments of lines of ships or the occasional sailings of vessels foreign-bound render possible. No gain in regularity, frequency, security, or speed can be attained unless other ships shall be put upon the seas by private adventure or by foreign powers, or other provision shall be made by the Congress.

The particular application of these petitioners appears to me to be entitled to serious consideration. There is now direct mail communication between this country and no port south of Rio de Janeiro. To the latter the ships of the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company afford but one dispatch a month. To more northern ports of the Brazilian Empire somewhat greater frequency is attained by the occasional use of other vessels; but the sailings of these are not regular, and the gain by their employment is but moderate. It is not to be doubted that the extension of direct service to the southern republics of the continent, and regular semi-monthly service to the Brazilian metropolis, would be valuable and desirable, measured by the principles which should alone govern sound postal administration. The application of the petitioners is entirely distinguishable from the subject which was discussed in the last report, and was thoroughly considered and wisely resolved by the Congress at the last session. The proposal then negatived was to pay all existing American companies for no more and no better service than they now render, and for years had rendered, a compensation much beyond what they had been accustomed to receive, and much beyond the limits of adequate remuneration. It would have secured no additional advantages to the postal service; but, instead, would have multiplied its cost, with no other tendency than to enable existing carriers to intimidate competition, and thereby restrict the increase of facilities available for the service, as well as for commercial intercourse. It would have been not only an unnecessary but a pernicious bestowal of the public money on one class of carriers.

This application suggests the augmentation of existing service and the creation of new with the particular states, in both aspects desirable; the purchase of mail facilities which do not exist, and can not be expected soon to exist in the ordinary manner. The requisite expenditure would be for something worthy of expenditure, and within the general usage and the sound principles of the postal service. It should ever be regarded as wise administration to keep postal facilities rather somewhat in advance than in anything lagging to the rear of all the proper requirements of intercourse excited by the ties of blood or race, popular education and enlightenment, trade and commerce. Upon this footing very many domestic routes are maintained at a cost many times beyond their immediate and direct returns, but undeniably to the great increase of the country's general welfare; and whenever the substantial need of intercourse by the mails arises provision for such communication is promptly made.

These considerations suggest inquiry whether there be the need of such mail communication with the mentioned countries of the southern continent, whether that need be worthy of special effort to meet it, and whether it can be supplied at a cost justifiably adequate to the present and prospective value of the proposed intercourse. The determination of these inquiries rests with the Congress, and the Department is privileged, and by its information able, only to express the general opinion that such service would be highly useful and is fairly demanded by the interests of the country, and its early establishment should be attempted; and I respectfully suggest that you invite the attention of that body to the subject in such terms as shall commend it to careful consideration. Should the recommendation meet with favor in its general aspects, the Department might be authorized to solicit proposals for the performance of such a service as the Congress should deem desirable, with limitations as to cost prescribed by its judgment of the probable resulting value to the country or otherwise.

There is good reason for the expectation that such an invitation, open to fair and general competition, for a service of a sufficient duration to warrant the requisite provision of vessels, would result in proposals that would enable a desirable contract to be made and a system of communication to be established of great and lasting advantage to the United States. The rapid development and growth of the countries in view, their lack of manufacturing establishments of their own, the desirable character of their products for exchange, and the advantages of extending the fields of enterprise of our citizens, as well as of creating firmer ties between the peoples of our continent, invite the extension and enlargement of our postal facilities by every just, reasonable, and economical method in consonance with sound principles.

Mr. DOCKERY. If anything more were required to establish the true intent and meaning of the Postmaster-General it can be found in the following letter, addressed to Hon. J. B. BECK, United States Senate:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to hand you a memorandum of such suggestions in respect to the Senate amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill as I have been able hurriedly to dictate in the course of the day.

A fair reading of my two reports, the one for 1885 and the other for 1886, will show, unless I am very greatly mistaken, that the only object or purpose in view, or suggested in the last report, was to obtain the carriage of the mails to the South American republics, with double service to Brazil, at such cheap and economical figures as would be necessary for the purpose; and that no idea of subsidy for the mere creation of a line of trade and travel was proposed. There are companies, nominally or actually of foreign organization, which I believe would compete for this service and furnish it at comparatively cheap figures. I believe, also, that if that competition were admitted an American company would secure the service instead of a foreign company, but at fair remuneration, and not as the recipient of a subsidy. I think there is good reason to expect this result, if the opportunity be afforded for it; and that an enlargement of our postal facilities may be secured with no vicious course of subsidy legislation to bring it about. It was in this belief that the suggestion in the last report of 1886 was made.

I can not anticipate what may be said, unfairly perhaps, in criticism of the report, or in support of the assertion that the suggestion for this new service is inconsistent with the position taken in the report of 1885. I think, at least, that I see the distinction; that the distinction itself is clear and substantial, and that the extension of the postal service may be secured usefully and desirably without the payment of a dollar of subsidy, but only by giving a fair remuneration for a very limited mail carriage at the beginning.

Thanking you, partly in advance, for the interest you have manifested in aid of the Department and for your valuable assistance in representing the Department in the Senate, I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. F. VILAS.

Hon. J. B. BECK, United States Senate.

If either the report or letter contain any utterance on the part of the Postmaster-General that would seem to indicate a change of views in relation to this question of subsidy I fail to recognize it. His position to-day is precisely that of one year ago; and "no vicious course of subsidy legislation" will receive the approval of either the President, the Postmaster-General, or this body.

FIRST PROPOSITION.

The first proposition in the amendment confines the transportation of foreign mails to "American built and registered steamships," and restricts the competition authorized to such as does or may exist between this class of vessels. There are now eighteen lines of American steamships that ply to the ports and countries affected by this bill; and only on one of these lines is there competition, the line from New York to Havana. It is well understood that this line has ceased to be of material benefit to the ocean mail service, as the mails from the United States to Cuba are now carried by the "fast mail" from New York to Tampa, and thence via Key West to Havana, thus dispensing with the service of the ocean line from New York to Cuba, and saving thereby forty-five hours' time in transit. There is no competition on the remaining sixteen lines, and the effect of this amendment is to give them the full amount of $1 per nautical mile on each outward trip.

Mr. MILLARD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. MILLARD. I wish to ask simply whether this amendment does not permit the carrying of mails by lines to be contracted with by the Post-Office Department to the lowest bidder at a rate not to exceed $1 a mile?

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, certainly; but I assume that these American companies will receive the maximum rate authorized under this amendment, because since 1845, when the ocean service was first provided for——

Mr. MILLARD. I understand that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Similar results have without exception followed the establishment of a maximum rate.

Mr. MILLARD. Let me ask another question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well.

Mr. MILLARD. Will not this money be expended in establishing new lines or on existing lines, in the discretion of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. DOCKERY. The effect in my opinion will not be to create additional lines of ocean transportation, but to make monopolies of the lines already in existence.

Mr. PETERS. That is a difference of opinion.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

In this connection permit me to call the attention of the House to the fact that none of the great powers of the world are thus restrictive in the management of their ocean mail service. France last year subsidized her ocean lines to the amount of $5,152,388.98, Great Britain extended aid to her ocean mail carriers in the sum of $3,206,766.67, and other countries also as shown by the following table:

| Countries. | Amount of subsidy per annum. | Countries. | Amount of subsidy per annum. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Brazil | $2,223,958 10 | 6. Austria | $43,106 55 |
| 2. British India | 350,724 42 | 7. Denmark | 32,469 54 |
| 3. Japan | 241,250 00 | 8. Portugal | 23,964 61 |
| 4. Belgium | 134,793 32 | 9. Argentine Republic | 6,229 07 |
| 5. Netherlands | 101,975 60 | 10. Roumania | 984 87 |

England subsidizes liberally, yet there are no privileges accorded to vessels sailing under the British flag not enjoyed by the ships of every other nation. The mail service of Great Britain is awarded by open competition; and any company which has steamers having the requirements demanded by the post-office authorities may tender for this service. In France contracts for carrying mails by sea are let to the lowest responsible bidder. After a careful examination of the laws governing the ocean service of the other countries named in the above table I fail to find any such restriction as that which would hamper and hinder the transit of mails under this proposition. It has been the custom in the management of inland mail service to avail ourselves of all lines of railway and other methods of transportation so that the mails may be dispatched with frequency, regularity, and speed.

This has also been the practice of the Department in the dispatch of the ocean mails where the services of the swiftest ships on any or all lines are utilized. I do not wish to convey the idea by this statement that I prefer our mails to be carried in foreign vessels. On the contrary, I heartily favor such ocean carriage by our own lines of steamships. Congress has taken this view heretofore; and by the act 14th of June, 1858, gave preference to American lines, and that law to-day is upon our statute-books—foreign vessels receiving sea-postage only, while American vessels are allowed both sea and inland postage.

I can not too strongly express my desire to have the mail service restored to American vessels, but if it is to be accomplished by taxing the body of the people for the benefit of the few existing lines, then I prefer to await a more auspicious time for its restoration.

SECOND PROPOSITION.

The next proposition presented in this amendment expresses a desire to "secure greater frequency, regularity in dispatch, and greater speed in the carriage of foreign mails" to the countries named. The amendment, however, gives no assurance of "greater frequency," but on the contrary limits the service to one line. It makes no provision for increased sailings. There can be no greater regularity in the dispatch under the operations of this provision as no stipulation whatever is made for the carrying of the mails upon any fixed schedule time. There will be no greater speed because none is required. In the transportation of the foreign mails of Great Britain there is in all contracts an express provision by which greater frequency, regularity, and speed are secured; and all steamships failing to meet such requirements are subject to heavy fines and deductions from their mail compensation.

The seductive idea of competition suggested by the next clause of the amendment can deceive no one who has made an examination of this question. By its terms it limits the service to American steamships, thus denying to the Government the benefit that would be derived from a healthy competition with foreign vessels. The only competition therefore that would remain is that between American lines; but, as previously stated, this is impossible, as there are no lines to compete.

CONCLUDING PROPOSITION.

The concluding proposition of the amendment authorizes a rate of compensation not exceeding $1 per nautical mile for each outward trip on the eighteen lines that ply to the countries named. For the quarter ending December 31, 1886, they made collectively one hundred and thirty-two trips and a total sailing distance on their outward voyages of 179,421 nautical miles, receiving as compensation for the service rendered in the transportation of mails for the time stated $11,016.50.

At this rate the total number of miles traveled annually on outward voyages would be 717,684; and the corresponding compensation would be $44,066. This amendment proposes to give $1 per nautical mile, regardless of the amount of mail carried or the service rendered to the Government, and with no requirement to secure "greater frequency, regularity, and speed." To state the case plainly, the Government would be required to pay $717,684 for a service now rendered for $44,066 (provided it be extended to all the lines running to these countries), an increased cost of $673,618. If the service is confined to the amount named in this amendment it will necessarily deprive some of the eighteen lines of the benefits of the subsidy, and its extension will involve an increased cost of $455,934.

Mr. Chairman, view this proposition as you may in its relation to the postal service, the conclusion must be reached that so far as it affects this interest it is a hinderance rather than a benefit. It not only fails to secure "greater frequency, regularity, and speed" in the carriage of ocean mails, but, as I stated on a former occasion, "the proposed method of its execution virtually operates as a prohibition upon the first two, and wholly neglects to provide for the last except by way of commendation." If the object of the amendment be to aid in a restoration of the carrying trade of this country to American vessels, it seems to me that it will wholly fail of its purpose. To illustrate the correctness of this opinion, I have only to submit the following table showing the ocean mail service now rendered by fifteen foreign lines which ply between this country and European ports:

Transatlantic lines.—Statement for fiscal year ended June 30, 1886.

| Lines. | Number of trips. | Total number of nautical miles traveled on outward trips. | Actual earnings per mile. | Amount actually paid. | Amount that would have been paid if the steamers had been paid sea and inland postage. | Increase in cost over that actually paid. | Amount these steamers would have earned per mile if paid at sea and inland postage. |

DECLINE OF MERCHANT MARINE.

An examination of this table reveals the fact that with a compensation of sea-postage only, one of these lines, the Cunard, now receives from the Government on its outward voyage 53 cents per mile; the North German Lloyd, 48 cents per mile; the Guyon, 42 cents per mile, and the National, 39 cents per mile. If these were American lines and had transported the same amount of mail as that for the last fiscal year, and being entitled to sea and inland postage, they would have received respectively $1.64, $1.39, $1.30, and $1.27 per nautical mile, amounts greatly in excess of the compensation authorized by this amendment. Instead of receiving $287,927.26 they would be entitled to $897,640.84, an increased mail pay under existing laws of $609,713.58.

This is not all. In view of the terms of the law and the well-understood desire of the Postmaster-General to prefer American steamers, the mails would be "massed" and largely transported by American lines and the result would be an average compensation of $1.50 to $2 per nautical mile. If therefore liberal mail pay is to revive and restore our merchant marine, why is it that American lines are not now plying between this country and European ports? Why is it that with compensation largely in excess of that authorized by this subsidy and with a commerce ample and sufficient to furnish full cargoes for every trip, American steamship companies fail to avail themselves of this seemingly inviting field for enterprise and remunerative investment? It can not be for lack of liberality on the part of our laws which fix the rate of compensation for the trans-Atlantic service, as it is conceded by all to be ample and adequate. It is therefore apparent, Mr. Chairman, that other causes are involved apart from the failure to subsidize that account for the absence of our flag from the great highways of ocean travel where once it responded to the breezes of every sea.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to enter upon a lengthy discussion of the causes which have led to the decline of the American merchant marine. The subject is not properly germane to an appropriation bill; but inasmuch as this proposition has been so repeatedly brought to the attention of the House in this connection, I desire to submit the results of a few reflections. In my opinion much of the legislation of the last quarter of a century has had a tendency to hamper and fetter the genius and enterprise of our people upon the sea, and to restrict their fullest scope of action. We have had a protective tariff at the gateways of the Republic which has operated destructively upon our shipping interests.

It has levied tribute upon those who sought to exchange and barter with our people, and the result has been not only to drive commerce from our ports, but also to oppress and burden our merchant marine. A somewhat exhaustive examination of this subject leads me to conclude that this and other causes have forced the United States to surrender her carrying trade because it has ceased to be profitable. Our people can make more money by investments in railroad stocks, purchases of Western lands, and loans upon Western real estate than by building and sailing ships. By reason of the increased wages demanded by our sailors as against the wages of sailors of other countries, by reason of the high rate of interest realized by our people in investments other than those of shipping as against the low rate of interest received by foreign ship-owners, and by reason of the increased cost of ship-building in this country as compared with that of other countries, we have been driven from the seas and can no longer compete with England and other maritime powers.

SUBSIDY PERIODS.

Mr. Chairman, subsidies will not enable us to regain our prowess upon the seas. This fact was demonstrated before the war, and the policy discarded, as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] will remember, as a result of long experience.

Again, we made a fair trial in this direction from 1866 to 1877, expending during that time $7,517,661.72. When we entered upon this policy the American tonnage registered for foreign trade was 1,387,756. Eleven years of subsidy brought an increased tonnage of only 182,844. In 1866 vessels were built in the United States amounting to a tonnage of 336,146.56. Eleven years of this policy registered an absolute decrease of 159,555.50 tons, and we owned a tonnage in the United States amounting to 68,178 less than when we inaugurated the policy. In 1866 American vessels carried 32 per cent. of the foreign trade; in 1877 only 26 per cent., a decrease of 6 per cent. The shameful Pacific mail scandal in 1877 terminated the second period of subsidy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit as a proposition, from which it seems to me there can be no escape, that if we are to reinaugurate a subsidy policy we must appropriate a sum sufficient to put our steamship companies on an equal footing with foreign lines, so that the subsidy shall make good the loss they may sustain by reason of the increased cost of constructing American vessels, increased operating expenses, and the high wages paid to our seamen. The subsidy proposed in this amendment will not accomplish this result, so much to be desired. Let us make a brief comparative review: English ship-owners receive on an average only 1 per cent. on the capital invested, American ship-owners will not be content with any investment which yields them less than 5 per cent.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that John Roach in his article in the North American some time ago claimed that the American ship-owner and builder should have 8 per cent.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think John Roach is perhaps nearer right than I am; but out of abundant caution I was putting the statement entirely within safe limits.

English ship-owners purchase their ships at from $100,000 to $150,000 less than the cost of an American ship; and the operating, current, and daily expenses of a foreign ship are estimated at 25 to 30 per cent. less than the like expenditure for an American vessel.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. Chairman, time fails me for further presentation of the various phases of this important question. This is "neither time nor place" to discuss the many propositions looking to the restoration of our merchant marine; but I may be permitted to say in conclusion that I do not believe this restoration can be effected by any methods which are simply incidental to the administration of our foreign postal service. "Subsidy," the protective tariff of the seas, like its twin-brother on shore, is grasping and selfish, taxing the many for the benefit of the few. Let us therefore eschew this and all other propositions the result of which is to maintain the present high rates of war taxation, and to foster and build up great monopolies of corporate wealth.

Sir, if we would transmit to later generations the priceless blessings of liberty and local self-government; if we hope to escape the spread of the pernicious doctrines of the Commune, we must, by just and wholesome regulations, check the growing, baneful, and overshadowing power of monopolies.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HAMMOND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate was communicated by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. In reference to the point of order raised a few moments ago, the Chair directs the Clerk to read the third clause of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would be proper to recognize the gentleman reporting the measure at the close of the debate if that point is insisted upon.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to know if the gentleman from Michigan may follow me with the balance of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Not if the gentleman from Georgia insists on his right to close debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I certainly do, and I want it known that there may be no complaint about it.

Mr. BURROWS. Under the ruling of the Chair the right to close debate would devolve on the chairman of the committee. Do I understand the gentleman from Georgia to desire that I shall proceed with the debate at this time?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

Mr. BURROWS. I had hopes the views of the gentleman from Georgia would be heard before we closed on this side.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Michigan have been heard from a good deal in this House on this question.

Mr. BURROWS. I will thank the Chair to stop me in about two minutes. I want to reply in one word to the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. DOCKERY]. That gentleman denounced this as a subsidy to eighteen lines. The argument upon the subsidy question I do not propose to go over.

As I said yesterday, if this is subsidy, then all of our inland service is subsidized. If we propose to abrogate the statute which restricts compensation for carrying the foreign mails to 5 cents, or the sea or inland postage, a statute enacted in 1858, when the postage to the South American countries was from 45 to 75 cents a letter—if we now propose to abrogate that statute and pay a decent compensation, and if that is subsidy, then I say our whole domestic mail service is subsidized. Another thing, the gentleman says this is a subsidy to eighteen lines, and then he drags in the Pacific mail—that old ghost—to frighten us from our propriety upon this question. There are not eighteen lines, and my friend knows that every single line is eliminated in this amendment, except the lines to the South American countries.

Mr. DOCKERY. Which include about 75,000 miles.

Mr. BURROWS. He knows that every single line is eliminated except the lines to Central and South America. Then he asks why do we not run our lines across the Atlantic to-day and carry the mails? I can furnish him an answer by another, better than any that I can improvise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BURROWS. I yield myself another minute. [Laughter.] I can furnish the gentleman an answer falling from the lips of Mr. Bayard, the distinguished father of the present Secretary of State. I will read it:

I am willing to trust American skill and industry in competition with any people on the globe when they stand nation to nation without government interference; but if the treasure of a foreign nation is poured into the lap of individuals for the purpose of destroying the interests of my country, or for building up commercial marine at the expense of the commerce and prosperity of the United States, I for one will count no cost in countervailing such governmental action on the part of Great Britain or any foreign government.

[Applause.]

That is the language of the father of the present Secretary of State, and yet, when England stands back of her great merchant lines and pours out her wealth from her unlocked treasury to maintain her supremacy on the seas, we higgle about sea and inland postage, and then wonder why it is that we are driven from the ocean!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. I yield seven minutes of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time at my disposal I can only touch on a few points of the questions involved. I voted for a proposition similar to this Senate amendment in the last Congress, although it was then said to be a subsidy. I shall vote for this measure despite the cry of subsidy by some of my zealous Democratic friends.

Sir, I contend that this Senate amendment grants no subsidy, and that it merely proposes to carry out good old Democratic doctrine that prevailed in regard to ocean mail service previous to 1858. For a long while immediately preceding that year our Government, under the lead of the great Democratic statesmen of the country, liberally subsidized, if you choose to call it so, all our ocean mail-steamship lines. It was done not only to promote our foreign commerce but also to stimulate American ship-building and train American naval architects as well as American sailors, so as in case of war we might not only have improvised cruisers and experts to man them, but skillful mechanics to build others. Democrats used to think that a flourishing merchant marine was a good nursery, or at least a strong ally of an effective navy, and that such a navy with a small army should be the settled policy of the country. I think so still.

In 1858, however, a free-trade craze, so to speak, or "laissez faire" doctrine of "devil take the hindmost," swept over the land, and we determined to let our foreign commerce take care of itself as far as the mail service was concerned, by passing a law limiting compensation for ocean mail transportation to the sea and inland postage. This was very small pay compared with what had been allowed for a long time, but inasmuch as the combined sea and inland postage then amounted to from 45 cents to 75 cents per letter, the pay in many cases was enough, and in all cases was generosity itself compared with what our steamships now receive and have received since the establishment of the International Postal Union, which is but 5 cents per letter.

As our law of 1858 limited compensation for ocean mail carriage to sea and inland postage, and as the International Postal Union reduced sea and inland postage from, say, 50 cents on the letter to 5 cents, many vessels refused to carry our foreign mails for such a pittance. This resulted, during the war, in the passage of another law compelling every American ship to carry our foreign mail for the postage alone. That odious—I ought to say infamous—law remained of force over twenty years, or until 1885, when it was repealed for very shame, and now comes up the question whether we shall voluntarily pay only 5 cents per letter for ocean mail service or pay something like what it is worth, while at the same time establishing permanent channels of communication abroad as well as promoting foreign commerce and home ship-building and providing a training-school for sailors.

All the Central and South American States with which mail facilities are to be provided by the Senate amendment are now members of the International Postal Union, and 5 cents a letter is the only pay which under existing law the steamships can obtain. Hence, we ought to do something—we must do something—to give the Postmaster-General authority to help revive, or rather create, commerce with South America. The Senate amendment does not make it mandatory upon the Postmaster-General to spend the $500,000, nor any part of it, as additional compensation or subsidy. It is in his discretion to spend all or none of the appropriation, after competitive bidding, and at a rate not to exceed $1 per nautical mile for the outward trip. Surely we Democrats can trust our own party Postmaster-General, and even if we could not trust him the provision of the amendment which reserves to Congress the right to annul any contract the Postmaster-General may make will prevent any possible abuse.

Mr. OATES. Will my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] yield for a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not time. Profitable commerce, and foreign commerce in particular, can not be carried on successfully without facilities of communication; not merely mail facilities, but facilities for traveling, and for the transportation of freight. The possibilities, and even the probabilities, of the future development and growth in the way of population, wealth, and trade of the La Plata and Amazon Valleys are but little inferior to those of our own great Mississippi Valley.

Mr. OATES. The question I wanted to ask my friend——

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not yield for a question; I have not the time.

Mr. OATES. It is not hostile to your line of argument at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I must ask my friend to wait until I get through; but in passing I will say to him that his State has iron and coal and timber and naval stores and soil and productions and navigable rivers unsurpassed by any country of equal area on the face of the globe, and that whenever Alabama's resources shall have been properly developed, she will become a great Commonwealth, and her chief city, Mobile, rise to be a grand metropolis. [Laughter and applause.]

The natural market for Alabama's coal and iron and steel and manufactures of all sorts that she shortly will have, or ought to have, will be Central and South America. So I hope the gentleman will vote for the Senate amendment, not only to benefit his own State but all the States of the Union. The manufacturing States of the East need a market for their goods and machinery, and the great wheat-growing West also needs a market for its flour and pickled meats, while the South requires a limitless market for its coarse cotton cloth, in the manufacture of which it is fast acquiring a monopoly. It is well known that the young nations of America, the negro states of Africa, and the old Mongolian states of Asia are the best markets for coarse-cotton fabrics, and I contend that the South has a deep stake in opening up commerce with the countries below the Carribean Sea.

The best paying commerce on earth is that of the tropics, especially that of the East Indies. Every school boy knows that whatever nation has controlled that commerce since the dawn of history has for the time been at once the wealthiest and most powerful state in the world. I do not hesitate to say that Central and South America are to be our India, if we shall only do our duty toward grasping their trade. We are certainly doing little or nothing in that regard now. England, Germany, France, and other states of Europe have more than twenty-five steamers plying in the South American trade where we have one. Over forty thousand Englishmen reside at the capital of the Argentine Republic alone, and Englishmen, Frenchmen, Germans, Italians, and other European nationalities are fast pouring into all the Central and South American states; yet we sometimes prate of the Monroe doctrine, when but few Americans are to be seen south of Mexico and still fewer American vessels.

If this Senate amendment contains a subsidy, then I contend that every State in this Union except nine receives subsidies from the Federal Government for carrying its mails, because the mail routes of all the States except nine fail to be self-supporting. Over six millions and a half of dollars are taken out of the national Treasury every year to "subsidize" mail routes in the gentleman's State and in mine [laughter] and in all the Western and Southern States except Illinois. As I said a while ago there are only nine States in the Union whose mail service pays expenses. Four of those are in New England—New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhole Island, and Connecticut; four are Middle States—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, and the other is Illinois. I repeat, those nine are the only States in which the mail service is not "subsidized," if it is subsidy to pay a steamship line more than 5 cents a letter for carrying a small mail.

Not only do twenty-nine States of the Union require over six and a half millions of subsidy every year for carrying their mails, but in addition to this they consume over $4,200,000 more for the same purpose, deriving the money from the surplus postage of the nine States that overpay the expense of carrying their mails.

Now, is it right, is it honest, is it patriotic in the twenty-nine Southern and Western States, which receive subsidies (so called) for their local mails, to object to let the eight manufacturing States of the East and Illinois in the West have a small subsidy if need be to promote foreign commerce with their natural customers, who inhabit our India, if we shall be true to ourselves?

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that every Democrat ought to vote for this Senate amendment because it embodies the creed and policy of the Democratic party in its best days.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] seems so anxious to ask me a question that I was going to allow him to do it.

Mr. OATES. But your time has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. I regret it. I have no objection to permitting the gentleman's question if the House will give me time to reply to it. I hope that such time will be granted.

Mr. OATES. I will ask the gentleman whether the transportation of our inland mails is not regulated by act of Congress as well as the transportation of our ocean mails. Is there any difference in principle?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, except this: That you are willing Congress shall pay the railroads something like what the service is worth, but you object to paying the steamship companies anything in the neighborhood of what the service is worth apart from all considerations of national policy.

Mr. BURROWS. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland has six minutes.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Speaker, I have advocated and voted for this proposition in every shape in which it has appeared since I have been a member of Congress, and I am more than willing, yes, sir, I rejoice in the opportunity, to give this fresh and final attestation of the faith that is in me ere I cease to be a member of this body.

During this period I have witnessed a steadily growing sentiment in favor of this proposition, at first mercilessly taboed, and I am not without hope, if not at this Congress then at the next, the last vestige of opposition will disappear.

At the close of the Forty-eighth Congress, after a long and heated discussion, the amendment of the Senate to the Post-Office bill, seeking to accomplish the same object which is proposed by the present amendment, was adopted; but the Postmaster-General refused, in the exercise of a discretion which he claimed was vested in him, to expend the money, and so the project fell through. At the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress this official, still warm with heat of a controversy, which, whatever else may have triumphed, certainly left the dignity of the Government in rather doubtful form, succeeded in defeating the proposition a second time, and to the superficial observer it may have seemed to have been postponed forever.

But the maid was not dead; she was only sleeping, and, more wonderful still, it was to be the Postmaster-General himself who was to call her back to life. Not to do him any injustice, I propose to read some extracts from his invocation. He says that this proposition is the "purchase of mail facilities which do not exist, and can not be expected ever to exist in the ordinary manner." He says that—

It should ever be regarded as wise administration to keep postal facilities somewhat in advance rather than in any thing lagging in the rear of all the proper requirements * * * of trade and commerce.

He admits that—

Upon this footing many domestic routes are maintained at a cost many times beyond their immediate and direct returns, but undeniably to the great increase of the country's general welfare.

After showing that south of Rio there is no regular mail communications, but that the service is wholly dependent upon such vessels as may occasionally sail to ports farther down the coast, he admits what every one must see is true:

That no gain in regularity, frequency, security, or speed can be obtained unless other ships shall be put upon the seas by private adventure or by foreign powers or other provision shall be made by the Congress.

What that other provision can possibly be, except a subsidized railroad through the continent, he does not make so clear. Then, in conclusion, he expresses the opinion that—

The rapid development and growth of the countries, in view of their lack of manufacturing establishments of their own, the desirable character of their products for exchange, and the advantage of extending the fields of enterprise of our citizens as well as creating firmer ties between the peoples of our continent, invite the extension and enlargement of our postal facilities by every just, reasonable, and economical method in consonance with sound principles.

And makes the suggestion that—

Should the recommendation meet with favor in its general aspects the Department might be authorized to solicit proposals for the performance of such a service as the Congress should deem desirable, with limitations as to cost prescribed by its judgment of the probable resulting value to the country or otherwise.

Like most men, he has sufficient pride of opinion not to make a square backdown, and insists that there is nothing in this recommendation which impeaches the former judgment he had expressed upon the same proposition. So be it. Let us admit that he has been perfectly consistent, and that the project he defeated and the one he now recommends are as opposite as the poles.

The question now is, what has he recommended? If I can read English, he has recommended, in view of deficient communication with these southern countries, the appropriation of a sufficient sum of money to enable him to purchase additional postal facilities, with the incidental advantage of extending the commerce of the country. The Senate, in response to this recommendation, has inserted in the Post-Office bill an amendment giving him this sum of money to be expended by him for this purpose without any control upon his discretion except in one particular, namely: that the carriers, old or new, to be engaged for this service shall be of American register.

With this single limitation he has the full power to contract for the carriage of the mails to these countries for any sum not more than one dollar per nautical mile for the outward trip, and with the single exception that at least one service shall start from a seaport on the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River, he is at liberty to establish his lines at any port in the United States. The South is the only part of the country which has an exception made in its favor. There is but one question then I submit for discussion, and that is whether the privilege of the amendment should be extended to foreign vessels, or whether it should be confined to American vessels. The question of subsidy is completely eliminated out of the controversy.

It is a concession in the case that the ordinary means of communication between this country and the South American ports proposed to be reached by this amendment are entirely insufficient for postal purposes; that the ordinary revenues derived from the carriage of the mails can not be relied upon to increase these means of communication, and that therefore an extraordinary aid of some kind must be extended if we would accomplish the desired result. Call it a subsidy; call it what you please, the fact remains that you must either give something more than sea or inland postage for the carriage of your mails, or you must give up the idea of more frequent, regular, and speedy mail service to and from the South American continent.

The Postmaster-General says that he can see no reason why, if you pay more for mail service on land than actual postage, you should not do the same thing on the water. Nor can any sensible man see the difference. If you pay more than the revenue derived from the mail matter carried between Tampa and Havana, a distance of 200 miles, why should you not be governed by the same principle for a water carriage extending, say for the round trip, 6,000 miles? All the arguments in fact are in favor of a difference being made for the longer as against the shorter route. The undertaking is a greater one in point of outfit, expense, and responsibility, to say nothing of the prolonged hazards of the voyage. There is no occasion then to discuss the question of subsidy.

The only question, as I have before stated, is whether it is wise to provide that none but American vessels shall have the privilege of this amendment. A full discussion of this subject would open up the broader question of "free ships," and I have neither the time nor the opportunity to enter upon such a boundless field of imbittered controversy. I will admit for the purpose of the argument that it would have been wiser to have thrown open the contract to competition from any quarter, or that it would have been a justifiable experiment, at least, to permit vessels bought abroad, but owned and manned by Americans, to engage in this service.

But in the present state of opinion on the subject it would have been simply impossible to pass a bill embracing either one or the other of these provisions. Looking at it, then, from a practical standpoint purely the question is whether the mere fact of this limitation to vessels of American register is such a dangerous provision as to justify a defeat of the whole project unless this objectionable feature can be removed?

It is admitted that we have but one monthly service to Rio, and that south of it we are dependent for such precarious transportation as ocean tramps or occasional coasting vessels may afford. It is proposed to make the Rio service bi-monthly, and this additional service, together with what will be necessary for the accommodation of the Argentine Republic, &c., will have to be performed by American vessels, either built or hereafter to be constructed. It is not hazarding too much to say that such an appropriation as this, with the probability of its being renewed from year to year, with a probable increase, as the advantages of the scheme become more and more apparent, would give quite a stimulus to ship-building and re-establish that once prosperous branch of our industry.

If such should be its effect—and it is certainly not unreasonable to anticipate such a consequence—there is the best reason for limiting the appropriation to American vessels. But whether this should be the effect or not the fact that a vessel carries the American flag, not as a parasite, but as the honest symbol of American growth and manufacture, would not deter me from giving it an advantage over some half-naturalized tramp just equipped with its first papers, as I should derive no pleasure in witnessing American mails carried in American bottoms which were such only by fiction of law. A nation that buys ships will soon cease to build them, and in the end will cease to run them. Ship-building and ship-owning go together, and there is no experiment of delay that I would not suffer before I would be willing to separate two great interests joined by a bond of union as vital and inseparable as that which connected the Siamese twins.

I have an abiding faith that whenever American capital takes to the water, as it inevitably will just as soon as the more tempting possibilities of enterprise on land have been exhausted, we shall witness a revival of ship-building. I hope yet to live to see the day when Baltimore shall rival Glasgow, and the wonders of the Clyde be repeated on the shores of the Patapsco. To begin the policy of buying ships instead of building them is to put that day off, perhaps forever, and I would not postpone it an hour. But the practical question is not whether we shall have free ships, but whether we shall have any share in the vast commerce of the countries south of us, all ripe and ready to fall in our lap if we only have the courage to shake the bough.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has presented the statistical side of this question in such an exhaustive and admirable manner that nothing can be added to what he has said. I have treated the necessity for additional means of steam communication with these ports and the inability to obtain it without the aid of the Government as a concession which no one was prepared to dispute. I did so because I felt that the arguments furnished by the memorial upon this subject from all our principal maritime centers, the testimony of the commission organized by President Arthur, and the cool and able presentation of the case by the Postmaster-General left no room to doubt that there was a pressing, imperative necessity for this connection that no one not blinded to the interests of the country could fail to perceive.

When I read the discussion which the debate upon this proposition in the other Chamber gave rise to there seemed to me to run through the whole of it, with one or two exceptions, the same concession that immediate urgent action could not longer be postponed without imperiling the commercial future of the country. The great—and I may say almost the only—doubt expressed was whether the competition for this new mail service should be restricted to vessels of American origin and register. If an amendment could have been carried throwing open this competition to vessels of foreign make, I think it is not too much to say that the appropriation would have been voted with practical unanimity in the Senate.

Let me say to gentlemen who still have the notion of subsidy in their heads that they are jumping like sheep over an ideal bar which has long since been removed. They are simply called to vote now on the propriety of a recommendation made by the Postmaster-General in obedience to the enlightened commercial sentiment of the country, leaving the method by which this recommendation shall be carried into effect entirely to the discretion of that official.

If any mistakes are made in the execution of the plan he will bear the responsibility, as nothing more nor less is done by this amendment than to give him what he asks for himself, and to permit him to dispose of it as he sees fit.

I might well close my remarks at this point, but as this subject has been so persistently clouded and maligned by ignorance or prejudice, or perhaps both, I may be permitted, at the risk of repetition, to restate some of the arguments which lie at the very threshold of this discussion.

Let it be borne in mind that the principle of applying postal revenues for the support of the service without extraneous aid from the Government is applied in practice to not more than one-quarter of our domestic mail routes, whether by land or water, and that the other three-quarters would be suspended if the rate of compensation was limited to the revenue earned. There is nothing, therefore, either in principle or practice, which can be urged in favor of fastening such a limitation upon the foreign mail service.

It has been demonstrated by the experience of other nations that it is impossible to establish effective postal facilities with foreign powers with the limited revenue derived from the ordinary postal rates. England, Germany, France, have all of them, purchased, to use the language of the Postmaster-General, foreign mail facilities at an apparently enormous price, England alone paying on this account between 1842 and 1884 $163,000,000. This enormous outlay is, however, more apparent than real, as this bread thrown upon the waters has come back to enrich the givers a hundred fold.

The tendency of South American opinion as illustrated in its institutions of government, in large part republican in form, and in the different projects for a closer commercial union with this country, shows that the ordinary operations of natural causes are re-enforced by the sentiment and sympathies of the people. Naturally the trade of South America should be reciprocated by the trade of the United States, and this dictate of nature we find substantially indorsed by an offer from the Argentine Republic to go more than half way in enlarging and quickening the steam communication between the two countries by an offer of $100,000 for this purpose.

The New England fisheries are sometimes referred to as the nursery of our seamen, and so they were in times past; but the day has gone when seamanship acquired on a sailing vessel will be very valuable in time of war. Steam has revolutionized the methods of the sea as well as the land, and it is the knowledge how to navigate a steamship and how to use the complicated machinery for carrying on modern naval warfare which is now valuable. This knowledge can only be acquired on steamships, and the establishment of such a service as is here recommended would be the starting-point of a steam nursery of seamen in accordance with the demands of the times.

This country abandons $5,000,000 a year for the purpose of maintaining a foothold in the Hawaiian Islands, which, according to apparently well-informed men, we can at best only hold in common with other nations. We lavish millions upon our rivers and harbors, untold sums upon public buildings and other objects more or less worthy, and in view of these expenditures what possible reason can be given why a portion of the public money should not be applied for an increased steam mail service with South American countries, which, unless all experience is at fault, is sure to bring with it the incidental advantage of an enlarged commerce with our neighbors at our very doors? No answer except a sneer against a subsidy has ever yet been given, and in my opinion there is no other to make.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland be allowed five minutes longer, not to come out of the time of either side.

Mr. FINDLAY. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from New York for his courtesy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLOUNT and others objected.

Mr. FINDLAY. It must be a very weak cause whose advocates object to discussion.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is an unjust proposition to ask the extension.

Mr. FINDLAY. Any proposition that can not stand the light of free discussion must be feeble indeed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Such discussion as the gentleman has been indulging in can not throw any light on the question.

Mr. KING. I ask the gentleman from Georgia whether he would not be willing to allow five minutes additional on each side.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir. I now yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. BURROWS. Before the gentleman from Georgia proceeds, I desire to ask my friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. BLOUNT], whether it is his purpose to bring this question to a vote this evening?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have so announced, and shall adhere to that announcement.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes allotted to me, I desire to reply to two or three suggestions which have been submitted within a few minutes past in favor of the pending amendment.

The first is that other countries pay ship subsidies; the second is that this country has heretofore paid them; that practically we pay them now on those star routes which cost more than they produce; and, last, that by such subsidies we can develop trade with the South American countries.

It is known that England pays liberally for carrying her ocean mail, but after lettings to the highest bidder without regard to nationality. She began in 1840 by aiding the Royal Mail Company. But the company had to furnish steam vessels fit for war, built as directed, subject to be taken at a fixed price, and salable only by consent of the Crown. Later the requirement that these vessels be fit to carry arms was omitted; but extra speed and all the other requirements for uses in time of war were insisted upon. Up to 1854 England had so paid twenty-eight and a half millions of dollars, and since she has paid about $136,000,000. But while she averaged in 1855 a subsidy of $15 per ton of her tonnage, now she pays but $1.10 per ton, and that to the highest bidder. While private capital was timid of building steamships she aided, but made those ships fit for war.

It was said that the Democratic party first began ship subsidies in this country. In principle perhaps that is true. But the situation and the purpose were so different then from now that the charge is unjust. In that transition state from sails to steam, when private capital was timid here also, we did offer aid to the Collins line by act of March 3, 1847. But what was the Collins line? They were required by law to be four "first-class sea-going steamships to be attached to the Navy of the United States," built under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, officered by the Navy, and to be used by the United States when wanted for war purposes. By act of March 3, 1849, the contract was postponed till 1850, and in July, 1852, the six months' notice required for vacating the contract was given. Surely that did but little to build up our merchant marine. It had no such purpose. There was no pretense of sending mails at exorbitant rates in order to build a hot-house commerce. We simply prepared for war.

Our first genuine effort to stimulate commerce by ship subsidies was in 1865. Under the law then passed we were in 1867 paying to lines to Liverpool, Bremen, Havre, Aspinwall, Havana, Vera Cruz, and to the Pacific Mail line per year $1,330,000 for 726,000 miles traveled, or an average of $1.80 per mile. That for the Pacific Mail was then about $350,000, but under the law was to be increased to $1,000,000 after 1873. In 1865 our tonnage in foreign trade was 1,518,380, while in 1873, when subsidies ceased, it was but 1,378,533. Those subsidies gave us no ships and no commerce.

But they did give us the immense corruption fund raised to prevent the repeal of that law and which has ever since made subsidies "stink in the nostrils" of our people. It was in vain that President Grant pleaded for them in his message of 1872, and again for subsidies and free wool and free dyes in his message of 1874. It was useless to press the matter. A later vote showed the opinion of the country.

On the 28th of January, 1878, the House of Representatives voted upon the following resolution:

That in the judgment of the House no subsidies in money, bonds, public lands, indorsements, or by pledge of the public credit should be granted or renewed by Congress to associations or corporations engaged in or proposing to engage in public or private enterprises; but that all appropriations ought to be limited to such amounts and purposes only as shall be imperatively demanded by the public service of the Government.

It was passed by 176 yeas to 85 nays. Of the yeas 81 were Republicans and 93 were Democrats. Of the nays 37 were Republicans and 48 were Democrats. Of the yeas were Haskell and Garfield. This House in the last Congress voted against mail subsidies for ships by 178 to 80.

It is plain, I repeat, that cash subsidies build neither ships nor commerce for this country. Such attempts are as futile as the premiums once offered on home-raised wheat by New England when Pennsylvania undersold her farmers in the market.

In the Old World they have been given not for that purpose but from other business reasons, and mainly from political considerations. To illustrate:

In Georgia those who own the lines of railways to Savannah made a line of steamers to New York as an extension of their field of operations. So Italy, with her 2,000 miles of railroads, France, with her 14,000, and Germany, with her 19,000, all belonging to those governments, find it profitable to own connecting lines of vessels also as carriers of freight and passengers. But the governments of the Old World have far higher political interests at stake. They have colonies and dependencies abroad.

France has colonies in Asia, Africa, America, and Oceanica, containing 10,000,000 of inhabitants.

England now covers with her flag five times as many subjects as our population. She sends her ships throughout the world because her dominion is throughout the world.

So this Government acted in granting public lands to transcontinental lines of railroads in 1862 and later. Some thought we would make gain in the price of the lands reserved by the improvements which the grants would carry there. But the far more important consideration was that a war was raging looking to the dissolution of the Union, and if that attempt succeeded the Pacific slope might follow the example of the South. It was necessary to bring the East and West closer together and bind them by bands of iron.

England in sending her mails to her colonies does no more than we do in extending our postal service all over our land.

Like her, we let them to the lowest, bidder native or foreign. As with us so with her, the expense for some places is greater than the income. But that is necessary to maintain the system. In many places the expenses of the internal revenue are greater than the income, but without guarding those places the collection of the tax would be inefficient. And so in the customs service. Many ports at which no receipts occur must be manned to guard the service against smuggling.

It has been said that subsidies to mail-bearing vessels is like pay for expedited mail service on railroads. For political reasons the Government can not allow any others to control our mails, and therefore when there has been established a regular and great supply of mail matter between designated points expedition may be as much the duty of Congress as to have provided carriage of any kind. But who ever dreamed of expediting mails to create a use for expedition? The United States expedites no mails until accumulated matter needs to be carried and the people clamor for its speedy delivery.

Gentlemen say that we pay to railroad companies certain amounts for mail transportation, but we pay them according to the weight of the mails. By the proposed amendment the ship-owner is to be paid by the mile, and he will receive the same sum whether he carries one letter or ten thousand.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there not a minimum compensation to railroads?

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman when he had seven minutes would not be interrupted; he can scarcely expect me to yield when I have but five.

Again, it is said that these South American states are our India and that we should encourage trade with them. Will a pound more of freight be carried by a steamship simply because you pay it a hundred thousand dollars more to sail?

Suppose we had that trade opened. Suppose this subsidy would build another ship, which it would not; float another flag, which it would not; what would we trade for? In return for cheap cottons we might send to South America they would offer us wool, taxed 90 per cent. when it comes to our shores, and copper, taxed more. Suppose we wished to trade for nuts, for coffee, for any of the things which those countries produce. They would say to us, "We can not freight your vessels with those articles, because we sell to merchants who have their connections with England." The trade has been established in certain channels, and it would take years to change it.

Gentlemen can not get rid of this difficulty in that way. If you mean to encourage trade with South America this is not the way to give encouragement. If you send your ship-load of cheap cotton to South America the only way now to get a return cargo would be to ship something to Liverpool and at Liverpool get a return cargo to America. And this current of trade will so remain until we remove our tariff obstructions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I now yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, those who vote for this proposition of the Senate can only be justified by one of two reasons. It must either produce a cheaper and more efficient mail service or it must promote the growth of our commerce with foreigh countries. Now I maintain that it can not be supported for either one of those reasons. The foreign mail service of the United States was carried last year at sea and inland postage amounting to about 26 cents per pound for the mail carried. It is but little more trouble, but little more expense to carry the mail of the United States than to carry parcel dispatches—the express matter which many vessels carry from one port to another. These same lines it is now proposed to subsidize carried parcel dispatches last year at the rate of 9½ cents per pound, while the Postmaster-General pays for the United States mails 26 cents per pound. Yet it is proposed by this amendment of the Senate to increase the sum to be paid for carrying our mails to $1.80 per pound. Is that a cheaper service than we are now obtaining?

But they say it will be more efficient. How? We are carrying our mails on foreign vessels at a higher rate of speed than these American vessels can obtain. It is proposed to strike down the efficiency of our mail service, and have these mails carried on vessels which maintain a lower rate of speed than foreign vessels and pay a higher price for it. Is not that a subsidy? It is, beyond all dispute.

I have heard some preposterous talk on this floor to-day by sensible men about subsidies. They say we are subsidizing our Army because it is not self-sustaining and does not make money enough to pay for the expense it costs. It is said that we are subsidizing our Navy, that we are subsidizing our Post-Office.

But such arguments as these are wide of the mark. The Army, the Navy, and the Post-Office were created by the Constitution to support the Government. They were never intended to be self-sustaining. It is absurd to contend so. Subsidy means to give something for nothing to some favorite. It means to pay more for a given service than it is worth, intentionally because you want to favor the recipient of your bounty. Subsidy means that you want to give more to certain American companies to carry our mails than we give foreigners and pay them more because they are Americans. And this is urged upon us because we are told that our fathers granted subsides in 1858. This is true, but we have not been told the whole story.

The policy pursued in 1858 was the very opposite of that which obtains to-day. Then we were extending our commerce, and pushing it into all the ports of the world. We had pulled down all the obstructions we had been building up since 1816, and having levelled every barrier that hindered the free movement of trade we began to stimulate its growth and expansion by every means in our power. We have been reminded of what our Democratic fathers did, and their utterances have been read in our hearing, but gentlemen did not read to us the declaration of principles our Democratic fathers declared to the world in the national platform of 1856. They declared then that the time had come for free seas and progressive free-trade throughout the world. Having lowered the barriers to trade in 1846, they let them down still further in 1857. Step by step they moved forward in the pursuit of trade, and as they advanced they removed every obstruction from the path which commerce had to travel.

In 1860 when they delivered up the Government there was not a commercial barrier existing between us and any foreign people. When that was done and the way was all clear then they began to encourage its growth, to stimulate it and push it in every direction. Then they subsidized steamship lines, and they contracted for increased speed of the vessels. They did not give their bounty to old lines of slow runners, but they stipulated for faster time. Our Democratic fathers were not guilty of the stupidity of prohibiting commercial exchange and at the same time professing to encourage it by voting the public money to some line of American vessels to make slower time. Trade was what they were hunting.

It was markets for cotton and wheat and provisions and manufactures of all kinds, and those markets were increasing year by year, and year by year our trade was expanding and the products of our labor were finding their way into all the markets of the world. This is the same policy that has been pursued by Great Britain for many years. Gentlemen here applaud the wisdom of Great Britain in granting subsidies, but they seem to forget how they have heretofore derided that government for encouraging and building up its foreign trade. In 1820 Great Britain and the United States began to move forward in parallel lines in the modification of their tariff laws.

In 1846 she repealed her tariff on wheat and we abandoned protection on everything. In 1849 she repealed her navigation laws and continued removing duties till 1860, when she adopted her present commercial system. Together we had been moving for forty years toward free seas and free trade. That was the policy of both countries up to 1860, and is the policy yet of Great Britain. But in 1860 it was overturned here, and in its place was substituted the policy of commercial restriction. We were then told we wanted the home market for home products; that what we wanted was to set the producer and consumer side by side. Whenever any one now talks of removing any of these obstructions to foreign commerce we are met with the cry of foreign pauper labor. To-day the wall is still up between us and all European countries. Why are we so anxious about our commerce with the countries south of us?

Now, if we wish to increase our commerce with the countries south of us, or with any other people, the first thing we must get our consent to do is to take what they have to send and what we want, and send them in return what we produce and do not require for home consumption. Before we begin to stimulate trade we must open the doors so that it can come in when it arrives and applies for admission.

Mr. MILLIKEN rose.

Mr. MILLS. I can not yield.

We must encourage these countries to which we wish to send these American lines to remove their obstructions to trade, and then to do all they can to build it up. That is the course Great Britain pursued, and she has to-day a commerce surpassing any other two countries in the world. She has gone all over the world making commercial treaties, and sometimes, when she has found a people like China and Japan who were averse to trading with her, she turned her cannon upon them and taught them the ideas of English civilization from their shotted mouths.

I do not approve of that method of encouragement, but it shows how earnest she has been in seeking trade in all parts of the world. She opened negotiations with different governments for the opening of seas and rivers that had hitherto been closed to the world's commerce. She has obtained consent everywhere she could to locate her consuls to protect her commerce and introduce her wares into new markets. She gave her influence to the sweeping of privateering from the seas. She induced the other governments of Europe to agree that a neutral flag should protect an enemy's goods, and neutral goods should be protected under an enemy's flag. She has struggled to get the world to consent that in war on the high seas the merchantman should pass unchallenged, and that hostilities should be confined to armed vessels alone.

In addition to all this, in her intercourse with other governments, she has encouraged her manufacturers and merchants to send their agents to the country south of us, and all others, to study the condition and tastes of the people, to learn what character of goods they wanted, what they needed to facilitate their trade. English bankers have established houses in all parts of the earth where banks were needed to aid in the movement of commerce home. When their agents learn what kind of manufactures a people want, they supply it. They do not send to South America a cargo of silk hats and high-heel boots and expect to sell them.

They have learned that such wares are not wanted. They find what is wanted and make it and send it to them, and take in exchange what they have to give. They found out that the people wanted a broad-brim sombrero, and they gathered up samples of old hats and took them home and English hatters made others like them and supplied them cheaper than others, and got their trade. English agents found that they wanted a certain kind of cotton goods, with a certain width, and printed in a particular way, and English manufacturers made the goods as they wanted them, and sent them to them. Their merchants want their goods packed in a certain way; the English merchant learns that way, and packs his goods to suit their taste. But our merchants and manufacturers have done none of these things. How often have our consuls called the attention of our people to these things, and what attention has been paid to these statements?

They are relying upon their home markets. They are rearing around themselves a Chinese wall, and the result is that we have no trade with those countries such as the other nations of the world have, and we never will have until our policy and our business methods are changed.

When we get to believe that there is a profit to the man who sells as well as to the man who buys; that there is a profit to the exporter as well as the importer; that trade dispenses a benefit and a blessing to all parties, the buyer, the seller, and the carrier; that the more we trade with all mankind the greater is the good to the whole world; when we get to believe that trade knits nations and people together in closer and stronger ties of friendship; that it satisfies more wants, diffuses more comforts, increases and distributes more wealth, employs more labor, secures a greater prosperity, and makes more happiness throughout the world, then we will seek in earnest to build up our commerce as rapidly as we can and wherever we can.

I say, that when we become convinced in our hearts that this is the wisest and best course to pursue, then we will do as England has done, and as our fathers did from 1846 to 1860. We will tear down all the barriers that surround us, open all the ports, and welcome all the products of other people that come to exchange for ours. We will send consuls into all the world to hunt out markets, to introduce our wares, and to protect our commerce. I say, when our hearts have accepted this faith and all our works are in accord with it, then will be the time to ask us to quicken the expansion of our commerce by encouraging new lines of ships with faster time between us and our customers, but not before. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the question has been raised here as to whether the Senate amendment to the Post-Office bill now under consideration carries with it a subsidy.

Mr. KING. I think my friend from Illinois, if he will allow me, does not state the position correctly——

Mr. SPRINGER. I decline to be interrupted in the few moments yielded to me.

Mr. Chairman, I reiterate what I said before, that the question has been raised as to whether the amendment now under consideration coming from the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill is a subsidy or not. The clause is as follows:

> For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American republics, $500,000.

Then follows a provision for advertising for this service. The law as it now stands on this subject authorizes the Postmaster-General, as will be seen by section 4008 of the Revised Statutes, to make contracts to carry the mails to foreign countries, and these contracts may be made with any steamship company that is running between the ports. In other words, the general law now authorizes the Postmaster-General to make contracts with any of the steamship companies that may be running between such ports. This provision, on the contrary, requires the contract to be made only with American-built and American-registered vessels.

Mr. WISE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not yield in the short time I have.

Mr. WISE. I merely wish to ask if this statute does not allow the Postmaster-General to pay American ships larger pay than foreign ships?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will come to that.

Mr. BURROWS. But my friend ought to state that the Postmaster-General is restricted to sea and inland postage.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not gotten through with all I intended to say.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope the gentleman will keep in view that fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, as the gentleman states, the pay for this service is restricted in the contracts to the amount of the sea and inland postage.

Under that law the Postmaster-General is enabled now and has been during the past year to secure mail facilities between this country and all the countries of the world.

It has been said that if this be a subsidy the star-route service is also a subsidy, because we pay more in many instances than the postage along the route would produce. In the star-route service the Government advertises for proposals to carry the mails on a particular route, and lets the contract to the lowest bidder and gets the service for just such money as it can procure its being done for. But that is not a subsidy. That is paying for what it costs for carrying the mail between two points. So it is with the foreign service as now provided for by law. The Postmaster-General gets the service at the best rates he can secure and from any companies, whosoever they may be, that are willing to do the service within the terms prescribed by law. So that by adopting the Senate amendment you appropriate half a million of dollars to pay for the privilege of carrying the mails on American built and registered vessels. That is an effort—confessed here to be an effort—to subsidize American steamships by giving them this large and increased pay; and it is justified in this debate for the reason, it is claimed, that such subsidy is necessary to encourage commerce between this country and the countries of South America.

That brings me to the consideration of the question as to whether this policy will produce commercial relations or stimulate commercial relations between this country and the countries of South America.

Mr. BURROWS. Does my friend think that can be done by a payment of 5 cents a letter?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will pardon me. I will come to that presently if I have time.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] says these southern republics are the India of America. I do not agree to that suggestion that the republics of South America furnish the India to this country. Far from it. Let us see what that India does for our business. If you look at the exports and imports between this country and the South American countries you will find we exported to the Argentine Republic during the year of 1885 $4,000,000 worth of products; to Brazil, $7,000,000; to Chili, $2,000,000; to Colombia, $5,000,000; to Peru, $700,000; to Venezuela, $2,000,000, and so on. This is the India to which gentlemen have invited the United States to go for trade.

Let us look in the other direction, where we transact business, and we find that to Great Britain we sent last year products worth $398,000,000. Nearly $400,000,000 a year of the products of our soil and the products of our toil go every year across the ocean to Great Britain. And gentlemen are now disturbed in regard to the few millions we send to South America and wonder we do not send more there.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is because we have no communication there.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will tell you why it is. Trade goes in natural channels. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] asks why Great Britain sold so many thousand hats—ninety-five thousand hats—to Brazil while this country sold only one hundred and nineteen. It was because the people in that country purchased the British hats for about one-half what they would have been compelled to pay for those made in this country. If you can get some law that will compel the people of South America to pay two prices for products manufactured in the United States then you will have trade with South America.

The inconsistency in our legislation is that by your tariff laws you prohibit the products of those countries coming to us and ours from going there, because trade must be reciprocal. You prohibit trade by one set of laws and then we are asked to subsidize ships to carry that prohibited trade to make it profitable. [Repeated cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I am not surprised gentlemen want to vote when they see a proposition in the light in which I have characterized this, which is a proposition to force trade where it will not go, and to pay people for carrying commerce when the Government has prohibited that commerce from being carried on. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order. When the other side was being presented gentlemen favoring it took occasion to applaud with the view possibly of furthering the measure. I trust that at least this side will have the respect of silence while the discussion is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been strenuous in his efforts to keep order, and he trusts the members of the committee will aid him in that respect.

Mr. SPRINGER. The statistics of commerce between this country and others show that since a restrictive policy was adopted our trade has been continually decreasing. In 1860 our foreign trade amounted to 2,379,396 tons. In 1885 it amounted to only 1,262,814 tons; an increase of population of 100 per cent. and a decrease of trade of 50 per cent. in tonnage.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the friends of subsidy have taken great hope from the report of the Postmaster-General as they construe it. The letter of the Postmaster-General construing it for himself and against their view counts for nothing with them. This is perhaps an honest error. For the last twelve or fourteen years the cry of persons seeking to use the laws of this country to build up steamship lines for their own personal benefit has been accompanied with such a presentation of "reasonable pay"—the language used by the Postmaster-General—that it has never yet broken in upon their apprehension that we have now a Democratic President, and that there is a Democratic Postmaster-General who is willing to allow for this service, not subsidies, but actual mail pay, nothing more and nothing less, and who says that instead of the half million, which the advocates of subsidy think it proper to vote, he does not need under any circumstances more than $36,000.

The language which the Postmaster-General has used in asserting his position in reference to this matter is the very language used by the President of the United States. Both the President and the Postmaster-General draw a clear distinction between a subsidy for the purpose of promoting a line of trade and travel and reasonable payment for the purpose of creating a mail line where none already exists. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I need not spend more time upon that part of the case.

Gentlemen on this side who support this subsidy have also taken much comfort to themselves from going back a quarter of a century, to a period in the history of the Democratic party when what may be termed a subsidy policy was adopted by that party. The Democratic party followed that policy until they found there was nothing in it. They could establish one line, but the moment their fostering hand was taken away it disappeared and other lines did not follow. Other causes also operated to prevent success. I should like to ask gentlemen who have gone back to that former period and who wish to go back to a policy long ago abandoned by the Democratic party, to justify their action, if they can, upon the principles and the practice of modern Democracy. An attempt was made in the Forty-fourth Congress to vote two subsidies of $500,000 each, one for service to San Francisco, Japan, and China, and the other from New Orleans to Rio Janeiro, and both were defeated by Democrats.

Again, in the Forty-fifth Congress an attempt was made to put a $200,000 subsidy on the Post-Office appropriation bill for service between the United States and Brazil, and it was defeated by a Democratic House. Again, in the Forty-eighth Congress a subsidy of $400,000, after rejection by a Democratic House on repeated votes, was put upon the bill at the hour of 3 o'clock in the morning by the aid of absenteeism and under the threat of an extra session. But later on a Democratic President was elected, a Democratic Postmaster-General administered your postal affairs, and, regarding it in the light of a subsidy, that Postmaster-General, acting in perfect harmony with the President and his Cabinet, put the ban of his condemnation upon it. In the first session of this Congress the action of this House distinctly discredited the action of the Forty-eighth Congress; and I may say here, sir, that that legislation in that Congress was passed by the great body of the Republican party with the aid of a slight deflection on this side of the House.

Again, at the first session of this Congress a subsidy was put upon the Post-Office appropriation bill by the Senate, and when it came to this House it was defeated by a vote of 178 to 80. Gentlemen, do not turn away from the Democracy of the last decade, for that is the living Democracy, and its action has been taken in the light of experience—experience which in the ante-bellum period discredited the policy of subsidy and led to its abandonment—experience which brought the Democratic party in its national platforms to condemn that policy upon every occasion. You will find gentlemen on the other side of this House, not Democrats, but the great body of the Republican party, acting with you in this regard. I repel the idea, sir, that the Democratic party at this period is in favor of this measure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the attention of the committee briefly to the Argentine Republic, and to Uruguay, and Brazil, because it has so happened that the Postmaster-General has referred to that service in his report, and that reference is the leaverage by which, if at all, this measure is to become law.

Now, let us see something as to the mail service to Brazil and the Argentine Republic. There are now three lines connecting the United States with Brazil—the Red Cross line, the Booth steamship line, sailing from New York to the northern ports of Brazil and connecting at Pernambuco with other lines to Rio and Buenos Ayres, and the United States and Brazil steamship line, which sails from New York to Rio, connecting with other lines. These lines made forty-three trips last year, and make trips ever ten days on the average. The trade has become so valuable to the Brazil steamship line that they have chartered foreign vessels to make trips from New York to the northern ports of Brazil, making from one to two extra trips per month. In other words, this steamship company is now hiring foreign ships for the purpose of crushing out that competition which might otherwise come into operation, and with the aid of subsidies they will always be able to accomplish this.

Let us see from the reports of the State Department what are the facts in regard to the distribution of the mails. I read from reports from the consuls of the United States for January, 1887:

Their transportation facilities—

Referring to Uruguay and the Argentine Republic—to the West Indies are better than ours, notwithstanding the difference in the distance; and a steamer leaves Buenos Ayres for the Brazilian ports every day.

Such, then, is the condition of the service—three mails a month to Rio and Pernambuco, and a daily mail from there to Uruguay and the Argentine Republic. Yet the gentleman from Maryland informs this House that we are dependent for the carrying of the mails upon the accidental sailing of vessels.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] claims that there are no proper mail facilities now with those republics. He calls attention to the character of the Government of Uruguay, and remarks that it is a country having republican institutions like ours. Yes, Mr. Chairman, its institutions are like ours in form; yet our consul at Buenos Ayres informs us that the masses of the people in that country have no consideration in the elections, and that the people who do the farming do not own the title of the lands which they till.

One-half of the property in those republics is owned by foreigners. The gentleman says that in the Argentine Republic there are forty thousand persons speaking the English tongue. Yes; but those forty thousand persons come from England. The great bulk of the foreign population comes from Southern Europe—from Italy, from France, from Spain. These people speak a language strange to us. American citizens are advised by our consuls to keep away from there because of the character of the population among whom they would be placed and because they are doing better at home.

Mr. Chairman, we have nothing in common with those people, in language or property. American citizens can scarcely be said to have invested there at all. Our consuls say to us that it is not subsidies that are wanted. The banking facilities in that country are from England, from France, from Italy, and from other countries. There is no American banking-house; no Americans invest their capital there. I take comfort in the thought that this land of ours is a land of more promise than any other, and is not properly to be compared with those little republics that are scarcely free from revolutions for three or four years at a time. The American consul to Uruguay congratulates the people of that country because they have not, in the last four years, had as many revolutions as usual. This is the country in which we are to take such a deep interest.

In reference to Uruguay I wish to call attention to another pregnant fact. Belgium gets a large part of the trade of that country, and the minister declares that the reason of it is that Belgium buys the wool of Uruguay and in return gives her woolen goods. By this process Belgium has taken away a large proportion of that trade. Free wool in our tariff laws, he says, will give to the United States that trade.

The gentleman from Michigan deplores the fact that the European countries obtain the commerce of South America. He points to the lack of mail facilities as an evidence of a low state of trade, but he should have remembered that the trade of America with Europe is immense, even when mail communication with it depends entirely on foreign lines.

My friend from Michigan can see no way of securing proper mail facilities and at the same time building up our trade except to subsidize. He has again and again invited our attention to the aid given by Great Britain, Germany, France, and Italy to steamship lines connected with the South American countries. I wish the gentleman had gone further and called attention to the policy pursued by England, France, Germany, Italy, and other countries of Europe for the purpose of getting their share of the carrying trade.

Take Germany—Germany to which my friend invites attention. Germany never subsidized a line anywhere on the face of the earth until the last of July. She has one line, and that does not touch those countries. How did she get it? She allows a citizen of her empire to go to England, or anywhere else on the face of the earth, in the cheapest market to buy the cheapest mode of transportation the world affords.

France has pursued the same policy and has given bounties to operate its lines of steamers. She has given bounties to her sailors. So with Italy. So with Great Britain. Her ships are sold by her citizens to the citizens of any other country of the world. This is the great, broad, statesmanlike idea of these countries when they come to consider the question.

How shall we be able to compete with other countries for the carrying trade of the world? American ships take in our coasting trade, but in the march of commerce abroad they are scarcely to be found. Gentlemen wail in pathetic tones over this condition. They say the sea is deserted by our ships and by our sailors, while the profits of transportation go to other countries. But whenever there is a suggestion of purchase anywhere they are ready by their action to say we will not suffer it to be done, we will be content with our pride humbled, with our investments contracted, rather than anybody shall bring in competition with American-built ships, which can not run outside of the coasting trade, one of foreign build.

Ay, Mr. Chairman, it may be protected along the coast, but it can not be in the commerce of the world. It is absurd, therefore, for gentlemen to talk about restoring American shipping by subsidies to the steamship line.

I omitted in the early part of my remarks to state a very important fact in reference to the steamship line between New York and Buenos Ayres. It seems when we cease to read circulars and newspapers coming to us from men who are trying to shape our legislation in aid of lines of steamships we discover facts which are seemingly new.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask leave to print a communication, since the report of the Postmaster-General, showing a contract between certain persons and the Argentine Republic for a monthly line of steamers from New York to Buenos Ayres.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The paper is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 9, 1887.

SIR: In view of the visit of Mr. Tisdale and other gentlemen interested in the promotion of trade between the United States and the Argentine Confederation, I beg leave to inclose for your information a dispatch lately received from Mr. Hanna, minister resident in that country, relating to a proposed governmental assistance to a line of mail steamships between the Argentine Confederation and the United States.

Respectfully yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

No. 65.] UNITED STATES LEGATION, Buenos Ayres, January 1, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith in inclosures (1 and 2) a copy of an unofficial correspondence recently held by our legation with the minister of foreign affairs of this government in relation to a line of steamships which a number of enterprising citizens of the United States propose to operate between New York and Buenos Ayres.

Some time in September last Mr. W. P. Tisdel, representing a United States line of steamships, asked to be presented to his eminence the minister of foreign affairs of this government, Dr. Don N. Quirno Casta, that he might ascertain what, if anything, his government would be willing to do in the matter of putting on a line of ships "to run direct between New York and Buenos Ayres, without stops along the Brazilian coast."

It seemed to me to be a very desirable result to be reached by our people, and the presentation of Mr. Tisdel, in an unofficial way, was accordingly made. His reception was very cordial, but in consequence of the sudden appearance of cholera here, and its overshadowing importance in all the departments of the government, the progress made in the negotiations was for a time much retarded. His proposition to this government was substantially as follows:

"To put on a monthly line of ships to ply between the United States and Buenos Ayres, and to make no stops on the voyage south of the equator. His offer was to perform the service $100,000 Argentine gold per annum, making twelve trips a year $8,333.33⅓ each, performing the voyage without accidents beyond reasonable control, in twenty-five days from New York to Buenos Ayres. He then succeeded in getting the written guarantees of the foreign office and the minister of the interior, that they would favor and aid the enterprise.

Recently, however, as will be seen from the annexed correspondence, the whole subject was discussed at a cabinet meeting, receiving the sanction of the president and all the ministers. This makes a finality of it, so far as the government is concerned, and you will see that the minister of the interior is authorized to pay $10,000 per trip, Argentine gold, which is worth about 3½ per cent. less than our standard.

It is to be hoped the contract will be closed at once.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

BAYLISS W. HANNA.

List of inclosures:

1. Minister Castro to Mr. Hanna.
2. Mr. Hanna to Minister Castro.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

The minister of foreign affairs of the Argentine Republic sends friendly greetings to his excellency the minister resident of the United States and has the satisfaction, in view of his deep personal interest in the matter, to inform him that the president of the republic at a recent cabinet meeting presented for its consideration the pending project of Mr. W. P. Tisdel relative to a direct line of steamers from New York to Buenos Ayres, accepting it in general terms and authorizing the minister of the interior to grant said line a subsidy, not to exceed $10,000 Argentine gold per month, the subsidy to continue for ten years. On the opening of Congress the president will submit the agreement to be made with the company represented by Mr. Tisdel, asking its approval.

December 29, 1886.

UNITED STATES LEGATION, BUENOS AYRES, December 30, 1886.

MR. MINISTER: Your esteemed communication of yesterday, informing this legation of the action of his excellency the president of the Argentine Republic, at a late cabinet meeting of his distinguished ministers, accepting the proposition of a United States steamship company, as represented by Mr. W. P. Tisdel, to put out a line of vessels to be operated between New York and Buenos Ayres, directly has given me very great satisfaction.

This determination on the part of your enlightened government not only furnishes additional proof of its broad and liberal spirit but also of its undoubted good-will toward the Government and people of the United States and its desire to engage in freer and more enlarged commercial relations with them. Reciprocity is the gateway of our success, and it can and will be opened at last.

United States and the Argentine Republic, one in the north and the other in the south of this vast continent, constructed on the same foundations, both free republics, which have won the respect of the civilized world for their achievements in the liberal education of the people, their triumphs in the arts of peace and the combined and persistent efforts to elevate the standard of "all the governments of the people by the people and for the people," are thus united by a bond which must keep them close together, not only in respect, faith, and sympathy, but also in commercial reciprocity, the best and fullest expression of such decided affinities.

I have no doubt whatever that when our two countries have a better mail service and more rapid and reliable methods of communication a new era will dawn upon us and that every political barrier which now hinders our progress will be removed by mutual popular concessions and that we will be in trade what we are in sentiment, essentially bound up together in the struggle and triumphs of a common destiny.

Allow me again to renew the assurances of my very high consideration, and believe me, sir,

Your obedient servant,

BAYLISS W. HANNA.

Dr. DON N. QUIRNO CASTRO, Minister, &c.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate is closed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose the matter is now open for debate under the five-minute rule. I understand some gentlemen have some amendments to propose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the committee rise to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order until the five-minute debate has been entered upon.

Mr. BURROWS. It is now half past 5 o'clock, and I wish to suggest to my friend from Georgia the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be non-concurred in, the previous question be considered as ordered, and the vote taken at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BLOUNT. If there is no objection I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the committee rise and report the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HATCH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and had directed him to report the same back with various recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow night be set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Labor. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Who demands the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House, if the gentleman from Georgia will withhold the motion, some personal requests of members, and also some bills for reference.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose my friend from Georgia does not move to adjourn without it being understood that the arrangement agreed upon in committee is to be carried out.

Mr. BLOUNT. The agreement, of course, will be adhered to.

Mr. BURROWS. Then it is understood that the previous question is considered as ordered, and that the vote will be taken at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BLOUNT. That was the understanding.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 10802, the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Senate amendments ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. All points of order are reserved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Sergt. George Bromley, late of the United States Army, without leaving copies on file.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, for the remainder of the week, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill (S. 2797) granting a pension to Lizzie Wright Owen was erroneously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It should be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 24, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FISHING RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels, in certain cases, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose it is hardly necessary to read the substitute. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference thereon, and that the amendment of the House and the bill of the Senate be printed together for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the bill and the amendment be printed together.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. FRYE, and Mr. MORGAN were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by Ransom Reed Post, No. 113, Grand Army of the Republic, of Marysville, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Daniels Post, No. 500, Grand Army of the Republic, of Xenia, Ohio; resolutions adopted by I. Donafin Post, No. 52, Grand Army of the Republic, of Hicksville, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Brooks Post, No. 2, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bristolville, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Zeller Hamilton Post, No. 260, Grand Army of the Republic, of Middlepoint, Ohio; resolutions adopted by James A. Choate Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Napoleon, Ohio; a petition of soldiers, sailors, and marines, citizens of Ohio; a petition of J. C. McCoy Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, of Columbus, Ohio; and a petition of Billy Bauer Post, No. 537, Grand Army of the Republic, at Springborough, Ohio, urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON presented resolutions adopted by Grand Army of the Republic Post, No. 338, of Union, Iowa; resolutions adopted by Burnside Post, No. 56, Grand Army of the Republic, of Shenandoah, Iowa; resolutions adopted by Anderson Post, No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, of Waterloo, Iowa; resolutions adopted by I. M. Huston Post, No. 394, Grand Army of the Republic, of Victor, Iowa; a preamble and resolutions adopted by Allison Post, No. 34, Grand Army of the Republic, of Audubon, Iowa; and resolutions adopted by Don. A. Carpenter Post, No. 191, Grand Army of the Republic, of Olin, Iowa, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Y.; and a petition of Sawyer Post, No. 333, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by Moultrie Post, No. 318, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, located at Sullivan, Ill.; a resolution adopted by Oregon Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, of Oregon, Ill.; resolutions adopted by Rutland Post, No. 292, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, located at Rutland, Ill.; and resolutions adopted by R. K. McCoy Post, No. 311, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Clayton, Ill., favoring the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a memorial of the Rhode Island Radical Peace Society, remonstrating against the appropriation of the people's money for coast defenses and the construction of war vessels; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Ballou Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, at Central Falls, R. I.; a petition of Slocum Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Providence, R. I.; a petition of Smith Post, No. 9, Grand Army of the Republic, at Woonsocket, R. I.; a petition of Arnold Post, No. 4, Grand Army of the Republic, at Providence, R. I.; resolution adopted by Tower Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, at Pawtucket, R. I.; resolution adopted by Bucklin Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, at East Providence, R. I., and a petition of Burnside Post, No. 2, Grand Army of the Republic, at Shannock, R. I., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FARWELL presented a petition of Hurley Wayne Post, No. 281, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; a petition of Charles A. Chatfield Post, No. 590, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; a petition of John A. Logan Post, No. 540, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; a petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post, No. 438, Department of Illinois; and a petition of Albert Wood Post, No. 175, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON presented resolutions adopted by B. J. Crosswait Post, No. 150, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, and a resolution adopted by Thomas J. Harrison Post, No. 30, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, favoring the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of James A. Garfield Post, No. 46, Grand Army of the Republic, of Maine, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Anna E. Lord, administratrix of Charles H. Lord, praying for an appropriation of $700 due Charles H. Lord as depositary of public money in Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANDERSON presented resolutions adopted by Dick Yates Post, No. 41, Grand Army of the Republic, of Waco, Nebr.; petition of Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Omaha, Nebr.; a resolution adopted by Indianola Post, No. 154, Grand Army of the Republic, of Indianola, Nebr.; and a petition of Kirkwood Post, No. 106, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the dependent relative and service pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of Jones Post, No. 204, Grand Army of the Republic, of Coudersport, Pa.; a petition of McNeil Post, No. 447, Grand Army of the Republic, of North Clarendon, Pa.; a petition of Cribbs Post, No. 276, Grand Army of the Republic, of Greensburg, Pa.; a petition of Potts Post, No. 62, Grand Army of the Republic, of Altoona, Pa.; a petition of Captain John Q. Snyder Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Liverpool, Pa.; a petition of Charles Sumner Post, No. 9, Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, D. C.; a petition of John M. Phipps Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Clintonville, Pa.; a petition of Gowen Post, No. 23, Grand Army of the Republic, of Pottsville, Pa.; and a petition of Watkins Post, No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, of Towanda, Pa., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the reduction of the duty on sugar unless a corresponding reduction be also made in the rate of duty on molasses; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SABIN presented a petition of Grand Army Post, No. 141, Department of Minnesota; a petition of Peller Post, No. 89, Grand Army of the Republic, of Hastings, Minn.; a petition of Austin D. Carroll Post, No. 107, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, of Plainview, Minn.; a petition of A. E. Welch Post, No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, of Red Wing, Minn., and a petition of the seventh annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented resolutions adopted by Allison Post, No. 34, Grand Army of the Republic, of Audubon, Iowa; resolutions adopted by David Harding Post, No. 28, Grand Army of the Republic, of Allerton, Iowa; and resolutions adopted by Burnside Post, No. 56, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I also present the petition of James Birmingham and 32 others, in favor of the passage of a bill for the relief of the settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in which the petitioners aver that they are citizens of the Des Moines Valley, in the State of Iowa, and believe that the sole title of the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company is a fraud, as shown by the records of the State of Iowa; further, that the action of Congress for the past eight years sustains the theory that the title is in the United States, and that nothing short of some bill for the Government to resume the lands or give the settlers the right to go into the courts and obtain their rights can ever settle the controversy. They therefore pray for the defeat of House bill 9809, in relation to this matter, now pending.

I also present a like petition from F. C. Seagren and 35 others, a like petition from W. W. Clark and 19 others, and a like petition from S. Pepper and 53 others.

I move that these petitions lie on the table, inasmuch as the bill has been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of John A. Logan Post, No. 64, Grand Army of the Republic, of Saint James, Minn., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB presented resolutions adopted by Buffalo Post, No. 287, Grand Army of the Republic, of Buffalo, Kans., and a resolution adopted by Dexter Post, No. 133, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, favoring the passage of what is known as the dependent disabled pensioners' bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I present two petitions numerously signed by people who are engaged in the navigation of Arthur Kill, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 3183, amending the act authorizing the construction of Arthur Kill bridge. The petitions are numerously signed, and I move that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY presented resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of Connecticut, urging that liberal appropriations be made for seacoast defenses; which were referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the twentieth annual encampment of the Department of Connecticut, Grand Army of the Republic; resolutions adopted by Philo M. Trowbridge Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Woodbury, Conn.; resolutions adopted by Thomas M. Redshaw Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ansonia, Conn.; resolutions adopted by Merriam Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Meriden, Conn.; resolutions adopted by D. C. Rodman Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of East Hartford, Conn.; resolutions adopted by Elias Howe, jr., Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bridgeport, Conn.; and resolutions adopted by Mather Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Deep River, Conn., in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PAYNE presented a petition of 250 citizens of Quaker City, Ohio, representing that Washington is the paradise of saloon-keepers, and praying that the Senators from Ohio vote for the bill introduced by Senator COLQUITT granting to the people of the District of Columbia the right of local option; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 920) to confer brevet promotion on officers of the United States Army particularly distinguished by heroic action in Indian warfare, and for other purposes, to report it adversely, as a similar bill has been reported and is on the Calendar. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 21) defining the status of medical officers in the Army of volunteer service, to report it adversely, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed, for the reason that a bill for that purpose has already passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, asking for an appropriation for the enlargement of Fort Riley with a view of establishing at that post a school for the training of the cavalry and light artillery arms of the service, to report them back. The subject-matter having been acted upon, the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolutions.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for a term of court at Duluth, Minn., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4852) granting a pension to William Hutchison, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill (for renewal of the Signal-Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory), reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations with the accompanying papers, and that it be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8594) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 82) for the relief of Luther F. Warder, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 234) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Waters, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, reported it with amendments.

RIVER AND HARBOR ACTS.

Mr. CONGER. At my request yesterday the Senate gave unanimous consent to let the resolution reported from the Committee on Printing by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] providing for the publication of river and harbor acts lie over until this morning for the purpose of enabling me to prepare an amendment. I desire now to offer an amendment which I wish to make to that resolution, after consultation with the engineer department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the words "War Department" in the resolution it is proposed to insert:

And said compilation shall be accompanied by an appendix containing a tabulated statement of each annual appropriation and the allotment for each improvement by States, when practicable, together with a statement giving the total annual amount for all the improvements by States, and also the aggregate of all the appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say in regard to it that in the Engineer Department those statements are in a shape where they can be prepared for printing, and this amendment is proposed with the approval of the Engineer Department.

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending order of business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending order of business is reports of standing or select committees.

Mr. HOAR. I desire simply to introduce a resolution when that order is reached.

Mr. CONGER. This is part of the morning business. By unanimous consent the resolution was passed over yesterday morning to come up this morning. It is a resolution reported from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interfere. I only wanted to save my right to submit a resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that my amendment may be acted upon now. There will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution referred to by him.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution reported from the Committee on Printing yesterday, and amended to read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the usual number of copies of "A compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors," including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and that there be printed in addition to said usual number 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department, said compilation to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution comes over from yesterday.

Mr. HARRIS. Does it come over under objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes over under objection. It is not now in order. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed to its consideration at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. If it leads to no debate I shall not object, but I will if it leads to debate and the consumption of time.

Mr. CONGER. The RECORD says it comes over on objection, and the Chair says it comes over on objection; but I asked unanimous consent that it should go over until to-day, holding its place, which it did, for the purpose of making this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is now asking unanimous consent of the Senate for that purpose. In an orderly way it would come after the call for resolutions. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the words "War Department" in the resolution it is proposed to insert:

And said compilation shall be accompanied by an appendix containing a tabulated statement of each annual appropriation and an allotment for each improvement by States, when practicable, together with a statement giving the total annual amount for all the improvements by States, and also the aggregate of all the appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the reply of the Civil Service Commissioners to Senate resolution of July 2, 1886, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That there be printed 500 additional copies of the report of the reply of the Civil Service Commissioners to Senate resolution of July 22, 1886, for the use of said commission.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVARTS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON ADDITIONAL LIBRARY ACCOMMODATIONS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit during the coming recess of Congress, and that any necessary expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to say a single word. The work on the new Library building is now rapidly going on, and I have the authority of the commission which has the work in charge for this resolution. They desire, as well as the committee itself, that we should be in continuous existence for reference and consultation. We have found it quite necessary during the present session, and it may be necessary during the vacation.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1886 be printed, and that there be printed 11,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following for consideration:

Notice is hereby given that on the next day of the sitting of the Senate I shall move the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session the Senate, at the conclusion of the morning business, will consider Senate bills favorably reported by the committees until 2 o'clock on each alternate day, and House bills on the other alternate day, commencing first with the Senate bills.

And so to suspend and modify for the time being Rules VIII and IX of the Senate, for the purpose of enabling, and so far only as to enable, the Senate to facilitate the disposal of its business in the manner provided in the resolution proposed.

WM. MAHONE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved as the judgment of the Senate, That an amendment to the Constitution for the election, directly by the voters, of United States Senators should be submitted to the people for their action.

I desire that the resolution lie over until to-morrow, when I propose to call it up and submit a few remarks to the Senate on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HOAR. I submit in behalf of the Librarian of Congress his annual report for the year 1886; and I offer the following resolution, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the annual report of the Librarian of Congress be printed, and that 500 additional copies, with covers, be printed for distribution by the Librarian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That falls within the rule and a reference is not required. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I was not quite sure whether it came within the rule or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It falls far within the rule, the Chair happens to remember. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I was not sure that it came within the rule, it being a direction to print copies for the use of the Librarian and not merely for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the cost of printing proposed is less than $500 the printing may be ordered by the Senate without a reference to the Committee on Printing.

WAREHOUSE ENTRIES IN BOSTON CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the Senate all reports of Mark Harden, special agent, made since July, 1886, in regard to any alteration in the dates of liquidation of warehouse entries in the custom-house at Boston, Mass., together with copies and full statements of all reports from, correspondence with, and communications with the collector of said port in regard thereto, whether said correspondence were had with the said Secretary of the Treasury or the Assistant Secretary, a copy of a letter from William W. Castle to said special agent, forwarded by said agent to the Department; and that the Secretary further inform the Senate from whom said special agent received information of said alterations, and what persons made said alterations or directed or were responsible therefor, and whether said special agent has been since said report transferred in relation to said custom-house to another customs district, and whether the persons from whom information of said alterations was received have been since removed from office, and whether the persons making such alterations or responsible therefor or any of them have since been promoted, and upon whose advice or recommendation such transfers, removals, or promotions have been made.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I introduced this morning a resolution of inquiry directed to the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to certain transactions in the Boston custom-house, which was passed by the Senate. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider that resolution and to state as my reason for entering the motion that I have received a telegram from the collector of the port of Boston requesting that that resolution be withheld until certain letters which he has sent to Washington shall be received; and at his request—I have no doubt he will prefer himself to have the resolution adopted by the Senate—I enter the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer a resolution to go over until to-morrow on a privileged question. I do not ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, be, and he hereby is, chosen President pro tempore of the Senate, to take effect at 1 o'clock afternoon, on the 26th instant, at which time the resignation of JOHN SHERMAN, the present President pro tempore of the Senate, will take effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the House the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Fla., a port of entry.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BRAGG, Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio, and Mr. NEGLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 24, 1887.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that resolution will be concurred in. By some accident or other there is a provision in the bill which passed that ought not to be there.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the joint resolution in regard to the Pacific railroads be assigned for consideration immediately after the conclusion of the pleuro-pneumonia bill.

I desire to say before that question is submitted to the Senate that the pleuro-pneumonia bill will take a great part of the day, perhaps all and perhaps not all. At the conclusion of that bill I understand the Pensions Committee have some pension cases ready, so that if the joint resolution is taken up to-day I propose to have it laid aside informally so that it will not be called up for action until 2 o'clock tomorrow, and I shall then, if it is taken up, if the Senate give this consent, ask the Senate to remain in session until it is disposed of to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Pacific railroad bill or resolution, to which he refers, be taken up after the disposition of the pending bill, the unfinished business of the day.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to refer to the so-called funding bill or to the resolution requiring an investigation?

Mr. HOAR. The House of Representatives passed a joint resolution. The Judiciary Committee proposed to amend that by adding some other provisions to it and by changing it into a bill, as the investigation requires the authority of law for the summoning of witnesses, administering oaths, and incurring certain expenses. That is the measure to which I refer.

Mr. HARRIS. It is the resolution then as amended by the committee that the Senator proposes to consider to-morrow?

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? ["None."] The Chair hears none; and it will be the order of the Senate, that after the disposition of the pending unfinished business the joint resolution shall be considered.

Mr. ALLISON. It ought to be understood that if it is for the convenience of the Senate that we shall take a recess for an hour or two to-morrow instead of sitting continuously that that will be allowed.

Mr. HOAR. I merely said I would ask that it be concluded to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The right to take a recess is reserved under the rules, at any rate. The Senate can do what is suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

LAND GRANT RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business the Calendar under the Harris rule is in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7021, Order of Business 1455, which is——

Mr. HARRIS. That is a bill informally passed over heretofore?

Mr. PLUMB. It was informally passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas, pending the Calendar under the Harris rule, moves——

Mr. PLUMB. This bill really comes under the Harris rule.

Mr. HARRIS. It comes under the rule. The bill was informally passed over, holding its place on the Calendar. I suppose on the mere request of the Senator the bill would be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar, under the Harris rule, is now before the Senate, and the bill referred to by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land-grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

Mr. PLUMB. If it is in order I should like to move that the formal reading of the bill be omitted, and that it be read for amendment, and I will offer, as the sections are read, the amendments which have been agreed upon by the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read at length once, and it is now quite in order for the Senator to submit his amendments.

Mr. PLUMB. I then move, in section 1, line 5 of the text of the bill, to strike out the word "heretofore" before the word "made," and then in line 6, after the word "railroads," to strike out the words "within the State of Kansas" and insert "and heretofore unadjusted;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately adjust, or cause to be adjusted, each of the railroad land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and heretofore unadjusted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to insert in lieu of section 2 of the bill the text which I send to the desk. I will state that this bill was under consideration for a considerable length of time by the Committee on Public Lands during the last session of the present Congress, and resulted in the reporting of the bill on the Calendar Order of Business 1455, and also in the report of a substitute as found at Calendar number 1652. The subject has received consideration since that time, and in connection with members of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House in the adjustment of differences, and so on, which have resulted in the amendments which I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are these amendments made to the substitute or to the original bill?

Mr. PLUMB. They are made to the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original text?

Mr. PLUMB. The original text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2, and to insert:

SEC. 2. That if it shall appear upon the completion of such adjustments, respectively, or sooner, that lands have been from any cause heretofore erroneously certified or patented by the United States, or by any State, to or for the use or benefit of any company claiming by, through, or under grant from the United States to aid in the construction of a railroad, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to thereupon demand from such company a relinquishment or reconveyance to the United States of all such lands whether within granted or indemnity limits, and if such company shall neglect or fail to so reconvey such lands to the United States within ninety days after the aforesaid demand shall have been made, it shall thereupon be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence and prosecute in the proper courts the necessary proceedings to cancel all patents, certification, or other evidence of title heretofore issued for such lands, and to restore the title thereof to the United States: Provided, That the lands so erroneously conveyed shall be excepted from the provisions of this section which have been sold by such company to citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, or which at the date of any sale by such company were in the possession of any person claiming the same under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and which claims have since been asserted in good faith, and when such claimants did not subsequently purchase from the aforesaid company, or which had been settled upon under the homestead and pre-emption laws by bona fide settlers prior to the date when the rights of such company attached to the adjacent lands, as to which excepted lands the Secretary shall demand a release to the United States from the said company free from all incumbrances by or through such company, and the said pre-emption or homestead claimants shall be permitted to perfect their proofs and entries and to receive their patent, except as to such settlers as voluntarily abandoned such entries, and except, also, as to such as have located or made entry of other lands in lieu of the lands so abandoned.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas whether the bill relates exclusively to lands within the State of Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. It does not as amended.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is it general?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, general; but it is believed that it will operate chiefly upon lands in that State and in Colorado because of special circumstances attending the certifications in those States.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have not had an opportunity to look at the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. It is a bill which has been on the Calendar since the last session. It is really a combination of the sections of the original bills to which I have referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute for section 3.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That all lands, except those mentioned in the foregoing section, which have been so erroneously certified or patented as aforesaid, and which have been sold by the grantee company to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, the person or persons so purchasing, his heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to the land so purchased, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase at the proper local land office within such time and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, after the grants respectively shall have been adjusted and patents of the United States shall issue therefor, and shall relate back to the date of the original certification or patenting, and the Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the United States, shall demand payment from the company which has so disposed of such lands of an amount equal to the Government price of similar lands, and in case of neglect or refusal of such company to make payment as hereafter specified within ninety days after the demand shall have been made, the Attorney-General shall cause suit or suits to be brought against such company for the said amount: Provided, That all lands so wrongfully certified or patented and not sold by the grantee company shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of under the public land laws: And provided, That any lands heretofore claimed by such company under grants by Congress which have not been certified or patented, and which upon a proper adjustment, as required by this act, shall be found not to belong to such company, shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of under the public land laws, and priority of right shall be given to bona fide settlers residing thereon: And provided, That all lands heretofore erroneously certified or patented to or for the benefit of any company as aforesaid, and by such company sold to aliens, shall revert to the United States and be disposed of under the public land laws: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent any purchaser of lands erroneously withdrawn, certified, or patented as aforesaid, from recovering the purchase money therefor from the grantee company less the amount paid to the United States by such company as by this act required: And provided, That a mortgage or pledge of said lands by the company shall not be considered as a sale for the purposes of this act, nor shall this act be construed as a declaration of forfeiture of any portion of any land grant for conditions broken, or as authorizing an entry for the same, or as a waiver of any rights that the United States may have to enter for breach of said conditions and to forfeit any such grant.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Under what order are we proceeding in the consideration of this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the eighth rule, with five minutes discussion.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will these amendments be printed and the bill lie over until we have an opportunity to look at them?

Mr. PLUMB. This has been on the Calendar of the Senate for now over eight months—since the 3d day of last June.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Not these amendments which are being offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. The same thing has been practically on the Calendar of the Senate. This brings together, for convenience purely, the provisions of two separate sections, and is in no sense a change in any material way of the bill as it stands on the Calendar to-day.

Mr. MCMILLAN. But these are certainly new amendments offered by the Senator from Kansas at present, and the bill is just taken up on the call of case on the Calendar under the general rule.

We ought to have an opportunity of examining these amendments certainly, because if the law is general in its provisions these amendments involve very important rights to settlers and to persons claiming lands, as well as to the companies concerned. We certainly should have an opportunity of having these amendments printed, and of examining them. I have no objection to having them all offered, and then having them printed.

Mr. PLUMB. This bill has been on the Calendar for several months, and I do not think there will be anything gained by having it go over.

Mr. MCMILLAN. After all the amendments are offered I shall ask that they be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLAN. After all the amendments are offered by the Senator and acted on I shall ask to have them printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I will complete the amendments, and then the Senator can, if he wishes, interpose an objection.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire, as these amendments are offered, that they be printed, and that we have an opportunity of examining them before they are adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course the bill will be subject to amendment in the Senate. The Senator will gain the object he wishes by not objecting now to the adoption of the amendments, because, of course, they have to go to the other House.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Perhaps the amendments had better not be adopted until we have an opportunity to examine them, because there may be objection to them.

Mr. PLUMB. They will have to be acted upon in the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If they are not adopted amendments to them will not be reqired.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Then I object to the consideration of the bill, and move that the amendments be printed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill, the objection of the Senator from Minnesota to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill, the objection of the Senator from Minnesota to the contrary notwithstanding. The question is on that motion.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is that debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I merely desired to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of the legislation which is going on.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to state the reason why I desire to have further time to consider this matter. The title of the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I can not consent to waste the morning hour in debate over this matter or any other if I can prevent it. I must object to discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 42, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—42.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Edmunds, | Kenna, | Spooner, |
| Beck, | Farwell, | Manderson, | Teller, |
| Berry, | Frye, | Maxey, | Vance, |
| Blackburn, | George, | Miller, | Van Wyck, |
| Cameron, | Gorman, | Morgan, | Vest, |
| Cockrell, | Gray, | Morrill, | Voorhees, |
| Coke, | Hampton, | Palmer, | Walthall, |
| Conger, | Harris, | Platt, | Whitthorne, |
| Cullom, | Harrison, | Pugh, | Wilson of Iowa. |
| Dawes, | Ingalls, | Saulsbury, | |
| Dolph, | Jones of Arkansas, | Sawyer, | |

NAYS—8.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Brown, | Cheney, | McMillan, | Sherman, |
| Butler, | Hawley, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Williams. |

ABSENT—26.

| Camden, | Hale, | Payne, | Wilson of Md. |
| Chace, | Hoar, | Plumb, | |
| Colquitt, | Jones of Florida, | Ransom, | |

So the motion to proceed with the consideration of the bill was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say now that after the adoption of the amendments, if they shall be adopted, I shall myself ask to have them all printed and the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator propose that the bill shall be reported to the Senate and the amendments adopted there or simply that it go over as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PLUMB. As in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now send to the desk what is section 3 of the bill reported from the committee, which I ask shall be adopted in place of section 4 of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 4 of the text of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 4. That where any said company shall have sold to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, as a part of its grant, lands not conveyed to or for the use of such company, said lands being the numbered sections prescribed in the grant, and being coterminous with the constructed parts of said road, and where the lands so sold are for any reason excepted from the operation of the grant to said company, it shall be lawful for said company to make payment to the United States for said lands at the ordinary Government price for like lands, and thereupon patents shall issue therefor to said company, which shall inure to the benefit of its purchasers; or said purchasers may themselves make said payment, and thereupon receive patents in their own names: Provided, That all lands shall be excepted from the provisions of this section which at the date of such sales were in the occupation of adverse claimants under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and whose claims and occupation have since been continued in accordance with law, and where said claimants have not purchased the railroad title, as to which excepted lands the said pre-emption and homestead claimants shall be permitted to perfect their proofs and entries and receive patents therefor: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to lands settled upon subsequent to the 1st day of December, 1882, by persons claiming to enter the same under the settlement laws of the United States, as to which lands the parties claiming the same as aforesaid shall be entitled to prove up and enter as in other like cases.

SEC. 5. That all purchasers from the Government whose entries have been canceled because in conflict with the grant to a railroad company, which grant shall have afterwards been forfeited, or when the title to the same is still in the Government and free from the right of said railroad company or other person, and in which cases the purchase-money is still retained by the Government, shall have the right to receive a patent for the land so purchased without further payment.

Mr. CONGER. I understand these amendments are to be printed before we act on them.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that they be adopted now, and then I propose that they be printed with the bill as amended and go over until to-morrow to be acted on in the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I think they should be offered as amendments and not adopted now. With that understanding I voted to take up the bill, and on that statement, too.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator did not do it on my statement.

Mr. CONGER. It was stated to me that the amendments were to be offered and printed and laid over until to-morrow. I do not wish to vote on these amendments that have not even been read, and many other Senators are in the same condition.

Mr. PLUMB. These amendments have been on the Senate Calendar since last summer. They are part of Senate bill 2807.

Mr. CONGER. Things so old can not be remembered by the most painstaking Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly not by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I claim to be a painstaking Senator. If the Senator meant that as an insinuation that I am not I hope he will withdraw it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLUMB. I will take that back in the interest of the public. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to assemble really the parts of this bill from the two bills which have been on the Calendar of the Senate since last summer, and then let the compilation thus made be printed and go over.

Mr. CONGER. But the Senator wants the amendments adopted now, while the understanding on which the bill was taken up was that the amendments would be offered and then the bill printed as it would be when amended.

Mr. PLUMB. They will be liable to a motion to reconsider to-morrow. There is no difference practically.

Mr. CONGER. But had they better not be acted on to-morrow when we shall have had a chance to know something about them.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well; I have no objection to that, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie over.

Mr. PLUMB. The trouble is that there will be no bill printed consecutively until these amendments are adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to Senators——

Mr. PLUMB. If I can have the bill printed separately as it will be with these amendments in, so as as to make one connected measure, I shall be satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Michigan that if the amendments are allowed to be offered in the order in which they will come they can be printed as in the nature of a single amendment to take the place of the bill, and probably that would obviate the difficulty.

Mr. CONGER. That was what I desired; that the amendments may be offered but not adopted, and the bill printed as it would be if the amendments were adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that. I was only endeavoring to get the amendments together in such shape that they would appear as adopted continuously.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That was just the request I made originally, and the Senator from Kansas might have saved all this time if he had consented to it.

Mr. PLUMB. I am obliged to the Senator from Michigan; I always am. Everything he says is inspired by that good nature which we all know he possesses.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator understands the matter sufficiently.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Minnesota that, if these amendments are agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and the bill is then printed before being reported to the Senate, Senators can ask a separate vote on any or all of the amendments when the bill is reported to the Senate, and test the question upon them then and there as well as to do it now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I know that is so, but I would rather see the amendments before I vote on them. That is the custom I have been used to for some years, and other Senators feel the same way.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think this matter has been arranged.

Mr. PLUMB. I will move at the proper time that this bill be printed as it will stand with the amendments, leaving out that which is left out of the original bill on the theory that the amendments have been adopted, so that the bill will be exactly as the committee propose to have it. Therefore, I move to strike out, in section 5, line 2, the word "the" before "State," and in the same line, after "State," the words "of Kansas" and insert "any;" so as to read:

That no more lands shall be certified or conveyed to any State, &c.

Then strike out, in line 3, the word "railroad" before the word "companies." That will make that section as it is designed to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That no more lands shall be certified or conveyed to any State, or to any corporation or individual, for the benefit of either of the companies herein mentioned, by the Department of the Interior, until the said grants, respectively, shall have been adjusted as by this act required.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification will be considered as agreed to. The amendment will be received and not acted on according to the agreement.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand that that amendment is agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so declare. The Chair stated that the proposed modification of the amendment would be considered as agreed to, and the amendments stand without being agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I then move to add, at the close of section 5, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas submits an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following proviso at the close of section 5:

Provided further, That where any such lands have been sold and conveyed as the property of any railroad company for State and county taxes thereon, the purchaser thereof shall have the prior right, which shall continue for one year from the approval of this act, and no longer, to purchase such lands from the United States at the Government price, and patents for such lands shall thereupon issue: Provided, That said lands were not previous to or at the time of the taking effect of such grant in the possession of or subject to the right of any actual settler.

Mr. PLUMB. That amendment I offer on my own responsibility, and not from the committee. The other amendments are committee amendments. Now, I ask that this bill as proposed to be amended as a whole be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. PLUMB. And that the bill retain its place upon the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. Will the proposed amendments be printed?

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the bill as proposed to be amended as a whole be printed. The other text is already on the Calendar as I have stated. That will bring the bill together in exactly the shape it is proposed to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that no part of the amendments is adopted, but the bill as intended to stand by the committee will be printed as in the nature of an amendment proposed by the committee in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. CONGER. The proposed amendments should be indicated in some way by italics or brackets.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will no doubt attend to that. The order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1949, which is in the same condition as to the rule under which the Senate is operating as the bill just considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has it been passed over?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir. It is a House bill which was passed over without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to will be stated, having been passed over informally on a previous call.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that I have any objection to every provision the Senator from Kansas proposes, but I am acting under instructions from the Legislature of my State on these questions, and I wish to see the bill to see whether it conflicts with any of the views expressed by the Legislature. That is all the purpose I have.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, insisted upon by the Senate; that it insisted upon its amendments to the thirty-ninth, fifty-fifth, fifty-eighth, and one hundred and seventy-ninth amendments of the Senate to the bill disagreed to by the Senate; that it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that it had appointed Mr. RANDALL, Mr. FORNEY, and Mr. RYAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] asks the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1949, House bill 679, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill comes before the Senate under the Harris rule.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

An amendment was reported by the Committee on Public Lands to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the laws of the United States, except those providing for pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land entries of the public lands, are hereby extended over the unorganized territory south of the States of Kansas and Colorado, and between the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico, and north of Texas, known as the Public Land Strip; and that for the purpose of the execution of said laws said Public Land Strip is hereby created a land district and is attached to the judicial district of Kansas; and the subdivisional lines of townships in said Public Land Strip may be surveyed under current appropriations for the surveying service, the work to be done under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. Until the establishment of civil government in said territory, lands therein may be entered for town-site purposes, for the several use and benefit of the occupants of such town-sites, by such trustee or trustees as may be named by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, such entries to be made under the provisions of section 2387 of the Revised Statutes, as near as may be; and when such entries shall have been made, the Secretary of the Interior shall provide by regulation for the proper execution of the trust in favor of the inhabitants of the town-site, including the survey of the land into lots, according to the spirit and intent of said section 2387 of the Revised Statutes, whereby the same result would be reached as though the entry had been made by a county judge, and the disposal of the lots in such town-site, and the proceeds of the sale thereof, had been prescribed by the legislative authority of a State or Territory: Provided, That no more than 320 acres shall be embraced in one town-site entry.

Mr. VOORHEES. I gave notice some days ago of an amendment which I intended to propose, and which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "laws," in line 9 of the proposed amendment of the committee, and in lieu thereof to insert:

All that portion of the State of Kansas lying south of the sixth standard parallel south, and west of the line between ranges thirty and thirty-one west of the sixth principal meridian, and the tract of unorganized territory bounded on the north by the States of Kansas and Colorado, on the east by the Indian Territory, on the south by the State of Texas, and on the west by the Territory of New Mexico, be, and are hereby, constituted a new and separate land district, to be called the Cimarron land district.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. That will make necessary the insertion after the word "interior," in line 15, of the words:

Said Public Land Strip is hereby attached to the judicial district of Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana strikes out that part.

Mr. PLUMB. I see that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana stikes out more than he designed, I think. It should have been to strike out all after the word "laws," in line 9, down to and including the word "Kansas," in line 11.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. PLUMB. It should be to strike out all after the word "laws," in line 9, to and including the word "Kansas," in line 11.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so corrected.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, after the word "laws," it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "Kansas," in line 11, as follows:

Said Public Land Strip is hereby created a land district and is attached to the judicial district of Kansas.

And to insert in lieu thereof what has already been read.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I move to insert, after the word "Interior," in line 15 of the committee's amendment:

And said Public Land Strip is hereby attached to the judicial district of Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. With the permission of the Senator from Kansas, I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC. —. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a register and a receiver of public moneys for the land district hereinbefore created; and said officers shall reside in the place where said land office is located, and shall have the same powers and shall discharge similiar duties and receive the same fees and emoluments as other officers charged with like duties in the other land offices in the State of Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Will this district be under the surveyor-general of Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. There is no surveyor-general in Kansas and has not been for several years. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is ex officio surveyor-general of any State or Territory that has no surveyor-general.

Mr. CONGER. It needs no provision on that point.

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the bill be read as it stands amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended:

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. BERRY were appointed.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next House bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Order of Business 2065 was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A Senate bill?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; a House bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the bill which has been announced be considered and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to by the Senator from Mississippi was objected to on a former call.

Mr. GEORGE. But it has been restored to its place by unanimous consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator wait until the bill under consideration is finished?

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; but the bill I refer to should be called next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is a Senate bill of a similar character on the Calendar. I move that it be indefinitely postponed. I think it is Order of Business 2097.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 3126) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army was postponed indefinitely.

COURTS AT MISSISSIPPI CITY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] referred will now be taken up.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment heretofore proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] which has been read.

Mr. GEORGE. It was an amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. The last amendment submitted by the Judiciary Committee is a substitute for all other amendments before suggested by the committee. The last amendment is a substitute for the first amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be read. It has not yet been read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendments reported by Mr. GEORGE from the Committee on the Judiciary to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the following:

That the counties of Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Marion, Perry, and Green, being a part of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, shall be known as the southern division of said district; and circuit and district courts for the transaction of business pertaining to the persons and property in said southern division shall be held at Mississippi City on the third Mondays of February and August in each year.

SEC. 2. That the said courts to be held at Mississippi City as provided in section one of this act shall be possessed of and shall exercise all the powers and jurisdiction now possessed or exercised, or which may hereafter be granted to or exercised, by the circuit and district courts in said district now held at Jackson; and all laws regulating and defining how suits against persons or property located or found in judicial districts shall be brought shall be applicable to and govern the bringing of suits in said division; and all laws touching the removal of causes from State courts to United States courts shall apply to said courts hereby established; but all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said southern district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the clerks of the courts now held at Jackson, on demand of either party to any suit now pending in either of said courts, and properly belonging to the court at Mississippi City, to make out and certify a copy of the record and proceedings in such suit, and to transmit the same to the deputy clerk of the proper court at Mississippi City, who shall enter said cause on his docket, and the same shall be proceeded with as if it had been originally brought in said court. The fees for such transcript shall be paid by the party applying for the same.

SEC. 4. That the marshal and clerks of said southern district of Mississippi shall each appoint a deputy, who shall reside at Mississippi City.

SEC. 5. That the United States shall not be at any expense in providing for a building or room for the holding of the terms of said court.

SEC. 6. That whenever the circuit and district courts in the southern district of Mississippi shall be held at the same time and place, only one grand jury and the necessary number of petit jurors shall be summoned for both courts, and they shall be the grand and petit jurors for both said courts.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether this amendment was unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not remember any exception to it now. It was adopted by the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been suggested that my colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] was opposed to it, but I do not know what the fact is.

Mr. GEORGE. He does not oppose the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment to the bill and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

WILLIAM N. CANADY.

The bill (H. R. 6712) for the relief of William N. Canady was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the military record of William N. Canady, late a private in Company A, Eighth Regiment Iowa Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge, so that he may draw all arrears of pay, bounty, and other allowances to which he would be entitled had not the charge of manslaughter been made, and for which he was subsequently pardoned.

Mr. TELLER. We are in entire ignorance of what is going on in this part of the Chamber. We do not hear the number of the bill or the order of business. We might as well be in the lobby.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again ask Senators to resume their seats and preserve silence as much as possible, as bills are being rapidly passed.

Mr. TELLER. We neither know the contents of the bill, nor the number, nor the order of business.

The bill was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COOSA RIVER.

The bill (H. R. 3853) to authorize the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama to erect a bridge across the Coosa River was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 21, before the words "postal telegraph," to strike out "a," and in the same line, after the word "telegraph," to insert "and telephone lines;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama, a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Alabama, be, and is hereby, authorized to erect and maintain a bridge across the Coosa River in township 17, range 4 east, in the Coosa land district, or at such point near said township as has been selected by said railroad company for crossing said river with their railroad line, the said bridge to be of such height as not to interfere with the navigation of said river: Provided, That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for through passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal telegraph and telephone lines across said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 22, after the word "bridge," to strike out the following proviso:

And provided further, That before such bridge shall be constructed the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his approval, a detailed plan, showing the location of the bridge, and 5,000 feet in length of the river at this point, 3,000 feet above the bridge and 2,000 feet below it; the plan to show the topography of the banks, the contours of the bottom of the river, the lines of high and low water, and the direction of the current at low, high, and medium stages; and the said bridge shall be provided with a suitable draw, which shall be so located and of such proportions as not to interfere with existing or prospective navigation of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 1, to add:

And in case of any litigation concerning any alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river on account of said bridge the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States of either of said States in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches; and that all railway companies desiring to use the said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage over the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof and of all the approaches thereto, for a reasonable compensation to be paid to the owners of said bridge, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than 75 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and said spans shall not be less than 10 feet above high-water mark, measuring to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, except when trains are passing over the said bridge, for the passage of the boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the draw of said bridge when closed; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw after the passage of trains; and the said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 3:

SEC. 3. That the plan and location of said bridge, with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of the bridge and near thereto, exhibiting the depths and currents, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, and until he approve the plan and location of said bridge it shall not be built; but upon the approval of said plan by the Secretary of War the said company or corporation may proceed to the erection of said bridge in conformity with said approved plan; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the bill, to add:

And if said bridges shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. KENNA, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 34) to authorize the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 21, before the word "postal," to strike out "a;" and in line 22, after the word "telegraph," to insert the words "and telephone lines;" so as to make the section read:

That the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama, a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Alabama, be, and is hereby, authorized to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River, in the Coosa land district, at the point in or near township 14, range 6 east, which has been selected by the said railroad company for crossing said river with their railroad line, and where a bridge is now constructed, the said bridge to be of such height as not to interfere with the navigation of said river, and to be provided with a suitable draw: Provided, That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for through passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph and telephone lines across said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "bridge," in line 22, to strike out the following proviso:

And provided further, That before this act shall take effect said company shall submit to the Secretary of War the plans of said bridge, showing the existing structure and any additions or changes that may be contemplated; and that it shall be decided by the said Secretary that the bridge does not and will not obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the navigation of the Coosa River, due regard being had to the character of the proposed navigation of said stream.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section 1:

And in case of any litigation concerning any alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river on account of said bridge, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States of either of said States in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches; and that all railway companies desiring to use the said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage over the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof and of all the approaches thereto, for a reasonable compensation to be paid to the owners of said bridge, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 2:

That said bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than 75 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and said spans shall not be less than 10 feet above high-water mark, measuring to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, except when trains are passing over the said bridge, for the passage of the boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the draw of said bridge when closed; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw after the passage of trains; and the said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 3:

That the plan and location of said bridge, with a detailed map of the sound at the proposed site of the bridge and near thereto, exhibiting the depths and currents, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, and until he approve the plan and location of said bridge it shall not be built; but upon the approval of said plan by the Secretary of War the said company or corporation may proceed to the erection of said bridge in conformity with said approved plan; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the bill, to add:

And if said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. KENNA, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the committee report a substitute for the bill, I suggest that it is not worth while to read the bill stricken out, but only the amendment proposed by the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Claims will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say for the information of the Senator from Missouri and the Senate that the amendment has been introduced and passed here as a bill at the present session, but still it ought to be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I only want to save the reading of eight pages of the House bill.

Mr. HOAR. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert a substitute, but before concluding was interrupted by

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the Senator from New York to yield to me to pass a bill of some importance which will not require discussion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall object.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill under consideration and partly read may be concluded, the unfinished business being informally laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. I was about to make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] before that made a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. To which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] asks that the unfinished business be informally laid aside with a view to finishing the reading of the amendment to the bill which has been under consideration.

Mr. MILLER. I shall not object to that if it does not lead to discussion.

Mr. HARRIS. If it leads to discussion I shall not ask to intrude further on the unfinished business.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment of the Committee on Claims, to strike out all after the enacting clause of House bill 6974 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States, or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable; also of the claim of any State for the proceeds of swamp and overflowed lands, the property of such State, which the United States may have erroneously sold or disposed of. In all cases in which any such lands shall have been disposed of by the United States otherwise than for cash, the recovery therefor shall be limited to the price at which the same were held for sale or rated by the United States at the time of such disposal: Provided, That in no case shall interest be recovered upon any such claim: And provided further, That no payment shall in any event be made upon any judgment entered in said court upon any such claim until the said State shall have delivered to the Secretary of the Interior a good and sufficient release of all the said State's right, title, interest, and claim in and to the lands for which said recovery is had.

Second. All set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the Government of the United States against any State or person making claim against the Government in said court: Provided, That no suit against the Government of the United States, except by a State as aforesaid, shall be allowed under this act unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

SEC. 2. That the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims as to all matters named in the preceding section where the amount of the claim does not exceed $1,000, and the circuit courts of the United States shall have such concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where the amount of such claim exceeds $1,000 and does not exceed $10,000. All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried by the court without jury.

SEC. 3. That whenever any person shall present his petition to the Court of Claims alleging that he is or has been indebted to the United States as an officer or agent thereof, or by virtue of any contract therewith, or that he is the guarantor, or surety, or personal representative of any officer, or agent, or contractor so indebted, or that he, or the person for whom he is such surety, guarantor, or personal representative, has held any office or agency under the United States, or entered into any contract therewith, under which it may be or has been claimed that an indebtedness to the United States has arisen and exists, and that he or the person he represents has applied to the proper Department of the Government, requesting that the account of such office, agency, or indebtedness may be adjusted and settled, and that three years have elapsed from the date of such application and said account still remains unsettled and unadjusted, and that no suit upon the same has been brought by the United States, said court shall, due notice first being given to the head of said Department and to the Attorney-General of the United States, proceed to hear the parties and to ascertain the amount, if any, due the United States on said account. The Attorney-General shall represent the United States at the hearing of said cause. The court may postpone the same from time to time whenever justice shall require. The judgment of said court or of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which any appeal shall lie, as in other cases, as to the amount due, shall be binding and conclusive upon the parties. The payment of such amount so found due by the court shall discharge such obligation. An action shall accrue to the United States against such principal, or surety, or representative to recover the amount so found due, which may be brought at any time within three years after the final judgment of said court. Unless suit shall be brought within said time, such claim and the claim on the original indebtedness shall be forever barred.

SEC. 4. That the jurisdiction of the respective courts of the United States proceeding under this act, including the right of exception and appeal, shall be governed by the law now in force, in so far as the same is applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act; and the course of procedure shall be in accordance with the established rules of said respective courts, and of said such additions and modifications thereof as said courts may adopt.

SEC. 5. That the plaintiff in any suit brought under the provisions of the second section of this act shall file a petition, duly verified, with the clerk of the respective court having jurisdiction of the case, and in the district where the plaintiff resides. Such petition shall set forth the full name and residence of the plaintiff, the nature of his claim, and a succinct statement of the facts upon which the claim is based, the money or other thing claimed, or the damages sought to be recovered, and praying the court for a judgment or decree upon the facts and law.

SEC. 6. That the plaintiff shall cause a copy of his petition filed under the preceding section to be served upon the district attorney of the United States in the district wherein suit is brought, and shall mail a copy of the same, by registered letter, to the Attorney-General of the United States, and shall thereupon cause to be filed with the clerk of the court wherein suit is instituted an affidavit of such service and the mailing of such letter. It shall be the duty of the district attorney upon whom service of petition is made as aforesaid to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of petition upon him, unless the time should be extended by order of the court made in the case to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counter-claim, set-off, claim for damages, or other demand or defense whatsoever of the Government in the premises: Provided, That should the district attorney neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense, as required, the plaintiff may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises; but the plaintiff shall not have judgment or decree for his claim, or any part thereof, unless he shall establish the same by proof satisfactory to the court.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the court to cause a written opinion to be filed in the cause, setting forth the specific findings by the court of the facts therein and the conclusions of the court upon all questions of law involved in the case, and to render judgment thereon. If the suit be in equity or admiralty, the court shall proceed with the same according to the rules of such courts.

SEC. 8. That in the trial of any suit brought under any of the provisions of this act, no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit; and any plaintiff or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

Sections 1079 and 1080 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed.

SEC. 9. That the plaintiff or the United States, in any suit brought under the provisions of this act, shall have the same rights of appeal or writ of error as are now reserved in the statutes of the United States in that behalf made, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The modes of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal or writ of error shall conform in all respects, and as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governing appeals and writs of error in like causes.

SEC. 10. That when the findings of fact and the law applicable thereto have been filed in any case as provided in section 6 of this act, and the judgment or decree is adverse to the Government, it shall be the duty of the district attorney to transmit to the Attorney-General of the United States certified copies of all the papers filed in the cause, with a transcript of the testimony taken, the written findings of the court, and his written opinion as to the same; whereupon the Attorney-General shall determine and direct whether an appeal or writ of error shall be taken or not; and when so directed the district attorney shall cause an appeal or writ of error to be perfected in accordance with the terms of the statutes and rules of practice governing the same: Provided, That no appeal or writ of error shall be allowed after six months from the judgment or decree in such suit. From the date of such final judgment or decree interest shall be computed thereon, at the rate of 4 per cent., until the time when an appropriation is made for the payment of the judgment or decree.

SEC. 11. That the Attorney-General shall report to Congress, and at the beginning of each session of Congress, the suits under this act in which a final judgment or decree has been rendered, giving the date of each, with a statement of the costs taxed in each case.

SEC. 12. That whenever there shall be pending before the Department of State a claim in behalf of any alien against the United States, founded on or growing out of any treaty with a foreign power or any international obligation, the Secretary of State may, with the consent of the representative of the government of such alien, refer such claim to the Court of Claims, which shall thereupon have jurisdiction to hear and determine the same upon the principles of justice and international law, and to render such judgment as those principles shall require. From any such judgment either party may appeal to the Supreme Court in the manner provided by law in other cases of appeal from the Court of Claims.

SEC. 13. That when any claim or matter may be pending in any of the Executive Departments which involves controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such Department, with the consent of the claimant, may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said Court of Claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall enter judgment thereon, and shall report its findings and judgment to the Department by which it was transmitted.

SEC. 14. That in every case which shall come before the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon the facts established, that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon under existing laws or under the provisions of this act, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and report its proceedings therein to either House of Congress or to the Department by which the same was referred to said court.

SEC. 15. That whenever any bill shall be pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the Court of Claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed, or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.

SEC. 16. That the costs of court in proceedings under this act shall be taxed in favor of the prevailing party therein, unless otherwise specially ordered by the court. For failure to prosecute a petition filed under this act with reasonable diligence, the same may be dismissed, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 17. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to the first section of the committee's amendment. I move to insert, after the word "suable," in line 13 of section 1:

And for all claims made by an Indian or Indian tribe against the United States arising from or growing out of treaty stipulations or acts of Congress relating thereto.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the word "aforesaid," in section 1, line 34:

And upon claims other than war claims wherein under existing law the Court of Claims has heretofore found the facts alternatively requiring the construction of the laws applicable to such facts in order to arrive at a just determination thereof.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the provision be read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Secretary will report the provision as it will read if amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the proviso at the end of the second clause of section 1 so as to read:

Provided, That no suit against the Government of the United States, except by a State as aforesaid, and upon claims other than war claims wherein under existing law the Court of Claims has heretofore found the facts alternatively requiring the construction of the laws applicable to such facts in order to arrive at a just determination thereof, shall be allowed under this act unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Claims as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. BECK. I ask whether the amendments meet the approval of the Senator who reported the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. They do.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, were appointed.

BRIDGE AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from New York to yield to me to pass a bill which will require no discussion. It is a bridge bill, and it is important that it should be passed. It is Order of Business 2329.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill referred to by him. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. I have been requested by two or three Senators to give way for the passage of two or three bridge bills which are Senate bills in order that they may go to the House. I desire to say that, no one else objecting, I am willing that those two or three bridge bills may be taken up, the pleuro-pneumonia bill being laid aside informally; but I can not consent to let in other bills. For instance, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has made the same request; and I am entirely willing that these two or three bridge bills shall be taken up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request that the unfinished business be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering the bridge bills indicated? The Chair hears no objection. The bill called up by the Senator from Minnesota will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3160) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway Company across the Missouri River at Sioux City, Iowa, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 23, after the words "parallel with," to insert "and the bridge itself at right angles to;" so as to read:

Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall not be of less elevation in any case than 50 feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest part of the superstructure of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than 300 feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with, and the bridge itself at right angles to, the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river and not less than 300 feet in length.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 30, before the word "navigable," to insert the words "the best," and after the word "mark," at the end of line 35, to insert "and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with, and the bridge itself at right angles to, the current of said river;" so as to read:

And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with spans of not less than 160 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans to the draw shall not be less than 300 feet, and the head-room under such span shall not be less than 10 feet above local high-water mark, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with, and the bridge itself at right angles to, the current of said river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 6, to add:

And if said bridge shall not have been commenced within two years and completed within three years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to amend that by striking out "two years" and inserting "one year;" so as to read, "and if said bridge shall not have been commenced within one year," &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, recommending an item for insertion in the deficiency appropriation bill in relation to the appropriation for printing silver certificates and preparing them for issue; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE AT GRAND TOWER, ILL.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from New York to yield to allow me to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Calendar No. 2180, being the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.

Mr. MILLER. That is within the agreement.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 19, after the words "may be," to strike out "fixed by the owners thereof, not in excess of such rates as may be provided by the laws of either of the States of Illinois or Missouri," and insert "approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

Said bridge may also, at the option of the owners thereof, be so constructed as to be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals of all kinds, and for foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out all after the first word, "that," of section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may be built as a draw bridge, with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans: Provided, That if said bridge shall be made with unbroken or continuous spans, the spans thereof, except the main span, shall not be less than 200 feet in length in the clear, and the main span shall not be less than 300 feet in length in the clear, and shall be over the main channel of the river. The lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall be at least 50 feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right angles to, and its piers parallel with, the current of the river: And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw bridge, the draw or pivot span shall be over the main channel of the river at an accessible point, and the openings on each side of the pivot pier shall be not less than 200 feet in the clear, and as nearly as practicable both of said openings shall be accessible at all stages of the water; that the spans shall not be less than 10 feet above the extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge; that the piers and draw rests of said bridge shall be built parallel with the current at that stage of the river which is most important for navigation; and that no riprap or other outside protection for imperfect foundations shall be permitted to approach nearer than 4 feet to the surface of the water at its extreme low stage, or otherwise to encroach upon the channel ways provided for in this act: Provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats; and the owners of said bridge shall maintain, at their own expense, from sunset until sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The bridge herein authorized shall be constructed as a high bridge with unbroken and continuous spans, the main span to be over the main channel of the river, with a clear width of 500 feet channel way, to be measured at right angles to the current, at any and all stages of water. The other spans of said bridge shall have a clear width of channel way as aforesaid of not less than 400 feet, measured at right angles to the current. All of said spans shall not be of less elevation than 50 feet upon high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chords of the bridge. That the piers shall be built parallel with the current of the river at that stage of water which is most important for navigation; and riprapping or other protection for imperfect foundations which will materially lessen the water way shall not be employed in the channel ways of the high spans and piers which will produce cross-currents or bars dangerous to navigation, and if, after construction, any piers or protection walls are found to produce the above-mentioned effects, the nuisance shall be abated or corrected by or at the expense of the persons owning said bridge. That the persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge authorized by this act shall maintain, at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, throughout the year, and during heavy fogs, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board shall prescribe, and shall, during the season of navigation, have posted in a conspicuous place on or near the bridge the clear head-room under the channel span on that day, the figures expressing this height to be not less than 2 feet high, and to be readily visible from any point in the channel of the river for a stretch of 3,000 feet above and 1,000 feet below the bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 6, in the following words:

SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of War shall have good reason to believe that the bridge hereby authorized to be constructed is an obstruction to the free navigation of said river by result of difficulty in passing the draw opening of said bridge, if it shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, by rafts, steamboats, or other water craft, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary, on satisfactory proof thereof, to require the company or persons owing such bridge to cause such aids to the passage of said draw opening to be constructed, placed, and maintained, at their own cost and expense, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for the guiding of said rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely through said openings as shall be specified in his order in that behalf; and on failure of the company or persons aforesaid to make and establish such additional structures within a reasonable time, the said Secretary shall cause the same to be built or made at the expense of the United States, and shall refer the matter without delay to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in any district court of the United States in which district said bridge, or any part thereof, is located, for the recovery of the cost thereof, and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 7. That if the construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within two years from the passage of this act, and be completed in four years from the same date, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be determined.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. On page 4 of this bill, in section 3, line 37, I move to strike out "500" and insert "750."

Mr. CULLOM. For what?

Mr. VEST. To make the span 750 feet.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that ought not to be done.

Mr. VEST. I will give my reason for it. The Bureau of Engineers in their report on this bill recommend that no span shall be less than 750 feet. I drew this bill and reported it, but I was under the impression at the time that I draughted its provisions that the river at Grand Tower, which is 40 miles above Cairo, was of the same character as the river at Saint Louis. That was my impression, but I find it is not so.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the difference?

Mr. VEST. It is a great deal more narrow and the current is a great deal brisker and there are cross currents there. I have now, together with the information I have received since, a letter from Mr. Haarstick, president of the Saint Louis and Mississippi Valley Transportation Company, which can be read. It is not very lengthy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

Mr. VEST. I will say before the letter is read that the span of the Eads bridge at Saint Louis is 525 feet. That was held at the time to be an engineering impossibility, but in the way of bridge-building advances have been made commensurate with the progress in other departments of science and art, and to-day a 750-foot span is much more practicable than a 500-foot span was considered at the time the great Saint Louis bridge was built. This will not be a serious obstruction to the building of this bridge.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I wish to say that the corporation named in this bill are willing to accept 650 feet in lieu of 500 feet, as I am advised by a telegram from the parties in interest, and I should be glad to see the Senator from Missouri propose 650 feet instead of 750.

Mr. CULLOM. I of course do not desire that anything shall be done to obstruct the navigation of the river, but it seems to me that in view of the length of span that we are usually providing for, this bridge of 750 feet is going a little beyond what is really necessary. I know something about the river at Grand Tower, and I am not of the impression that there is the difficulty and trouble with the current there that the Senator from Missouri indicates. While I do not believe that a span there of over 500 feet is necessary, yet if the parties interested in this bridge crossing the river are willing to accept 650 feet I shall make no objection.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the letter which I sent up be read, coming from the president of the Saint Louis and Mississippi Valley Transportation Company.

Mr. CULLOM. They do not want any bridge built at all.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Illinois is mistaken, because the railroad system of the country predominates entirely over river transportation. I will say to my friend from Illinois that as the author of the interstate transportation bill he ought now to guard the navigation of the river as much as possible, because if that bill has any effect at all—and I hope it will and I supported it—it will be to put upon the Mississippi River a vast amount of commerce compared to what has been there heretofore. If that bill has the effect the railroad men think it will, it will divert from the railroads to the Mississippi River, I will not undertake to say arithmetically what proportion, but they say at least one-third of the freight that now goes on the railroads.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will not the Senator from Missouri accept 650 feet in lieu of his amendment?

Mr. VEST. Let the letter be read and then let the Senate decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SAINT LOUIS AND MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRANSPORTATION COMPANY,
Saint Louis, February 22, 1887.

SIR: Immediately on receipt of a copy of Senate bill 3104 I wired you in reference thereto, in the hope to enlist your opposition to a measure so unmistakably calculated to impose a permanent tax upon the cereals of the Mississippi Valley and its tributary feeders. In further trespassing upon your time in this direction, I beg to say I am to-day in receipt of a communication from Senator Cockrell touching the question of bridges over the Mississippi River south of this port, and in which he incloses a copy of S. 3104, as amended by you, and fixing the span at 500 feet. Now, Senator, permit me to say, at the outset, with all due respect and candor, that a span of the proposed width will certainly constitute a serious obstacle to navigation if located at any point below Saint Louis, but more especially would this be the result at Grand Tower, where the river is narrow, boily, and hence strongly characterized by cross currents.

In advocating the cause of high bridges with wide spans across the Mississippi River below Saint Louis, I do not wish to be considered selfishly interested simply because I happen to represent largely the transportation interests hence to New Orleans. You can readily see where our interests and those of the commerce of this valley are at once identical and inseparable. In further claiming your interested attention to the protection which this commerce seeks at the hand of the General Government, I beg leave to state that recent legislation by Congress will doubtless have the tendency to turn the attention of the West and Northwest to the natural, and certainly the cheapest, route by which to float their products to the seaboard. With navigation left unobstructed, at least to the maximum when other interests are to be subserved and accommodated, there is no reason to expect an increase of carriage via this route; whereas on the other hand, it must necessarily be increased by rail across the country to tide-water where, as you are aware, it has for the past four or five years been performed at ruinously low rates, owing to suicidal competition between trunk-lines. Now, then, as to the effect of obstructions such as bridge piers and narrow spans on the matter of rates for carriage, insurance, &c., I would say within reason that an estimate of increase in the case of cereals could not fall short of one-half to 1 cent per bushel for each bridge thus located and constructed.

In this connection I would mention, in passing, that since the opening of navigation, twelve days, this company alone has transported 1,029,000 bushels corn and wheat, every bushel of which is designed for export; and in the conduct of which business venture the average margin now is not to exceed 1 cent per bushel. Again, as to the feature of danger presented by bridge piers and narrow spans, as you are no doubt aware the transportation business south from this city is done principally by tow-boats and barges. An average tow for one boat is six barges, averaging each, in a good stage of water, 1,500 tons, or an aggregate of 7,500 to 9,000 tons. It frequently happens that a boat will strike a bar or reef and the weight of the tow is so great that the lines are parted and the barges, or some of them, get away from the tow and become scattered. The boat lands the barges that are still fast to her and goes on down the river picking up and gathering together the loose barges. This we have frequently accomplished without the loss of a single dollar's worth of property, as the barges are heavily timbered and well calculated to withstand collision with the river banks. You can imagine what would be the result of such a mishap above and near a bridge pier. All these facts are well known to and considered by marine underwriters, hence an increase in rates of insurance on property transported—this item on wheat would constitute a difference not to be overlooked.

Pardon me if I have wearied you with these matters; but the importance of the subject is the only excuse I can offer. I would again call your attention to the width of span suggested in my telegram, 750 feet. I do so for two reasons—first, it lessens the danger of navigation; secondly, civil engineers who make a special study of bridge-building assert that the wide span can be used just as well and at a very little additional cost.

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY C. HAARSTICK, President.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. CULLOM. In response to the remark of the Senator from Missouri, that having been connected with the interstate commerce bill, I certainly ought to be in favor of the free navigation of the Mississippi River and all other water ways, I wish to say that I am. I am the last man who would put any unnecessary obstruction in the way of the commerce of that river, or the lakes, or of any navigable stream anywhere where a boat can be floated; but at the same time here is a proposition to make a bridge span 750 feet, which is unprecedented anywhere on that river that I know of, and it is unnecessary, in my judgment.

It is very easily understood that this gentleman, writing a letter here, living in Saint Louis, and who is engaged in commerce upon the Mississippi River, does not want any bridges at all if he could get rid of them; but here is a proposition to build a bridge from the Illinois shore across to the Missouri shore, some 40 miles below Saint Louis, and about 40 miles above Cairo, where the people of those sections, both of Illinois and Missouri, are very much interested in having a bridge, so that they can cross back and forth between the two States. I want them to have it, but at the same time I am not desirous of building the spans so short as to seriously or at all to interfere with the commerce up and down the Mississippi River.

I have visited this point at Grand Tower, and the difficulty that is suggested in reference to the currents in the river there is very greatly magnified, in my judgment. I have been upon the river at the point where it is proposed to locate the bridge at Grand Tower. I do not believe that a span of 550 feet would be at all an obstruction to the commerce of the Mississippi River, but I am willing, so that it may be beyond question, to allow the span to be 650 feet, if you please, and that, as I understand, would not interfere with the construction of the bridge; but when you come to make a span 750 feet you might just as well say that the span should extend the full width of the river, because it comes pretty near doing that.

I do not want to be unreasonable about this thing, neither do I desire that a bill shall be passed here that shall be of no consequence at all, because the bridge will never be built under such a provision, in my judgment.

If the Senator will allow an amendment to make the span 650 feet, as the Senator from Arkansas suggests, instead of 500 feet, as the Senator had in his bill in the first instance, I am satisfied that that is all that is necessary, and I am willing to accept it so far as I in representing the people of my State am concerned.

Mr. EUSTIS. I have received a dispatch from a gentleman who lives in New Orleans, but who happens to be in Saint Louis, a gentleman who has always shown a very great interest in the commerce of the Mississippi Valley. He telegraphs from Saint Louis as follows:

Satisfied from investigation here bridge Mississippi less that 750 span will increase expense and insurance barge grain to New Orleans. No more expensive bridge than 500 feet span. Hope you can help secure amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. From whom is the dispatch?

Mr. EUSTIS. From Maj. E. A. Burke.

Mr. CULLOM. Engaged on the river?

Mr. EUSTIS. Oh, no; he is the proprietor of the Times-Democrat, the most influential paper in New Orleans. He happens to be in Saint Louis, and he discovers that a bridge of 500 feet span will increase the cost of the transportation of grain by barges down the river and will also increase the cost of insurance. He is a man of very remarkable intelligence, and I can vouch for the accuracy of every statement he makes on his general reputation. He is a Democrat, and therefore very truthful.

Inasmuch as this bridge will not cost more whether it is 500 feet span or 700 feet span, and inasmuch as the cost of transportation and the cost of insurance will be greatly increased by a narrow span, I suppose owing to the current at that particular spot, increasing the danger of navigation so that those who have to insure the grain will have to pay an additional insurance on account of the diminution of the span. I do not see what reasonable objection can be urged to the amendment by any one who is friendly at all to the commerce of the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire if the Senator knows of any other bridge of 750 feet span on the Mississippi River?

Mr. EUSTIS. I am not able to answer the question.

Mr. CULLOM. There are none; and it is a proposition to defeat the bill. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. EUSTIS. I beg pardon; not in the least.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a proposition to defeat the bill in the interest of men in business in Saint Louis and New Orleans running boats up and down the river. They do not want any bridge across the Mississippi River at this point.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing to have a bridge with a reasonable length of span, but I do not want a bill passed here that will prove to be of no account to the people who are desirous to have it built.

Mr. EUSTIS. Why does not the Senator state a serious objection why a bridge of 750 feet span could not be built as readily as one of 500 feet span?

Mr. CULLOM. It is because it is much more expensive.

Mr. EUSTIS. This gentleman says it is not more expensive.

Mr. VEST. I wish to state to the Senator from Illinois that there is no bridge over the Mississippi River below the city of Saint Louis, but there are two bridge bills, one has been passed and the other is pending, one for a bridge at Memphis and the other for a bridge at Natchez, and both of them provide for a span of 750 feet. When I drew this bill and provided for spans I put in 500 feet against the recommendation of the bureau of engineers. I was under the impression that the character of the river was the same, as I said a few minutes ago, at Grand Tower as at Saint Louis. It is true that the central span of the Eads bridge at Saint Louis is 525 feet, but since that was constructed the cantilever system in bridges has been adopted, and a 750-foot span or a thousand-foot span, as to that matter, is just as practicable with engineers to-day as a 500-foot span.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator from Missouri who has charge of the bill will allow me to make a suggestion, I am willing to allow the bill to be amended so far as I am concerned by leaving it to the judgment of the Secretary of War as to the width of the span.

Mr. VEST. That is already in the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the last section of the bill provides:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

That power is reserved; and if 650 feet should be adopted as the length of the span and it should interfere with commerce in any way the power is expressly reserved to change the span. That is 125 feet wider than any other span on the Mississippi River. It is 125 feet wider than the largest span at Saint Louis, which is 45 miles above.

It seems to me, under the circumstances, that a span of 650 feet is reasonable enough, and I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Missouri by substituting 650 feet instead of 750 feet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 37, strike out "seven" and insert "six" before the word "hundred," and after the word "hundred" insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

The bridge herein authorized shall be constructed as a high bridge with unbroken and continuous spans, the main span to be over the main channel of the river, with a clear width of 650 feet channel-way, to be measured at right angles to the current, at any and all stages of water.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to amend that amendment by inserting the words "not less than" before the words "six hundred and fifty feet."

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas modifies his amendment as stated. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In section 3, line 40, before the word "hundred," I move to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

The other spans of said bridge shall have a clear width of channel-way as aforesaid of not less than 500 feet, measured at right angles to the current.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREAT KANAWHA RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. KENNA. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration at this time the bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, after the word "lowest," at the end of line 13, to strike out "chord" and insert "part;" so as to read:

Said channel-span shall be at least 29 feet, measured to the lowest part of the span, above local highest water thus far known, as determined by the United States engineers, and shall be at least 90 feet above low water in bridges built at or near the mouth of the river, and 75 feet above low water in bridges built at or near Charleston, W. Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 13, before the word "district," to insert the words "circuit or;" so as to read:

And the United States shall have the right of way for telegraph or telephone purposes across any such bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any alleged obstruction to the navigation of said Great Kanawha River created by the construction of any bridge under this act, the cause or question arising may be tried before the circuit or district court of the United States for the district of West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 1, after the word "alter," to strike out "or;" and in the same line, after the word "amend," to insert "or repeal;" so as to make the section read:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the future construction of bridges is hereby expressly reserved, without any liability of the Government for damages on account of the alteration or amendment of this act, or on account of the prevention or requiring the removal of any such obstructions; and any change in the construction or any alteration of any such bridge that may be directed at any time by Congress shall be made at the cost and expense of the owners thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North. The bill is short. There are two bills, Order of Business 2067 and Order of Business 2073, which are short, and they will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. HOAR. After that I desire to ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Business No. 12, a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. After these bridge bills have been disposed of we can listen to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, at the beginning of section 2, to strike out the words:

That the said bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, and shall be so constructed that a free and unobstructed passage may be secured to all water craft, rafts, or logs navigating said river at the point aforesaid: Provided, That the draw of said bridge shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signals for the passage of boats or vessels.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with spans giving a clear water way, measured at the lowest stage of water known at the locality, of not less than eighty feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and provision shall be made in the height of the bridge, and in the location and construction of abutments and approaches, to allow the free passage of flood-water; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel to and the bridge itself at right angles to the current of said river: Provided, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats and other water-craft, except when trains are passing over said draw; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 24, after the words "as the," to strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "Light-House Board;" so as to read:

And said corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 27, after the word "prescribe," to insert:

And said corporation shall provide, at its own expense, such sheer-booms, guide-piers, or other device as may be necessary to facilitate the safe passage of boats or other water craft through the spans of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, after the words "Secretary of War," in line 46, to insert:

And in case of any litigation arising from the obstruction or alleged obstruction caused by said bridge to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in whose jurisdiction any portion of said bridge is located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "expense," at the end of section 5, to add:

And if said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, numbered 1, 2, and 3, and had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the said bill numbered 4; that it asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. BINGHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House still further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COBB, Mr. STONE of Missouri, and Mr. PAYSON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK.

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. McMILLAN. The other bill to which I referred is of the same kind, and will require no time.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill I wish to have considered will require no time.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is the bill of which I gave notice at the time I called up the bridge bill which has just been passed.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from New York will not object, I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER. The understanding was that the pleuro-pneumonia bill was to yield for a number of bridge bills, and we have taken up nearly all of them. I believe there are two or three yet to be considered. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is busy all the time, has made a personal request to me to allow him to call up a certain bill, and if it leads to no debate whatever and will take only a moment, I shall be disposed to yield and let him pass the bill, and then go on with the remaining bridge bills.

Mr. McMILLAN. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. Thanking both Senators for their courtesy to me, I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 3095) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company the right of way through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, in Montana Territory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. What kind of a corporation is that?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very good corporation. I know some of the gentlemen, who are citizens of my State. They are thoroughly responsible gentlemen, and expect to build this railway.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not a charter, then, desired to be obtained for the purpose of selling out and speculating?

Mr. ALLISON. By no means.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have very grave suspicion that there are several bills of that character, and if this is one of them or is tinged with it I propose to object to it. If these parties are honest bona fide incorporators and have the means and expect to build the railroad and not sell it out to somebody else and make a little speculation, I have no objection; but if it is for the purpose of speculation I shall certainly object to it.

Mr. VEST. I suggest to my colleague, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, that that difficulty can be obviated by a very simple amendment, such as we have adopted in the Committee on Commerce to all bridge bills, and it ought to apply to railroads, and that is, if they do not commence to construct in a certain time, and complete in a certain time, the rights and privileges given by the act shall cease and determine.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am obliged to my colleague for the suggestion, and I will put it in proper form. With the understanding that there will be no objection to such an amendment, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I surely shall not object to such an amendment, if, when the bill is read, there shall seem to be any occasion for it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3095) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company the right of way through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, in Montana Territory.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 9, after the words "Crow Indian Reservation," to insert "beginning at;" and in the same line, after the word "at," to strike out "Sec. 2. That the line of said railroad shall extend from," and in line 11, after the word "Territory," to insert the word "running;" so as to make the section read:

That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Montana, for the construction, operation, and maintenance of its railroad through the lands set apart for the use of the Crow Indians, and commonly known as the Crow Indian Reservation, beginning at a point at or near Laurel, in Yellowstone County, Montana Territory, running thence by the most practicable route to or near the mouth of Rock Creek, commonly called Rocky Fork; thence up said creek to the coal mines near Red Lodge post-office, in Gallatin County, in said Territory; thence by the most practicable route to Cooke City, in said Gallatin County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [3] 2, line 8, after the word "shops," to insert "side tracks;" so as to make the section read:

That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to said right of way for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of its road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [4] 3, line 10, after the word "Interior," to insert "which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [4] 3, before the word "construction," in line 14, to strike out "and," and after "construction" to add "and operation;" so as to read:

And the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section [4] 3, to add as a proviso:

Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company, in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section:

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors, and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section:

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know why that provision is necessary.

Mr. DAWES. It is not of the slightest consequence. It was put in by some one who drew the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Strike it out.

Mr. DAWES. That may be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWES. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a provision in the bill which is very stringent in the line he suggested:

That the right herein granted shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order through said reservation on said line within two years from the passage of the act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that is sufficiently guarded and avoids the necessity of the amendment I suggested.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN O'CONNOR.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask leave to make a motion to recommit a bill. I move to recommit to the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 798) for the relief of Stephen O'Connor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. I do that with the consent of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] who reported the bill adversely.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand it is with the idea of presenting new proof in the matter, and therefore I make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be recommitted.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. McMILLAN. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the other bridge bill indicated by me, Senate bill 2930.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the words "Sec. 2," to strike out—

That the said bridge shall be so constructed, either by draw, span, or otherwise, that a free and unobstructed passage may be secured to all water-craft navigating said river at the point aforesaid: Provided, That if said bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signals for the passage of boats or vessels.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with spans giving a clear water way, measured at the lowest stage of water known at the locality, of not less than 80 feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and provision shall be made in the height of the bridge, and in the location and construction of abutments and approaches, to allow the free passage of flood-water; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel to, and the bridge itself at right angles to, the current of said river: Provided, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats and other water-craft, except when trains are passing over said draw; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 25, after the words "as the," to strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "Light-House Board;" so as to read:

And said corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, after the word "prescribe," at the end of line 25, to insert:

And said corporation shall provide, at its own expense, such sheer-booms, guide-piers, or other device as may be necessary to facilitate the safe passage of boats or other water-craft through the spans of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 2, line 47, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert:

And in case of any litigation arising from the obstruction or alleged obstruction caused by said bridge to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in whose jurisdiction any portion of said bridge is located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "expense," in line 7, at the end of section 5, to add:

And if said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LONG ISLAND AND NEW YORK BRIDGE.

Mr. MILLER. Having yielded to nearly all the Senators to pass certain bridge bills, I will now ask unanimous consent that the pleuro-pneumonia bill be laid aside still further temporarily to pass a bridge bill relating to New York.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the New York and Long Island Bridge Company, a corporation created by the laws of the State of New York, or its assigns or successors, to build a bridge as hereinafter described, and maintain the same across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island, at or near the middle of Blackwell's Island, in the State of New York. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, of wagons and vehicles, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States.

SEC. 3. That such bridge shall be constructed at right angles with the channels of said river, the piers or abutments to be constructed on the land side of the harbor or pier lines established by law. Such bridge shall be not less than 150 feet elevation above mean high water at the middle of each channel of the river, and no part of the lower chord of the channel-span less than 142 feet above mean high water.

SEC. 4. That in order to secure a compliance with these conditions, the company, its agents and assigns, previous to commencing the construction of the bridge, shall submit to the Secretary of War a plan of the bridge, with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of the bridge and for the distance of a mile above and below the site, exhibiting the depths at low and high tide, and currents at all points of the same, together with all other information touching said bridge and river as may be deemed requisite by the Secretary of War to determine whether the said bridge when built will conform to the prescribed conditions of the act not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the navigation of the river.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving said plan and map and other information, and upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such plan and at said locality will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the navigation of said river, to notify the said company that he approves the same; and upon receiving such notification the said company, its agents and assigns, may proceed to the erection of the said bridge, conforming strictly to the approved plan and location; but until the Secretary of War approve the plan and location of said bridge, and notify the said company of the same in writing, the bridge shall not be built or commenced; and should any change be made in the plan of the bridge during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, the Secretary of War shall fix the same, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 7. That in case the construction of the bridge authorized in this act be not commenced within three years and completed within ten years from the date of its approval, then this act shall be null and void.

SEC. 8. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOSPITAL STEWARDS.

Mr. MANDERSON. With the permission of the Senator from New York, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a bill that has come from the House of Representatives that I may move to concur in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance.

The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the hospital corps of the United States Army shall consist of hospital stewards, acting hospital stewards, and privates; and all necessary hospital services in garrison, camp, or field (including ambulance service) shall be performed by the members thereof, who shall be regularly enlisted in the military service; said corps shall be permanently attached to the Medical Department, and shall not be included in the effective strength of the Army nor counted as a part of the enlisted force provided by law.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is empowered to appoint as many hospital stewards as, in his judgment, the service may require; but not more than one hospital steward shall be stationed at any post or place without special authority of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the pay of hospital stewards shall be $45 per month, with the increase on account of length of service as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law to other enlisted men. They shall have rank with ordnance sergeants and be entitled to all the allowances appertaining to that grade.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be appointed a hospital steward unless he shall have passed a satisfactory examination before a board of one or more medical officers as to his qualifications for the position, and demonstrated his fitness therefor by service of not less than twelve months as acting hospital steward; and no person shall be designated for such examination except by written authority of the Surgeon-General.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is empowered to enlist, or cause to be enlisted, as many privates of the hospital corps as the service may require, and to limit or fix the number, and make such regulations for their government as may be necessary; and any enlisted man in the Army shall be eligible for transfer to the hospital corps as a private. They shall perform duty as ward-masters, cooks, nurses, and attendants in hospitals, and as stretcher-bearers, litter-bearers, and ambulance attendants in the field, and such other duties as may by proper authority be required of them.

SEC. 6. That the pay of privates of the hospital corps shall be $13 per month, with the increase on account of length of service as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law to other enlisted men; they shall be entitled to the same allowances as a corporal of the arm of service with which on duty.

SEC. 7. That privates of the hospital corps may be detailed as acting hospital stewards by the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Surgeon-General, whenever the necessities of the service require it; and while so detailed their pay shall be $25 per month, with increase as above stated. Acting hospital stewards, when educated in the duties of the position, may be eligible for examination for appointment as hospital stewards as above provided.

SEC. 8. That all acts and parts of acts in so far as they contravene the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to organize the hospital corps of the Army of the United States, to define its duty and fix its pay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives?

The amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. LE FEVRE, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Fla., a port of entry; and

A bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the unfinished business be now proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 12, to strike out "President of the United States" and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture;" so as to read:

That for the purpose of better promoting the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock from the United States, and for the purpose of increasing, promoting, and facilitating the commerce in cattle and their products among the several States of this Union, and for the purpose of removing the obstructions to such commerce with foreign nations and among the States now occasioned by the existence of contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases among cattle and other live-stock, and especially contagious pleuro-pneumonia, the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required, immediately after the passage of this act, to appoint a board of cattle commissioners, consisting of three persons of known executive ability, who shall be charged with the execution of the provisions of this act, and who shall be known and designated as the "United States Cattle Commission," and whose powers and duties shall be those provided for in this act.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I will not take up the time of the Senate in making any lengthy remarks upon the bill. I had intended to submit some remarks upon it, but I have yielded so much time to-day to Senators for the passage of certain bridge bills that I shall forego any discussion of this bill myself, unless I am compelled to do so by the course of its opponents. I simply want to say that the Committee on Agriculture in reporting the bill struck out in every case the words "the President of the United States," and inserted "Commissioner of Agriculture;" providing that he should make the appointments of these commissioners.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from New York allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. In view of the fact that we passed a bill the other day which may dispense with the Commissioner of Agriculture, had we not better say "the head of the Agricultural Department?"

Mr. MILLER. The committee had in view the fact that the bill creating an executive department out of the Agricultural Department and having a secretary of agriculture and labor would probably pass both Houses of Congress before this bill could possibly pass both Houses, and if that should happen, then of course this bill on its final passage will be amended by substituting "the secretary of agriculture and labor" in place of the words put in by the committee, "Commissioner of Agriculture."

It was thought wise that this commission should not be an independent commission, entirely by itself, but that it should be incorporated into one of the Executive Departments of the Government. The committee did not think it wise, and do not as a rule think it wise that great executive functions of the Government should be carried on by persons who are substantially irresponsible to the Government, except as they are responsible to the President who appoints them, and that this commission, if organized, should be organized under the Agricultural Department.

I may say briefly that legislation in the direction of the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia has been passed by Congress heretofore. Originally I think the first movement in that direction was the appropriation of an amount of money to the Secretary of the Treasury under which he appointed what was known as the Treasury Cattle Commission. The duties of that cattle commission were confined to quarantining cattle imported into the United States from foreign countries, and the Secretary of the Treasury through a commission did maintain a very effective quarantine at all our ports and prevent the importation of any cattle affected with this disease.

In 1884, three years ago, we passed a law establishing what was known as the bureau of animal industry, and the duties which had before that time been exercised by the Treasury Cattle Commission were transferred to the bureau of animal industry, and its duties were extended to the investigation of the question of there being pleuro-pneumonia in the interior of the country, and to devising means to extirpate it.

It will be remembered that the bureau of animal industry, with its commission and agents, was empowered to operate only in connection with State authorities. They could do nothing unless the State authorities through the Legislature and governor agreed to co-operate with the Federal authorities in carrying out the law. The result has been that some of the States have agreed to the regulations made by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and in some of the States the work has been effective, but in many of the States the Legislatures have failed to pass any laws permitting the governor or other State authorities to co-operate with the Federal authorities, and therefore the measure has to a large extent proved a failure. Whilst this disease has been extirpated in some of the States, in other States, where the Legislatures failed to co-operate with the Federal authorities, the commission has not been successful.

The fact is to-day that pleuro-pneumonia, which has existed to a greater or less extent in this country since 1848, and which had been confined entirely to the Atlantic seaboard until within the past year or two, or the past few months perhaps, has at last passed the Alleghany Mountains, and is now in the Mississippi Valley. Of that I think there can be no doubt.

I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate by going into any elaboration of the danger of this disease, of what it is likely to cost the people of this country or what it has already cost, but every Senator here knows full well that the damage done to the country in the past year has amounted to many millions of dollars. In some of our States it has substantially put an embargo upon the trade in live cattle, the States have to a large extent quarantined one against the other, and unless the Federal Government shall take it up and by a strong measure like this make an ending of it at once, no man can estimate the damage which is to be done to this country in the next five years if this thing shall be allowed to go on.

The bill which has been read has been approved by a large number of the legislatures of Western States, who have sent resolutions here asking for the passage of this particular bill. It has met the approval, I believe, of nearly every cattle-growers' or cattle-breeders' association in the West and upon the plains. The number of petitions coming to the Senate has been very large. In fact, I know of no serious opposition to it. I have heard no opposition to it whatever. I believe that it is desired by substantially all the persons engaged in that great industry and by the masses of our people.

As I said, I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate now to go into any elaborate discussion of this question, and I simply rose to make an explanation in regard to the change of the appointing power from the President to the Commissioner of Agriculture, that having been done by the committee with a view that before the bill should finally pass the two Houses it might be changed to the secretary of agriculture and labor. If it should fail to be changed, and should pass in this form and the department bill should become a law, then under the department bill all the duties imposed upon the Commissioner of Agriculture by this bill would be at once transferred to the secretary of agriculture, who would make the appointments even if no change were made in this bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question in regard to the bill. Doubtless he has thoroughly investigated it. Is he satisfied on evidence such as satisfies his mind of its worth that pleuro-pneumonia has crossed into the Mississippi Valley? It is a very important matter, and I should like to have it understood.

Mr. MILLER. I said that pleuro-pneumonia was now in the Valley of the Mississippi; that is, west of the Alleghany Mountains. There is no possible doubt, I think, that pleuro-pneumonia exists to-day in the city of Chicago. We have abundant evidence of that from the most skillful veterinary surgeons in this country, who have certified to that fact, and I have their letters here.

Mr. MAXEY. The direction of my question was a little broader than that. The Mississippi Valley, of course, embraces country east as well as west of the Mississippi River. I have seen it stated in various papers that pleuro-pneumonia had crossed the Mississippi River and was now west of that river. Has the Senator any satisfactory information upon that point?

Mr. MILLER. I am not able to produce any positive information to show that pleuro-pneumonia exists west of the Mississippi River, although it has been stated, and upon what I think is very good authority, that it has existed in the State of Missouri. The statement has been made of late that it has been extirpated in that State. Whether that shall prove to be true or not, no one can tell; we must await further developments in that direction. I suppose there is no doubt at all that about a year ago it was in the State of Kentucky, and that that State has been injured perhaps more in its cattle industry than any other State in the Union. It is now stated, upon what seems to be good authority, that the disease has been extirpated in that State, or at least confined to very close quarters, and is under quarantine. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] suggests that his own State of Iowa is now quarantined against cattle from the State of Illinois, and that no cattle are permitted to be moved from the State of Illinois into Iowa.

We find that our States are dividing up and drawing lines about themselves, and in a very short time, unless there is action by Congress, the entire commerce in live cattle in this country will have ceased absolutely. Every State will forbid the importation of cattle from any other State, and then the entire meat product of this country will have to be transported as dressed beef, the entire business being confined to each individual State; and when the disease shall once reach our pasturage lands upon the plains no one can tell what will be the damage, or what is to be the condition of the cattle trade in this country.

I think there can be no possible question or doubt that pleuro-pneumonia has passed the Alleghany Mountains, that it is to-day in the city of Chicago, and there is a strong probability that it is also in the State of Missouri, but as to that I am not positive at the present time.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator before he takes his seat answer a question? I should like to know what States in this Union through their State authorities have refused to co-operate with the Federal authorities in the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia or any other cattle disease?

Mr. MILLER. That depends upon what the Senator means by refusing to co-operate. Many of the States have neglected to pass any laws permitting co-operation. They may not have refused to do it; there may have been no bills introduced to bring it about, and so no action has been had upon the subject. I am not able to state precisely what States have refused to do that, but I will read from the report of the bureau of animal industry in regard to this matter. In its published report it says:

> Co-operation with State authorities to accomplish the prompt extirpation of the disease has not been practicable, because very few States have laws authorizing co-operation in any form for this purpose; and none have sufficient appropriations to justify their officers in attempting the slaughter of all infected herds. Our efforts in the East have, therefore, been limited to an inspection that would give an approximate idea of the infected territory, the number of infected herds, and the number of affected animals existing at any one time.

This is the statement of the bureau of animal industry, which can co-operate only with States where the State authorities are willing to co-operate. When the State fails to co-operate the Federal authority extends only to putting the entire State in quarantine. It is not necessary for me to say that it is impossible for the Federal Government to put a whole State in quarantine, and to watch all its borders to prevent the driving of cattle from one State into another. If we were to take the whole Federal Army to-day and undertake to quarantine absolutely the State of New York, or the State of Illinois, or the State of Missouri, it would be found altogether impossible to do it.

Mr. VEST. But, Mr. President, my inquiry was directed to this point. Under the third section of the animal-industry act it is made the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to publish the rules and regulations of that department in regard to cattle diseases, and it is further made his duty to communicate those rules and regulations to the authorities of the respective States without making a single exception in the whole Union. Then the act goes on further to provide that if they signify their readiness to co-operate he shall proceed to carry out these rules and regulations. If that duty was discharged by the Commissioner of Agriculture, the States, I believe, have replied or answered in one way or another, "through their governors or legally-constituted authorities," to quote the language of the animal-industry act, and it required no specific action upon their part to furnish money or other means to carry out that enactment; the only thing that was necessary for them was to say that they did not oppose the entry of the Federal authorities within the limits of the State for the purpose of carrying out that law. From what I know of the public sentiment of the Western States in regard to cattle diseases I am certain that no State in the West has refused to co-operate with the Federal authorities, or rather to give them the permission to carry out the enactment that Congress has already made.

I should like to ask the Senator from New York also, before I take my seat, for I am anxious to support this bill if I can—I can not support it in its present form, but I am honestly and really anxious to pass such a bill as will protect the cattle interests of the country in which my State is immensely interested, and I want to ask the Senator if he knows and can state the specific localities in the United States where pleuro-pneumonia now exists, not where it has existed but where it now exists? I should like to know also upon what information he states now that there is any pleuro-pneumonia in the State of Missouri.

This is a vital inquiry, because we are asked now to leave the provisions of the animal industry act, which provides for co-operation between State and Federal authority, and which recognized the fact that there was State authority in this Union—we are asked now to abandon that and to go into the broad and naked assertion that without regard to the States the Government of the United States can go into the territory of any State and slaughter cattle and pay the people's money at a certain price fixed in the bill. Therefore, it becomes manifestly pertinent to know whether the provisions of that act have been faithfully carried out, and to know whether pleuro-pneumonia has not been extirpated by the States alone.

I undertake to say that there is no pleuro-pneumonia in the State of Missouri, nor do I believe there ever has been. At the same time I am willing to vote for any bill that my remaining scruples as to the Constitution, that obsolete instrument, will permit me to support. I should like to know where that disease is now.

Mr. MILLER. I did not make the statement that pleuro-pneumonia does exist in the State of Missouri at the present time. I say it has been publicly stated in the press of the country that it did exist there, and it has also been denied. What the exact facts in regard to Missouri are I am not able to give to the Senator at the present time, but that it exists in the city of Chicago I think there can be no possible doubt. Here is a letter from Dr. Charles N. Hewitt, secretary and executive officer of the State board of health of Minnesota:

> RED WING, MINN., January 31, 1887.
> In September last I examined sick cattle in Chicago on the hoof and post mortem, saw many cases of pleuro-pneumonia and abundant evidence that the disease was contagious. All cattle having pleuro-pneumonia should be killed, and places and things disinfected. All suspected should be isolated till reasonable doubt is removed. Send copies of this telegram to Minnesota Senators and Representatives.

> DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of the 9th instant, I send two copies of our report and all appendices, except "Public Health."
> The disease prevailing in Chicago among cattle is infectious pleuro-pneumonia, as proven by its history there, and the post-mortem examination of its victims. The symptoms and post mortem appearances correspond so closely with those reported as characteristic of the European, Australian, and South African plagues as to leave no doubt in my mind that they are examples of one and the same disease.
> The disease has a specific cause, and there is no evidence that it (the disease) occurs now, except by the transfer of the infection from an animal sick of the disease to one before free from it.

That is as late as February 11. I have other letters from other authorities, late letters, to the same effect, one dated Springfield, Ill., February 11. I think I will read this, as it is Illinois authority:

> SPRINGFIELD, Ill., February 11, 1887.
> DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of the 9th instant, I would say that I have at various times—as president, secretary, and executive officer of this board—investigated the disease called contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and with especial care since the announcement of its existence in this State, August 26, 1885.
>
> Upon two occasions previously I had also been called upon to examine supposed cases of the disease—one six and the other nine years ago—and determined on both occasions that the suspicion was unfounded.
>
> The animals that I saw near Peoria, however, on the date above indicated I became satisfied were suffering from this disease, after a careful study of the symptoms, the post-mortem appearances, and the history of the outbreak.
>
> This conclusion was not based upon the dicta of others, but upon my own investigations, and the subsequent history of the disease in this and other States has confirmed me in this opinion.
>
> I have carefully investigated the recent outbreak at Chicago, and do most unhesitatingly and unqualifiedly pronounce the disease to be contagious pleuro-pneumonia, or lung plague, and not the ordinary form of pleuro-pneumonia, which is non-contagious.
>
> I am also firmly convinced that the disease is an exotic to this State, and that the sanitary conditions surrounding the animals in the Chicago distillery sheds had nothing to do with its origin there.
>
> Very respectfully, yours,
>
> JOHN H. RANCH, M. D., Secretary.
> Hon. D. W. SMITH,
> President Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association of the United States, Bates, Ill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Those cattle were in distillery sheds, did I understand the letter to state?

Mr. MILLER. Not all of them. The writer says the fact of their being in distillery sheds had nothing to do with the disease; that the disease had been brought into the State; it was exotic.

I hesitated to read these papers or to bring out any proof of this kind. I do not care to be an alarmist, and I know that the statement here in the Senate of the United States that there is pleuro-pneumonia in Chicago will go all over the civilized world and will do a very great deal to injure the trade in our cattle; but the statement had better be made here and now and the Congress of the United States called upon to take certain and swift action in order to crush it out and destroy it absolutely, as I believe can be done within one year's time if Congress will pass this bill and appropriate money. It can not be done without that, and I know of no other way to reach it. If we are to pause and to say that the Federal authority shall take no action in this matter save after a conference with State authority and after some State Legislature shall have passed a bill agreeing to co-operate with the Federal authority and appropriating money for it, then, instead of crushing out this terrible disease, we shall only have it widespread throughout all the States of the West.

The Senator from Missouri asked me as to facts in regard to the existence of this disease in other States. It is no new revelation to the Senate, or to the country, or to the world to say that pleuro-pneumonia does now exist in the State of New York, and in the States of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia, and it has existed in the State of Kentucky. It is now claimed that it has been extirpated in the State of Kentucky. Whether that statement is correct or not, I do not know, but the fact of its existence in these Atlantic States is unquestioned, and the fact of its existence in Chicago to-day is beyond question. I do not know that I need say anything more about it.

Mr. DAWES. At any time when convenient to the Senator from New York I should like to call his attention to the framework of the bill. The ninth section provides:

That the said commissioners are hereby authorized to appoint a secretary of the said board, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Agriculture, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum for his services during the time in which, under the provisions of this act, the services of the said commissioners shall be required.

It is to the point that the bill clothes these commissioners with a power which the Constitution says shall be imposed by law upon no other person except the President of the United States, the heads of Departments, or the courts of law. I will read the provision. It is a matter which would very much improve the bill, even if it were within the constitutional authority of the Commissioner to appoint an officer of this importance. Still it would be, in my opinion, much better to have such a man appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate or by the President alone. The Constitution says the President—

Shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress—

but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Now this bill proposes to clothe with that power the Commissioner of Agriculture. I suggest to the Senator that he say, assuming that the Commissioner of Agriculture will be the head of a department before this bill becomes a law, that the Commissioner of Agriculture be authorized to make this appointment, but still better that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall make the appointment. That would be better still, but it is an impossibility to clothe these other commissioners with that power.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from New York allow me to add a little to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts before he answers him?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I think the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts goes to the whole matter of the appointment of commissioners under the bill.

Mr. DAWES. My attention is called only to this one, but if this is sound, of course it applies to all the appointments of officers under the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The bill, as it originally stood, vested the power of appointment of the cattle commission in the President, but the amendment proposes to vest the appointment of the commission itself in the Commissioner of Agriculture. It seems to me that, acting as the Senate, we ought not to count chickens before they are hatched, and suppose that the person who is now Commissioner of Agriculture will sometime before the final enactment of this measure become the secretary of the department of agriculture and labor. We ought to act with reference to the law as it now is. The difficulty which I have had in my mind, being a friend to the project of the bill, is that we can not confer upon the Commissioner of Agriculture, under the Constitution, the power of appointing this commission. If the department bill passes he will no longer be the Commissioner of Agriculture. There will be appointed under that bill a secretary of agriculture and labor, but we assume the right, by making this amendment, to confer upon the Commissioner of Agriculture, as he now is, the power of making this appointment. I do not think we can do that.

While I am on my feet let me say one thing more to the Senator from New York. I think the commission, if it is going to be appointed at all, ought to be nominated by the President and appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I know of no officers who have ever been appointed under any law who have any more power, certainly who have had powers of a more delicate nature to perform than these very officers. The interstate-commerce commissioners will not have to deal with more intricate problems than these commissioners; and it seems to me that they ought as a matter of public policy to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. I am making this suggestion to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he does not understand that the Commissioner of Agriculture is the head of a department within the Constitution.

Mr. PLATT. Not within the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. Why not?

Mr. PLATT. I do not think he is.

Mr. HOAR. He is made the head of a department by law, and the mere fact of going into the Cabinet depends on the will of the President. I understand that the President might remand the Secretary of State, or the Treasury, or the Postmaster-General to the same condition as the Commissioner of Agriculture by simply not inviting him to the Cabinet meetings.

Mr. PLATT. I have never understood that the Commissioner of Agriculture was such a head of a department as was recognized by the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. He appoints all the clerks under him.

Mr. MILLER. The Congress of the United States has so recognized the Commissioner of Agriculture heretofore, for in 1884, when it passed the act creating a bureau of animal industry, it authorized the Commissioner of Agriculture to organize the bureau and to appoint the officers, who have been operating under him, and the officers operating under that law have been discharging, so far as the law would permit them to do it, precisely the same duties that this commission will be called upon to discharge. In other words, the bureau of animal industry, wherever a State has consented to the operations of the Federal Government within its boundaries, has gone into the State, has investigated the herds, and if it has found disease it has killed the cattle and has paid for them, or it has put them into quarantine; it has exercised, in short, substantially all the powers given to these commissioners. The bureau of animal industry, according to the law of 1884, was organized and put in operation by the Commissioner of Agriculture, he appointing all the officers under it, and to-day they are carrying on this work wherever they can.

Then further, as I stated some time ago, we had in existence, before the act creating the bureau of animal industry became a law, a Treasury Cattle Commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, which performed many duties which belong now to the bureau of animal industry, and duties which will be discharged by this cattle commission if it is appointed. They were appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and operated for several years, and I have upon my desk half a dozen or more reports made by what is known as the Treasury Cattle Commission to the Congress of the United States, appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and Congress has always recognized the power.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator's bill read in the manner which he has been arguing, that would be correct. I have no doubt it is within our constitutional power to clothe the Commissioner of Agriculture, just as he is, with this power, but that is not what the bill does.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is probably correct in his criticism upon the appointment of the Secretary. I was coming to that point. I agree with him, and if he will submit an amendment changing it so as to have the secretary appointed by the Commissioner of Agriculture just as the commission is to be appointed, it will avoid that difficulty. I agree with him fully that the bill is at fault in that direction.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not risen to make any extended speech on this bill. I simply desire to say that there is no question, I suppose, in the minds of the people of this country but that the disease commonly known as pleuro-pneumonia among cattle prevails in the country to-day in different States of the Union. There is no doubt in my mind that it prevails to some extent in Illinois.

For a number of years the State of Illinois has had what is known as a pleuro-pneumonia law upon its statute-books, and there has been considerable effort on the part of the people of Illinois to keep that disease out of the State. Substantially, we succeeded for a time in doing it.

During the present winter and last fall the disease broke out very violently, as the country knows, in the city of Chicago, and I fear it prevails there to-day, if there is any truth in the testimony that comes before us from different disinterested parties who live in the State of Illinois and who have given this subject attention. It prevails in the State of New York, and I believe it prevails in some other States. The Senator from Missouri says that it does not prevail in his State at this time, and I am not sure that it does.

The disease is of such a character that it can not be controlled by one State acting to-day upon the subject and another State acting some other day. It can not be dealt with in that piecemeal manner which would inevitably result from an attempt on the part of the States to control the disease and exterminate it. So that, in my opinion, there is but one thing for the Congress of the United States to do if we intend to get rid of the disease before it becomes much more difficult to control than it is now. I do not believe any State action which can be had will ever exterminate the disease, but that it will go on spreading from one portion of the country to another until it becomes absolutely uncontrollable.

Therefore, I am in favor of whatever legislation by the National Government is necessary to take hold of it, not only in one locality, but in all localities at once as near as may be possible, so that we may extirpate the disease at whatever cost it may be necessary to pay in order to get rid of it. If we do not do it now, we shall do it hereafter; and instead of costing this Government $500,000 or a million dollars to get rid of it to-day, it may cost hundreds of millions of dollars to extirpate it, unless we grapple with the subject at once and pass such a law as will enable the people of the country to take hold of it in all portions of the United States at the same time.

Now, sir, referring to my own State and to the law that is already upon the statute-books, it has been said by the Senator from Missouri that the States have some rights now under the law, but that they would not have any if we pass this bill upon the subject. So far as I am concerned, I believe in giving the States whatever rights they are entitled to upon this and all other questions; but when we come to a subject of this kind that can not be controlled by the action of any one State, or of the States separately, it becomes the duty of the National Government, under the Constitution, the public-welfare clause, if you please, to take hold of it and pass whatever law is necessary under the Constitution to enable us to control the subject.

Under the general-welfare clause, as well as under another provision of the Constitution in relation to interstate commerce, we have the power, when we find the disease exists, to do whatever is necessary to extirpate it for the general welfare, and to prevent obstruction to commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What provision of the Constitution is that to which the Senator refers?

Mr. CULLOM. I have not the paragraph here, but I refer to the general-welfare clause; the fourth article in relation to seizure, &c., and to the clause providing for the regulation of commerce between the States.

Mr GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], who has control of this bill, is anxious to bring it to a conclusion and that the speeches upon it shall be brief. I do not, therefore, desire to occupy the attention of the Senate long, and the Senator from Mississippi will have an opportunity to speak when I get through, or at some time before the bill is disposed of.

There is nothing clearer in my mind than the proposition that, so far as State action is concerned, this disease which has broken out among the cattle of this country will never be exterminated if left to the action of the States alone, and it has become a question for Senators to meet face to face whether we shall allow the disease to go on spreading from one locality to another until it exists among all the cattle of the country, or whether we shall seize hold of the subject at once and pass such an act as will enable the Government of the United States to do whatever is necessary and that can constitutionally be done to eradicate the disease.

To-day different States are losing millions of dollars because of the disease which is known to exist within their borders. Take my own State; take the State of Kentucky, and I venture to say there is not an individual in those States who does not believe that something of this kind is necessary in order to stop the spread of the disease.

So far as the bill is concerned which is before the Senate, I do not agree with it entirely. I do not believe in the changes in the bill which the Committee on Agriculture have made since it was first introduced. I see by looking at the bill that wherever the words "the President of the United States" occur, they have been stricken out and "the Commissioner of Agriculture" is substituted as the power to make the appointment of this commission and to do whatever else is necessary under this proposed law.

I believe that, so far as the appointment of the commission is concerned, it ought not to be intrusted to the Commissioner of Agriculture, even though that officer should become a member of the Cabinet under the operation of the new law which was passed by the Senate yesterday. As the Senator from Connecticut has said, the duties to be performed by that commission are of the most delicate and responsible character, involving, perhaps, not only the delicate question of going into private premises, into a man's barn or lot, and having his cattle killed, but also the question of the amount of cost that the execution of this law will entail on the people of the United States; and I insist that no man below the President of the United States, the chief executive officer, should have the power of selecting and appointing those men to perform the duties prescribed by the bill now before the Senate.

I think the appointment of the commission should be vested in the President of the United States; and not only that, but the law should provide that the names of the appointees should come before the Senate for confirmation, so that their characters and capacities may be thoroughly scrutinized before they are authorized to perform the duties which this bill proposes that they shall perform.

Sir, this is all I have to say about the bill, but I think the amendments I have suggested ought to be made, and if no other Senator proposes them I shall propose to put the bill back upon that particular point exactly where it was before these amendments were proposed to it by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. TELLER. We have not adopted those yet.

Mr. CULLOM. But the bill is subject to amendment. I do not think we ought to permit the appointment of the commissioners, who have pretty large salaries provided for them, and who have the most important and responsible duties to perform, to be vested in the Commissioner of Agriculture, and the execution of the entire law subject to his control and supervision, instead of placing it in the hands of the President of the United States.

The bill provides in another place, I believe, that the Commissioner of Agriculture may suspend the operation of the work of these commissioners whenever he sees proper to do so. That power also ought to be vested in the President of the United States instead of in a Commissioner who is subordinate to him. If nobody else moves to amend the bill by reinserting the words I have referred to, and striking out "Commissioner of Agriculture" wherever the name appears, I shall do it myself.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the point that I made a few moments ago was that under the Constitution we could not authorize the Commissioner of Agriculture to appoint this commission, and the Senator from Massachusetts and some other Senator replied to me by saying that there was a Department of Agriculture, and that the Commissioner was head of the Department. Now, I wish to take enough time to show that that in my judgment is not the case.

Mr. HOAR. Does he not appoint all his clerks and subordinates now?

Mr. PLATT. Whether he does or not is another question. For myself I have very great doubts about the constitutionality of a good deal that is done by the Department of Agriculture.

The Revised Statutes, page 26, section 158, specify certain Executive Departments—the Department of State, the Department of War, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, the Post-Office Department, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Interior. Turning to the provision of the Revised Statutes which organized the Department of State, section 199, we find this:

SEC. 199. There shall be at the seat of Government an executive department to be known as the Department of State, and a Secretary of State, who shall be the head thereof.

So with reference to the Department of the Treasury, section 233:

There shall be at the seat of Government an executive department to be known as the Department of the Treasury, and a Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be the head thereof.

The same language is used with reference to the Department of Justice, and the Attorney-General is specified as "the head thereof." The same language is used with reference to the Post-Office Department, and the Postmaster-General is designated as "the head thereof." The same language is used with reference to the Department of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy is designated as "the head thereof." Then we come to the Department of Agriculture, where entirely different language is used:

SEC. 520. There shall be at the seat of Government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

SEC. 521. The Department of Agriculture shall be under the charge of a Commissioner of Agriculture, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of $4,000 a year.

He is not named as "the head" of that Department. Now, how was it when the Interior Department was organized? It was called the home department, organized by an act passed March 3, 1849, the first section of which read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be created a new Executive Department of the Government of the United States, to be called the Department of the Interior, the head of which Department shall be called the Secretary of the Interior.

So that with regard to all the Departments which are known as the Executive Departments the statute expressly provides that a certain officer designated in the statute shall be the head of the Department, but when it comes to the creation of this so-called Department of Agriculture it uses no such language, but says that the Department which is thus created shall be in charge of a Commissioner of Agriculture, and the statute intended to make that distinction and to exclude the Commissioner of Agriculture from participation in the functions and powers which are conferred by statute upon heads of Departments. I do not think there can be any question on that score. Whatever may have been done in that Department makes no difference.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out, in the second section, beginning with the word "provided," in line 34, down to the end of the section. I would like to ask the lawyers of the Senate to listen to this proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the amendments reported by the committee have not been acted on.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Then I will give notice of the amendment at the proper time. I do not suppose that any constitutional lawyer would claim that it was constitutional to say that my horse, or ox, or bull, or cow should be killed without paying me any compensation whatever by the Government if that animal had simply been exposed to an infectious disease, whether the animal had caught it or not, so that it would not appear that the animal was a nuisance, but somebody thought it might become so.

If that proposition, which I suppose nobody will question seriously, be true, it is certainly equally unconstitutional to say that in such a case the Government may kill that animal, and in no case pay more than $160 if the animal has been recorded in a herd-book, and in no case pay more than $60 for an animal not so recorded, and to provide further that if the exposure was in a foreign country or on the high seas nothing shall be paid for the animal in any case. That is what this proviso provides.

I was in England a few years ago, and saw a farmer who had just sold a bull to go to Australia for 5,000 guineas—$25,000, or thereabouts; and he had another one which he valued more than the one which he had sold.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has perhaps overlooked section 6, which provides that in case the appraisal is not satisfactory to the owner of stock and he refuses to accept the compensation offered by the commission, the commission has no power to kill the animal, but is empowered to institute a close quarantine.

Mr. HOAR. Where is that?

Mr. MILLER. Section 6, on page 7. Perhaps it should have been put in closer connection with the proviso the Senator has read. I think that will obviate the difficulty. I think the Senator must see the necessity of having some limitation as to the amount the commissioners shall offer to pay for any animal that may be killed.

Mr. HOAR. But you do not provide that they shall not kill him, in section 6.

Mr. PLATT. If he is under $160 and an unpedigreed animal, they kill him.

Mr. HOAR. You do not provide for any compensation to the owner for the animal put in quarantine. You relieve the matter a little, it is true, because the commissioners will be a little less likely to exercise their authority, but they may kill him if they choose.

Mr. PLATT. And they kill him if he falls within the limit.

Mr. HOAR. And they kill him if he falls within the limit. But suppose the animal be this 5,000-guinea bull, what right have you to provide that merely because the animal has been exposed he shall be killed and nothing be paid for him, or that only $60 paid for him if he is not a herded animal, and only $160 if he be a herded animal.

Mr. CULLOM. Is not the Senator aware that section 6 provides:

> That when the owner of animals decided under the provisions of this act, by the proper authority, to be diseased or to have been exposed to said contagion, refuses to accept the sum authorized to be paid under the appraisement provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to declare and maintain a rigid quarantine as to the animals, &c.

Of course that presumes that the animal has not been killed, and if he has not been, he can not be after that, because when the owner refuses to accept the compensation the animal is guaranteed.

Mr. HOAR. Maintaining a rigid quarantine means taking him from the possession of the owner and putting him into quarantine.

Mr. CULLOM. That is where he ought to be.

Mr. MILLER. It does not mean that necessarily.

Mr. HOAR. It may be that the Senator from Illinois thinks I ought to be shut up, but he has not got the constitutional power to do it.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not want to do it.

Mr. HOAR. But he has the same power to do it to me that he has to do it to my ox.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator insist that where an animal is exposed to disease or has disease there is no power to prevent that animal from running at large and diseasing every other animal that he comes in contact with?

Mr. HOAR. When the animal has the disease he has become a public nuisance, and it is the universal principle of the common law, and I suppose of all other law, that property which is a public nuisance is subject to the public authority to abate or even to kill. You may kill or destroy the animal without compensation constitutionally if he be so diseased as to be a public nuisance—there is no question about that—just as you may tear down a house on fire. You may, by private authority, alone and without any law-officer intervening, fill up a swamp which is breeding pestilence, or you may tear down an obstruction in the highway. But this goes further, and provides for destruction of animals at a price less than they are worth, which at any time in the past have been exposed to a contagious disease, whether they have got the disease or not, and whether, therefore, they are nuisances or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And stated in the bill to be less than their worth.

Mr. HOAR. In some cases you are to pay nothing; in some cases you are to pay three-quarters of the value; and in all cases you are not to pay over $60 or $160, as the case may be; and it is the duty of these commissioners to kill the animal.

Then it does say in section 6, which I agree I had not observed before, that if the owner will not consent to take the price offered the animal shall be put in quarantine; but what are they going to do with the animal? They are not to pay any price at all. It is only where there is a price offered and a refusal by the owner that you are entitled to quarantine the animal; but the previous section says you shall not pay anything for an animal which came from abroad and was exposed on the high seas, whether he has the disease or not, and in that case there is no provision for quarantining.

Mr. MILLER. We have power in that case to say that the animal shall not be landed at all.

Mr. HOAR. That is another thing.

Mr. MILLER. The President has issued his proclamation time and again to prevent it.

Mr. HOAR. You have a right to say that an animal shall not be landed under your regulations of foreign commerce; but my point is that when the animal is here in the State of Illinois or in the State of South Carolina you come under this bill and declare that this valuable and costly animal shall be killed if the commissioners think he has been exposed, whether he in fact has the disease or not, and therefore whether he is in fact a nuisance or not, and if the exposure was abroad or if on the high seas, or if the owner has concealed the fact of his exposure, in that case there is nothing to be assigned to him. In that case therefore there is no provision that he shall go into quarantine instead of being killed. It may be implied from the sixth section, but it is not expressed.

Mr. President, I think my honorable friends who have this bill in charge will see (because I sympathize with their object) that it is no way to accomplish a great public advantage to defy the Constitution of the United States, and if you do your effort fails. The true way is to accept the suggestion and amend the bill by striking out this proviso, and if you are going to kill these animals pay for them whatever they are worth and take the responsibility of that. If the commerce of the country demands this thing to be done—and I admit the authority of these Senators is very high on that subject; I admit their right—do it in a constitutional way and the commerce of the country will be willing to submit to it in a constitutional way.

Mr. MILLER. I am not going into a discussion of what we may do or can not do under the Constitution on this question. This question perhaps has not got beyond the Constitution, but it is getting beyond it very rapidly. This provision here is very largely copied from the present English law. I do not know whether the fact——

Mr. HOAR. Parliament is omnipotent.

Mr. MILLER. I do not know whether the fact that Parliament has a law exactly like this in its provisions in regard to killing cattle and fixing the limit of their price will have any effect on the mind of the Senator from Massachusetts or not, but it seems to me that——

Mr. HOAR. I would like to inquire of my honorable friend if there is in England any provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation, such as we have in our Constitution.

Mr. MILLER. We have undertaken in this bill to limit the amount of money that shall be expended in killing diseased and exposed cattle. Then in order to protect the rights of the private citizen we have provided that in those cases where the price has been fixed by the commission, if it is not satisfactory to the owner, instead of killing the cattle they shall then be put into quarantine, that is a quarantine upon their own premises, the premises taken care of and protected.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. MILLER. Perhaps the discussion on this particular amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is out of order at this time. The Senate is proceeding to consider the amendments of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask a question for information, if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Is pleuro-pneumonia necessarily a fatal disease, incurable?

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is asking a question which may take a very wide range. I am not able to speak of what has happened in the thousands or millions of cases where cattle have been affected; but the general understanding is that what is known as contagious pleuro-pneumonia is fatal. I very much doubt whether there is any positive knowledge that in those cases where there was supposed to have been a recovery there was any positive knowledge that the animal had the disease called pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the Senator will allow me to ask him another question. If genuine pleuro-pneumonia, which this bill is designed to stamp out, is fatal, necessarily fatal, where is the propriety of paying the owner of an animal affected with that disease three-fourths of the value of that animal estimated according to his value when he was free from disease?

Mr. MILLER. That is done upon the ground that the disease is so dangerous that in its effects it is injuring the entire people, and therefore that the person owning an animal should not be called upon to bear the entire loss, and that it is much more easy for this commission to go on and execute its duties if it is enabled by Congress to pay some proper compensation for the animals.

For instance, if the owner of a herd finds that it is attacked by some disease, and supposes the disease to be contagious pleuro-pneumonia, the owner of the herd would interpose, perhaps, no objection to the animals being destroyed if he was to be paid three-quarters of its value; but if he was to receive nothing at all he certainly would contest the question with the Federal officials to the last point, in order that he might save his property. In that way the commission would be able to do little or nothing in the direction of extirpating this very dangerous disease.

This provision to pay for the cattle has met with the approval of nearly all the governments of Europe. They are all doing precisely this thing. They are taking not only the cattle that are diseased but they are taking the cattle that are exposed to contagion, and in Europe they are actually extirpating the herds. They are not troubled by these constitutional questions which come up here. When the free people of America who have the right to govern themselves undertake to govern themselves, they find that they are tied down by constitutional chains, chains riveted and forged by the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber generally, to prevent them from doing what they want to do. We find, in other words, that a free government is unable to control its own operations or to do for the people of the country what any despotic government can do and is doing to-day. In short, as I say, in nearly every civilized country laws are in force almost precisely like this giving the government officials absolute power to go into any herd and if they find disease there to kill the whole herd and to pay for it, and paying in about the proportion of three-fourths or one-half of the value of the herd when it was well.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask the Senator a question apropos of his remark concerning constitutional power, and his lamentation that we have it not or that it is denied by some Senators. I suggest to him that his whole bill proceeds on the supposition that the people of this country are incapable of self-government, that the people of the States, who have unquestioned and abundant power, do not know enough to take care of their own cattle.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care to go into any lengthy argument to answer that. I have already said that with our present means of intercommunication, with our more than 130,000 miles of railroad, and with our tens of thousands of miles of water navigation, and with an unprotected border upon every side, it is absolutely impossible that any one State should quarantine itself against another State. They have not men enough nor money enough to do it. The thing can not possibly be done in that way.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Government will confine itself to the scope just indicated by the Senator, we should have very little argument concerning the bill. If it confined itself to regulating the transportation of diseased cattle from without or from one State to another, that would be within the field indicated in the interstate-commerce bill, and there could be no argument at least about the constitutionality of it.

Mr. MILLER. Tens of millions of cattle are transported from State to State that do not go either on railroad or steamboat.

Mr. HAWLEY. And thousands of tons of freight are daily going in one direction or another.

Mr. MILLER. It is impossible to control it in that way.

If we can take up the amendments of the committee and proceed with the bill in that way, I simply want to say that, as chairman of the committee, and, I think, representing the views of the committee, we are entirely willing to submit to any amendments which may be suggested by the wisdom of Senators that do not destroy this bill or take away from it the powers that it is intended to give to the cattle commission. Anything in the direction of perfecting the bill and making it so that it will operate effectually will be gladly received by the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to do what I can to rid the country of the evil of which the Senator from New York speaks, but I can not, with my sense of duty, support the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture, notwithstanding the sneer of the Senator from New York about gentlemen on this side of the Chamber interposing constitutional difficulties to prevent the people of this country from governing themselves. That Senator forgets that the chains and shackles of which he is speaking were imposed by the founders of this Government, and not by gentlemen on this side of the Chamber. My own opinion is that a great deal of this clamor that we hear has been raised for a purpose, and I am not prepared to believe, in the absence of better evidence, that the country is imperiled by the existence of this dangerous contagious disease.

On the 29th of May, 1884, Congress passed "An act for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppressson and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals." In the third section of that act we find this:

That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to prepare such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the speedy and effectual suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State and Territory, and invite said authorities to co-operate in the execution and enforcement of this act. Whenever the plans and methods of the Commissioner of Agriculture shall be accepted by any State or Territory in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, or such State or Territory shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and whenever the governor of a State or other properly constituted authorities signify their readiness to co-operate for the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations, and in such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease from one State or Territory into another.

He is authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by the act as may be necessary in such investigations, &c. There is the authority conferred upon the Commissioner of Agriculture by the act of May 29, 1884. The Senator from New York stated, if I did not misunderstand him, that that act had been wholly ineffectual.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is mistaken in making a statement as broad as that. I said that in some of the States the State authorities had co-operated heartily with the Commissioner of Agriculture and with this bureau and that some beneficial results had been produced, but that many of the States had failed to do anything in the way of co-operation, and that the whole work was endangered even in the States where the disease had been extirpated, because it could not be kept from coming in from the other States where the State authorities had failed to co-operate with the Federal authorities, and for that reason the operations of the bureau of animal industry were very unsatisfactory, but some good results had been produced.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, let us see what the veterinary surgeon, appointed in pursuance of that act, says on that subject, and see whether the statement of the Senator is borne out. In his second annual report I find the veterinary surgeon of the bureau says:

The outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia in the Western States, which originated in Ohio in 1883, and which at one time threatened irreparable injury to the cattle industry of the nation, has now been practically suppressed.

Mr. CULLOM. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. BUTLER. I am reading from the second annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. CULLOM. What date?

Mr. BUTLER. Eighteen hundred and eighty-five.

Mr. CULLOM. That has gone by.

Mr. BUTLER. It is the last report that has been printed. I want the Senator from Illinois to listen to this report.

Mr. CULLOM. I am listening.

Mr. BUTLER. I read:

The disease was carried from Ohio to Illinois, and from Illinois to Missouri and Kentucky, great damage being done by the interruptions of trade and commerce which resulted. The loss of cattle was less than would be expected from an outbreak of such proportions, and this was due, not to any diminished virulence of the disease, but to its early discovery and the measures adopted for its control and eradication. The part taken by this bureau in the discovery and extirpation of the outbreak will be understood from a perusal of the present and the preceding report. Since the report was written information has been received that the bill which has been pending in the Kentucky Legislature for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia in that State has become a law, and it is now only a question of a short time when all danger there will be removed.

Then he goes on further to state:

For the fortunate termination of this outbreak the country is indebted to the prompt and efficient co-operation of the authorities of the infected States.

I understood the Senator from New York to say, and to be confirmed by the Senator from Illinois, that the States had failed to co-operate with the Commissioner of Agriculture under the act of 1884.

Mr. CULLOM. So they have.

Mr. BUTLER. The veterinary surgeon, Dr. Salmon, gives a very different account. He says:

For the fortunate termination of this outbreak the country is indebted to the prompt and efficient co-operation of the authorities of the infected States, and particularly to Drs. M. R. Trumbower, C. B. Michener, and W. H. Wray, inspectors of this bureau, whose professional knowledge and good judgment were invaluable in the diagnosis of the plague, and in proposing and carrying out measures for its suppression.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me a word?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER. To how many States does he refer there; simply Ohio, Kentucky, and Missouri?

Mr. BUTLER. I will read for the information of the Senator. I was just about proceeding to read the number of States that have provided laws of their own for the suppression of this disease.

Mr. MILLER. That does not answer the question at all. Nearly every State, perhaps every State in the Union, has laws regarding this subject. The State of New York has had them for years; Massachusetts for more than a quarter of a century; but that has not anything to do with passing a law authorizing the State authorities to co-operate with the Federal officials in the extirpation of the disease.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator asks me if I know that the States of Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and Kentucky are adverted to. I tell him, so far as I know, not; but certainly this gentleman would have mentioned other States if the disease had existed to any extent in them; and the very fact that he does not do so is convincing proof to me that this clamor and noise made about the existence of pleuro-pneumonia is exaggerated for this occasion, exaggerated for a purpose, in my judgment.

Mr. MILLER. It is now February 24, 1887. That report was published in 1885, and refers to a state of facts which existed in 1884. Now, I submit to the Senator himself that anything as old as that upon this question is not entirely pertinent to the present condition of affairs. I have shown to the Senator by proof, which I think the Senator will not at all question, that pleuro-pneumonia exists to-day in the State of Illinois, in Chicago, and there are numbers of cattle diseased there to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. How does the Senator from New York show that? Does he show it from the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture through the veterinary surgeon?

Mr. MILLER. No; the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, if it were printed to-day, would not come down to the present time, and would not show it. I have shown it by letters written by the medical officers of the State of Illinois and the medical officers of the State of Minnesota who have investigated the subject and whose letters are dated as late as the 11th day of the present month. The Commissioner of Agriculture can not show anything of that kind in his reports.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the State of Illinois taken any steps to suppress this disease?

Mr. CULLOM. The State of Illinois has a commission of its own. It has had a law on the statute-book for a number of years. Finally it passed a law providing for a commission. That commission and the Commissioner of Agriculture have not agreed as to the manner of conducting affairs out there in dealing with this disease. There is no more question about the fact that pleuro-pneumonia has existed there within the last three months than there is question about whether the Senator and myself are standing upon this floor now.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the Senator right there, if that be the case, why can not the commissioners of Illinois suppress the disease and eradicate it?

Mr. CULLOM. The commissioners of Illinois have been doing the best they could. The State of Illinois has paid out not less than $40,000 within the last three months for the purpose of trying to exterminate the disease in that State, but as fast as we kill the cattle and pay for them they are brought into that great city where the cattle of all the country almost come, just that fast the new diseases break out, and there is not money enough in the whole State to carry on that sort of proceeding, and finally to get rid of the disease.

Mr. BUTLER. Where does it come from?

Mr. CULLOM. It comes from all over the country except South Carolina. I never heard of any cattle coming from there.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator name a place whence this disease is exported?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know where the disease comes from; but cattle come from Texas, come from Missouri, come from the Indian country, come from Kansas, come from the whole West beyond, and a great many younger cattle have been coming from the East as well, to the city of Chicago.

Let me say to the Senator that what he has been reading dates away back to 1884 when the disease first broke out, came to Ohio from New York, perhaps, and the District of Columbia, then on to Illinois, and at that time there was so little of it that we thought we should be able to control it and get rid of it. But the time has come when it is breaking out in all portions of the country almost, and it is utterly impossible for one State to stand up and make the appropriation necessary to get rid of the disease.

Mr. BUTLER. Nothing in the world is easier than for a Senator to make a broad statement like that.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Illinois is not making a statement that he does not know about.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not mean to intimate that the Senator is intentionally misrepresenting anything, but I say it is very easy for a Senator to make a broad statement like that, that the disease is breaking out all over this country, and he goes on to say——

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator——

Mr. BUTLER. Let me finish; I should like to get in a remark occasionally. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOM. All right.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will point me to a single locality in this country where that disease exists, I shall undertake to point out to him a remedy for it without passing this act.

Mr. CULLOM. The Commissioner of Agriculture, who is now on this floor, says the disease exists in several States of the Union. I do not know the fact personally, because I have not examined the cattle-yards of the country to see whether the disease exists or not.

Mr. BUTLER. What States?

Mr. CULLOM. It exists in New York; it exists in Maine; it has existed until recently, if it does not now, in this very District of Columbia. It has existed in Maryland; it has existed in Missouri; whether it is there now or not I do not know. A Senator stands up here and reads an old last year's almanac on this question. It seems to me that is entirely foreign to the present condition of affairs.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not reading last year's almanac; I am reading the last literature on the subject that I can find, and I am very sorry that the Senator from Illinois has not been able to find something later to contradict what I have read. I have been waiting, and waiting anxiously, to get some proof, some evidence from him or from the Senator from New York that what this report states is not true to-day.

The Senator from Illinois says that there is not money enough in the State of Illinois to suppress this contagious disease among the cattle in that State. I want to put a question to him. If that great, powerful, sovereign State of the American Union has not the power to prevent the introduction of diseased cattle within the State, if she has not the money, has she not the power to establish such quarantine regulations as will prevent their introduction?

Mr. CULLOM. The State of Illinois has quarantine regulations, and has been trying her very best to enforce them; but, as the Senator from New York says, cattle come in not only by rail but by every other means known to transportation, and the first thing anybody knows is that in the cattle-yards or stock-yards of Chicago this disease breaks out, and then we have got to deal with it again as we did within the last two or three months, when we killed two or three thousand head of cattle in order to stop its further spread in that yard. If it was only one transaction, if the States of this Union would guarantee that they would not transport that sort of cattle into Illinois any further, the State of Illinois could take care of herself. We are not beggars. We can raise as much money for this purpose as any other State, I care not what.

Mr. BUTLER. I was inclined to think not from what the Senator stated just now.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I am very much mistaken.

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to have that delusion removed from my mind. The State of Illinois has money enough for this. Now let us see what the act of 1884 says on the subject. The Senator says that a great many cattle are driven on foot across the line, and, therefore, they get into the State surreptitiously and the State of Illinois can not prevent it. Let us see what section 6 of the act of 1884, now on the statute-book, provides:

SEC. 6. That no railroad company within the United States, or the owners or masters of any steam or sailing or other vessel or boat, shall receive for transportation or transport, from one State or Territory to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia, or from the District into any State, any live-stock affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, and especially the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia; nor shall any person, company, or corporation deliver for such transportation to any railroad company, or master or owner of any boat or vessel, any live-stock, knowing them to be affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease; nor shall any person, company, or corporation drive on foot or transport in private conveyance from one State or Territory to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia, or from the District into any State, any live-stock, knowing them to be affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, and especially the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia: Provided, That the so-called splenetic or Texas fever shall not be considered a contagious, infectious, or communicable disease within the meaning of sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 of this act, as to cattle being transported by rail to market for slaughter, when the same are unloaded only to be fed and watered in lots on the way thereto.

I undertook to say to the Senator from Illinois that if his State, as great and as powerful and as wealthy as she is, has not the means to protect herself against the invasion of diseased cattle, all she has to do is to conform to this act and she gets behind her the entire power of the United States Government to protect her.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to read one paragraph I have been handed by the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] from the report of the State Live-Stock Sanitary Board of Maryland? Without taking up the time of the Senate or the Senator to read the whole report, which I have no doubt would be instructive to us all, I want to read to him just this paragraph:

We have in Maryland besides the State's veterinary inspector seven inspectors of the bureau. With all this force we are unable to make any systematic inspection. Why? We have two hundred and twenty-five herds, numbering about two thousand animals, now in quarantine, where, for reasons above assigned, we can only kill the sick. If we kill all the sick this week the chances are that we still have to kill again next week in the same herd.

Does the Senator deny that the disease is in Maryland?

Mr. BUTLER. This act does not propose to kill any but sick cattle, I hope.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, it does.

Mr. BUTLER. This act?

Mr. CULLOM. It either kills them or puts them in quarantine.

Mr. BUTLER. There is a difference between killing and putting in quarantine. I did not understand that this act provides for killing any but diseased animals.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; any animals that are exposed.

Mr. CULLOM. Animals that are exposed to danger.

Mr. SAWYER. I should like to know which of these gentlemen has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, in the chair). The Chair recognized the gentleman from South Carolina some time ago, but the Chair is at a loss to know now which one has the floor.

Mr. SAWYER. I wish whoever is entitled to the floor to yield to me that I may submit a conference report.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois answers the question I put to him in regard to his own State by reading an extract from the report of somebody in Maryland.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from New York has read letters here from the secretary of the board of health of the State of Illinois and other gentlemen who testify that they have examined the facts, and that there is no question but that the disease has existed and did exist at the date of the letter, which was written but a short time ago in the State of Illinois.

Mr. BUTLER. But that is not the point. What I wanted to know from the Senator was whether or not the State of Illinois herself was not able to deal with that matter.

Mr. CULLOM. The State of Illinois is able to do anything that any other State can do on this or any other subject. That is what I desire to have understood; but what I contend is that this is a disease that no State or system that depends on State action will get rid of.

While I am on the floor will the Senator allow me to make another statement in reference to the disease? The question was asked a while ago as to whether the disease was fatal. I hold in my hand a note from a gentleman whom I know to be well advised on the subject, and he states that "the disease is not always fatal. The exposed cattle are dangerous because they may retain the infection for from ninety days to sixteen months, and while apparently healthy convey it to others. The outbreak in South Africa and Australia, which cost hundreds of millions of dollars, was taken to those countries by cattle that were not known to be diseased."

Mr. BUTLER. Whom is that from?

Mr. CULLOM. From a very prominent citizen in my own State who is perfectly familiar with this subject and a stock-raiser—president of the national association.

Mr. BUTLER. As I can not get the Senator from Illinois to answer my questions, or at any rate not satisfactorily to me, I will now proceed to inform the Senate the number of States and Territories that have provided laws for the extirpation of this and all contagious diseases, and I submit to the Senator from Illinois and to the Senator from New York, who are the especial champions of this measure, whether it might not be just as important to incorporate in this bill, if it is to become a law, provision for the extermination of what is known as cholera among the swine, hog cholera.

Is it not just as important to make some provision for the extermination of the contagious disease of glanders among horses and many others that prevail in all parts of this country? If the theory of the Senator from Illinois and of the Senator from New York is correct, as was said so pointedly by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the people of this country are unable to govern themselves, and must come to a majority of this body and of the other House before they are fit to govern themselves.

I find that the State of Colorado has provided a remedy for this disease; the State of Connecticut has provided an act conferring on the State board of agriculture the power to kill diseased animals; the Territory of Dakota, the State of Delaware, the Territory of Idaho, and the State of Illinois, which has passed "An act to amend an act entitled 'An to prevent the importation of Texas or Cherokee cattle into the State of Illinois,' approved February 27, 1867. [Approved April 16, 1869. In force April 16, 1869. Laws of 1869, page 402.]

I find also that that State has passed "An act to suppress and prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle;" approved May 31, 1881; in force July 1, 1881. (Laws of 1881, page 6.)

I find that the State of Indiana has provided laws for that purpose; the State of Iowa, and the State of Kansas which seems to have prepared a very elaborate code for the suppression of contagious diseases among animals. The State of Kentucky has provided laws for that purpose, the State of Maine, the State of Maryland, the State of Massachusetts, the State of Michigan, the State of Minnesota, the State of Missouri, the Territory of Montana, the State of Nebraska, the State of New Hampshire, the State of New Jersey, the State of New York, the Territory of New Mexico, the State of North Carolina, the State of Ohio, the State of Pennsylvania, the State of Rhode Island, the State of Tennessee, the State of Vermont, the State of Virginia, the Territory of Washington, the State of West Virginia, the Territory of Wyoming, and the State of Wisconsin.

I have also before me proclamations by the governors of Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Montana, Ohio, Wyoming, and so on, in relation to this subject.

There is a list of the States and Territories in the Union that have provided special acts to prevent exactly what this proposed act is intended to prevent.

I submit, sir, that with the provisions of the law of May 29, 1884, the power is ample and abundant and complete to extirpate and destroy every vestige of this disease in this country, and that, too, without doing violence to the Constitution of the United States, of which the Senator from New York speaks so sneeringly and indifferently.

For one, sir, I am old fogy enough to profess some respect for that instrument, and I can not ever get my consent to ride rudely, as I think this bill does, over the plainest provisions of that instrument, and do violence to the reserved rights of the States and the people, and at the same time, in my judgment, fail to accomplish what it purports on its face to do.

The Senator from Illinois has in my judgment given a very unfortunate advertisement for the great city of his State in dwelling with so much earnestness upon the existence of this disease in that great city and the dangers which threaten it. I repeat, without meaning for an instant to question the entire sincerity of that Senator, that in my judgment these reports are exaggerated. The clamor is raised for a purpose, that purpose being to enable certain parties in this country to get their hands into the Treasury of the United States to pay for cattle which they can not or may not be able otherwise to dispose of; and I now predict that if this bill shall become a law the $1,000,000 provided for will be a mere drop in the bucket, and with each succeeding year demand after demand will be made by this same influence on the Congress of the United States for more money until the Treasury may be bankrupted.

If there is any virtue in this kind of legislation, there is no reason why it should not be extended to other diseases among cattle and fowl and all other animals.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And men as well.

Mr. BUTLER. And men as well, as the Senator from Vermont suggests. That, sir, is the tendency, and that will be the result; and if we are to be remanded to the position of having this country governed by a majority of Congress without regard to the restrictions of the Constitution, we shall have established upon that Constitution or its ruins a parliamentary government controlled by no other power than the will of a majority.

The Senator from New York says that whatever is necessary for the benefit of the people Congress ought to be permitted to enact into law. If that be true, if that be the accepted doctrine, we might just as well dispense with the expense and trouble of State Legislatures and State governments and, as is done in Great Britain, make the Congress supreme, absolute, with power and capacity and ability to legislate upon every question in which the interests of the people are involved.

And, sir, as one of the inducements that we should support this measure, it is announced by the Senator from New York that it is a copy of the law of Great Britain which passed the British Parliament, that knows practically no limitations upon its power. That is held up as a reason, as an argument in favor of the passage of this bill by the American Senate, whose powers are as distinctly regulated by the Constitution as is the power of the humblest magistrate of this country regulated by law. When we reach that point of overriding the limitations of the Constitution, as is proposed by the Senator from New York, it will be a bad day for this country; it will be the beginning of the end of constitutional government upon this continent.

I can never, and with my sense of duty I will never, vote for a bill which authorizes the commissioners provided for under this act "to enter, either in person or by their duly authorized and accredited agents, any premises or places, including stock-yards, cars, and vessels, within any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Territories of the United States, in or at which they have reason to believe, and do believe, there exist any of such diseases, and to make search, investigation, and inquiry in regard to the existence thereof."

That is carrying the power of search beyond any point ever claimed before in this or any other country claiming to be regulated or controlled by constitutional law. Any of these agents may enter any of your premises, sir, upon mere belief, in the absence of a scintilla of evidence, and may there make inspection to see whether there exists any of such diseases, and in certain events they "are hereby authorized and required to establish and maintain such quarantine of animals, places, premises, or localities as they may deem necessary to prevent the spread of any such disease or diseases."

They may throw a cordon of soldiers around your premises, your farm, your house, your plantation, and maintain them there as long as they please if in their judgment that is necessary to provide a sufficient quarantine around these so-called or supposed diseased animals. These are some, and a very few, of what I consider to be monstrous propositions of law. The commissioners are also authorized—

To cause the same to be destroyed, except as hereinafter provided, and to pay in case of diseased animals, the owner or owners thereof three-fourths of their value, as determined upon the basis of health before infection, and the full apprised value in case of animals exposed to either of such diseases but not themselves actually diseased, out of any moneys appropriated by Congress for that purpose.

Has this Government the right to authorize any agent to seize my property without due process of law, destroy it, condemn it for public uses, and pay me but three-fourths of its value? Why should the owner of an animal not diseased receive the full value when the owner of the other one diseased has only received three-fourths of the value? Then "they shall not pay more than $160 for an animal with pedigree recorded or recordable in the recognized herd-books of the breed to which the animal destroyed may belong, nor more than $60 for an animal not pedigreed."

In section 6, which the Senator from New York thinks cures that, it is said:

That when the owner of animals decided under the provisions of this act, by the proper authority, to be diseased or to have been exposed to said contagion, refuses to accept the sum authorized to be paid under the appraisement provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to declare and maintain a rigid quarantine as to the animals decided as aforesaid to be diseased or to have been exposed to any of said diseases, and of the premises or places where said cattle may be found, according to rules and regulations to be prescribed by said commissioners, approved by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and published as provided in the third section of this act.

This same commission may quarantine every foot of your farm or of mine without any provision as to how I shall sustain or maintain the diseased or infected cattle, whether I am to pay for their maintenance or whether the Government shall pay for it. This arbitrary, peremptory, unqualified power is put into the hands of these commissioners to impose such regulations upon me in the enjoyment of my property as they see fit, and yet the bill fails to make any provision whatever as to what shall be done with these cattle during the existence of the quarantine.

If that is proper legislation, if there is any condition of things in this country which demands it, the Senator from New York and the Senator from Illinois have failed to show it to the Senate, as far as I have been able to discover.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the Senator assumes that I have admitted that this bill contained provisions not in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. I have made no such admission at all. I believe that this bill is constitutional in every respect. If I had not so believed I should not have presented it here. I yield nothing to the Senator from South Carolina in my respect for or my devotion to the Constitution of my country; nor do the people of the North yield anything to the constituents of the Senator from South Carolina upon that account. In my own weak way, twenty-five years ago I did what I could to maintain the Constitution and to preserve it, and I am glad to know to-day that the Senator from South Carolina is so warmly devoted to the Constitution of his country. But I do not propose to bring any measure here which I believe in any way violates the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I will say to him that it is a source of profound regret to me that he has abandoned his love for the Constitution and treats it with such contempt and sneers at it as he has done to-day.

Mr. MILLER. That remark is entirely unnecessary. I have neither treated it with contempt nor with sneers; and it is not necessary that here in this presence or before the American people anywhere I should assert that I sustain and maintain the Constitution of my country, as I have done during all the mature years of my life.

Mr. President, the Senator has not up to the present time mentioned a single provision of this bill which in any way violates the Constitution of the United States. He has not referred us to any provision of the Constitution which this bill violates. I will not question his judgment or his belief that it does violate the Constitution in many respects in his opinion; I am not disposed to question the belief of any other Senator on that subject; but I have my own belief and my own judgment upon it, and in that judgment and belief this bill does not violate the Constitution of our country.

Why, Mr. President, it is only a few years ago since the Senator from South Carolina I think, at all events a number of Senators from the Southern portion of our country, came before this body and demanded that we should pass a law creating a National Board of Health and that Congress should appropriate large sums of money to protect our country against yellow fever. We created that board. We appropriated the money.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator will pardon me. He will find that the Senator from South Carolina supported no such bill. The full extent to which I was willing to go was that the National Board of Health should co-operate with the State boards of health, just as the act of 1884 provides as to diseased animals.

Mr. MILLER. I did not say that the Senator from South Carolina did——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. If he will refer to the legislation with respect to the quarantine powers in the National Board of Health act, the committee reporting the bill and the bill itself never proposed to exercise a power which went beyond such regulation of commerce as would exclude contagion so as to prevent its introduction from foreign nations into this country or from one State into another. That was the only power sought to be exercised and the only power extended by the legislation to which he refers.

Mr. MILLER. That is all this bill does in regard to diseases among cattle. I was simply referring to that not to upbraid the Senators on the other side for their urgency in demanding a large appropriation to protect our country against the ravages of yellow fever or in giving the National Board of Health great powers in the matter of the establishment of quarantine. I favored all those measures. I believed that they were necessary for the general welfare of all our people; and here to-day we have a disease which, while it does not attack our citizens, does not endanger human life, is rapidly destroying one of the chief industries of this country, and has already cost the people of the United States many millions of dollars in losses inflicted upon the traffic in live cattle.

The damage to the material interests of our people if this disease shall not be checked will be as great as might come from a foreign invasion or from a civil war. The losses already mount up to tens of millions of dollars, and if this disease shall ever reach the great cattle ranges of our plains it will then mount up into the hundreds of millions of dollars. A danger so great as this, a danger affecting the entire country and all our people, must be treated by the national authority. I say "all our people," I care not whether the owners of cattle are interested in it—I say it is a question which can only be properly met and settled by the Federal authority.

The Senator from South Carolina has cited a large number of States which have passed laws upon this question. Yes, Mr. President, it is true that many of the States have passed laws on this question; but nearly all those States are here to-day petitioning through their legislative bodies that this Federal law shall be passed, because they find that by State legislation it is absolutely impossible to control or to extirpate the disease.

Why, Mr. President, nearly every State in this Union has laws affecting railroads and the appointing of railroad commissioners and the control of transportation, but this body, only a few days ago, passed a Federal law controlling railroads, and appointing a railroad commission, which is to be one of the most powerful commissions ever organized under our Government.

Mr. President, that is being done for the benefit of the people and of the whole country. But now that the several States, nearly all of them, have failed by their own legislative enactments, by their own laws, to control this disease or to extirpate it, they come here and ask Congress to pass this law. The Senator from South Carolina has said that no sufficient evidence has been given here that there is any demand for this law or that there is any danger from this disease. I think the Senator must have been absent from the Chamber when I first spoke upon this question. I then gave a list of a large number of States, in the West particularly, that had petitioned for the passage of this bill. I believe that nearly all the boards of trade in the West and all of the cattle breeders' associations of the various States and Territories have petitioned this body for the passage of this law, and it has been certified to here by high medical authority that this disease does exist to-day in a number of the States of our Union, and it is upon that ground that this bill is based and that this action is asked for.

In regard to its national importance and the power and the right of the Federal Government to control this matter, I simply want to quote a few words from a report made by the Treasury Cattle Commission some time ago when that was in existence on the importance of Federal legislation touching this subject. That commission based its reasons for Federal action upon the following grounds:

First. The disease is like a common enemy, and as the Constitution does not forbid the operation of the Federal Government within a State for the repulsion or extinction of an enemy of the nation, so nothing should hinder a similar action with such a dangerous and insidious enemy as lung plague.

Second. The danger being common, the funds to avert the danger should be supplied out of the national exchequer.

Third. Action under one controlling head will be uniform and harmonious everywhere. In the past the conflicting laws and orders in two adjacent States have been most perplexing to dealers and others, and have furnished a temptation to smuggling.

Fourth. Those that transgress the law, and especially in the matter of smuggling, can be seized and punished anywhere by Federal authority, but not by State authority should they have escaped over the State line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. MILLER. I am reading an opinion of the Treasury Cattle Commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But on that point, if a man offends against the laws in one State and goes to another State, we have a very ready and convenient process of getting him back and trying him.

Mr. MILLER. I continue the reading:

Fifth. Federal authorities can follow smuggled cattle into any State or Territory and confiscate them or quarantine; State authority can not.

Sixth. If the Federal Government can not interfere within a State, such State may neglect this disease indefinitely and render it permanent, to the peril of all the others.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New York to give way to me that I may move that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. MILLER. It is entirely indifferent to me whether we go on with this bill now continuously or take a recess until 8 o'clock. Notice was given that we should attempt to complete the consideration of this bill to-day. I am entirely willing to do whatever the majority of the Senate may desire in regard to it; but notice has been given to-day of the taking up of another measure immediately after the consideration of this shall have been finished. Of course, if this bill is not finished to-night it will hold the right of way to-morrow ahead of the other measure which has been mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I will make the motion if the Senator yields to me.

Mr. MILLER. I should like to have the sense of the Senate as to whether it will go on or take a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can take the sense of the Senate by putting the motion of the Senator from Iowa, if the Senator from New York yields.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave, before the Senator from Iowa makes his motion, to say that I propose to offer an amendment to this bill, which I should like to have printed. It is a very short one, but I do not want the manuscript to go away until I can have it copied, so that if we dispose of the bill to-night it can be considered. It is to do what I think we have a right to do, and that is to appropriate money to aid the State authorities in the extirpation of this disease and to stop there, which is clearly, as I think, within our power, although some gentlemen doubt even that. Therefore, before this motion is put—I do not care which way it is, only if we have a recess until 8 o'clock we shall not have enough here to-night to make a quorum—I ask leave to submit an amendment which I shall propose at the proper time as a substitute for the whole bill. I ask to have it read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President, and in his discretion through the Commissioner of Agriculture, to aid the proper authorities of the several States in preventing the spread of the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia among cattle. This appropriation shall expire at the end of two years from the date of the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves——

Mr. VEST. Before that motion is put I wish to give notice of an amendment which I want the chairman to hear before the discussion goes any further. I propose the following as an amendment to come in at the end of section 3:

That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State and Territory, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State or Territory in which pleuro-pneumonia, or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, or such State or Territory shall have adopted plans or methods for the suppression and extirpation of such diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the cattle commission and approved by the Commissioner of Agriculture; and whenever the governor of a State or other properly constituted authority signifies its assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act the Commissioner is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigation and in such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease from one State or Territory into another.

Mr. TELLER. I want to give notice of an amendment. In section 6 I propose to insert in line 5, after the word "act," the words:

Such animals shall not be killed, but.

That will make it clear that it is not the purpose to kill any animals and compel the owner to take such compensation unless the owner consents thereto.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice of another amendment to the same section, after the word "found," in line 9, to insert:

And shall pay the owner the damage caused thereby to any animal not diseased.

Mr. MILLER. Before the motion of the Senator from Iowa is made, I want to submit a proposition to the Senate, that we come to an agreement now that we will proceed to vote upon this bill and its amendments at some fixed hour to-morrow. ["To-night!"] Then let us go on with it until the Senate wants to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I withdraw my motion, but I have discovered since I made it half a dozen important amendments. It occurred to me that if we can have an understanding that at a certain time to-morrow we shall vote on this bill and amendments, they may be printed and we can see what they are. But I have no wish about it. I am willing to go on. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent that 2 o'clock to-morrow be fixed as the time for beginning to vote on the bill and amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to have a chance to be heard.

Mr. HOAR. I can not consent to that. I am willing to consent to 1 o'clock or any other time.

Mr. HARRIS. I can not consent to the bill being taken up during the morning hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can not consent to this bill being voted on until everybody has had a fair chance to express in a brief way his opinions.

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw the request for 2 o'clock to-morrow, as I see it is impossible to obtain consent to that?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MILLER. I propose now to go on with the bill. I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey for a question.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to make a single suggestion. It has been the very clear understanding, I think, of the Senate for the past two or three days that there was a necessity for night sessions in order to dispose of the important business before the country. Now we might just as well decide to have a recess this evening, and go on and complete this bill, or remain in session until it is completed. If it is postponed until to-morrow it will interfere with other important matters.

Mr. MILLER. I am ready to go on, and I propose to go on and not consent to either a recess or an adjournment. Of course the Senate has it in its power to regulate its own business and take a recess or adjourn, but I propose to go on with the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NEECE, Mr. SWOPE, and Mr. CONGER managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

MRS M. E. WOODS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting on its amendment to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, and asking a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SAWYER. I submit the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

PHILETUS SAWYER,
H. W. BLAIR,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. B. LOVERING,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SAWYER. This report requires no action. I move that the Senate further insist on its disagreement to the House amendment, and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, were appointed.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH CANADA.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to submit a resolution to go over under the rules:

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Senate that under present circumstances no negotiation should be undertaken with Great Britain in regard to existing difficulties with her province of Canada which has for its object the reduction, change, or abolition of any of our existing duties on imports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. I have rather lost the place in my speech after this long intermission, but I do not suppose that makes any difference. I was simply going to refer, for the benefit of the Senator from South Carolina and for the benefit of other Senators who may not have been present during the entire discussion, to a statement of some of the petitions and requests for the passage of this bill, showing its importance.

The General Assembly of Colorado has petitioned for the passage of this bill. The Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association of Pennsylvania have petitioned for it. The Thirty-fourth General Assembly of Missouri has petitioned for it, as has the Holstein Fresian Association. The Kansas Legislature has passed concurrent resolutions regarding it. The General Assembly of Illinois, and the Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association of Illinois have petitioned for it. The Legislature of of Michigan has also passed resolutions concerning it. The State Board of Agriculture of Kansas has also passed resolutions in favor of it. The Board of Trade of Philadelphia and the Saint Paul (Minnesota) Chamber of Commerce have petitioned for it. The Sangamon County, (Kansas) Breeders' Association have petitioned for it. The Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association of Iowa and the State Board of Agriculture of Illinois have favored it. Concurrent resolutions have been passed by the Legislature of Minnesota asking for it. The International Cattle Range Association has also petitioned for it, and resolutions have been passed in several other States and by various other bodies. The Legislature of Maine, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] suggests, has petitioned for it; and the Legislature of Massachusetts also, I think.

The Senator from South Carolina said that he had seen nothing in print of a late date bearing upon this question. A hearing was had before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on the 26th day of January. That hearing is here printed in proper form. It has been upon the desks of Senators, and in this pamphlet are fully set forth the views of the principal officers of the cattle-growers' associations of the West, also the resolutions of many of the Legislatures and agricultural societies and other bodies who have petitioned Congress for the passage of this bill, all setting forth, in nearly every case, the fact that this disease does exist in a number of the States of the Union, and also the fact that the State Legislatures have been unable to perfect legislation which has in any way extirpated the disease, and asking for Federal action upon this matter; also setting forth the fact that the operations of the bureau of animal industry have not been successful in extirpating the disease.

In short, the testimony is absolutely conclusive that this disease does exist in a number of the States, that it has been spreading, and that it is causing great loss to all of our people, not so much in the number of cattle that have been destroyed up to the present time as owing to the fact that it is largely suspending commerce in live cattle. For instance, the growers of blooded cattle in the State of Kentucky find it almost impossible to make any sales at all because the cattle can not be moved. Some of the States have quarantined against Kentucky cattle and will not permit her cattle to be brought within their borders. What is true of Kentucky is true of many breeders of blooded cattle in portions of the East. The whole West is in fear and doubt about the health of the cattle in the East, and the cattle of the East can not be taken West now. It is considered dangerous to buy them, causing great loss to all our people.

It is believed by persons interested in this industry that if this bill can be passed, if the Federal Government can be empowered to go into every State and Territory and make an investigation wherever it shall find this disease to exist, and there extirpate it and pay the expense out of the Federal Treasury, one year will not elapse before the disease may be entirely extirpated from our borders, and then the commerce in cattle will go on unrestricted and the result will be great profit to all our people.

Now, Mr. President, a word in regard to the amendments which were suggested by the committee and the criticisms which have been made upon them by the Senator from Connecticut and others. As I want to do everything possible to perfect this bill and to get it in a condition where it may meet with the favor of this body, I am willing to go back to the original form of the bill in regard to the appointing power and say that these commissioners shall be appointed by the President of the United States instead of by the Commissioner of Agriculture. Perhaps that would obviate the objections of a number of Senators to this measure. I have no doubt about the power of Congress to authorize the Commissioner of Agriculture to make these appointments, but the constitutional question has been raised here, and in consideration of the importance of the measure, and of the fact that we should have the very best men who can be found in the country, I am entirely willing to yield that point and say that these commissioners shall be appointed by the President of the United States. Before the bill is finally completed, I shall want to put in a provision that this board shall become a part of the Department of Agriculture, and shall report to the Commissioner or Secretary of Agriculture, whichever it may be.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator mean to have the board appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. MILLER. No, I think not. I think we had better give the power directly to the President. I do not think it is necessary that the names of the commissioners for this business should come here to the Senate to be confirmed. We have the constitutional power, of course, to give that authority in this law, and I prefer that the President, or whoever exercises this authority, shall exercise it entirely untrammeled. I hope that Senators will not ask that the appointments shall be confirmed by the Senate, because this board is a temporary board; the President has power to suspend its operations whenever he thinks it is not necessary, and to revive it again.

Therefore I will ask that the Senate do not agree to the amendment of the committee in the twelfth line. That may be disagreed to by unanimous consent, I suppose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 12, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry propose to strike out the words "President of the United States," and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture."

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the Senate do not agree to that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from New York, in order to test this general question, whether he is willing to have the vote taken on the amendment that I have proposed as a substitute for the whole bill with such additions to it as may then be made, if there is anything further necessary, in order to test the sense of the Senate as to whether we will undertake to exercise general authority within the States for the purpose of securing the health of cattle, or whether we will do what I think we clearly can, appropriate money to be expended under the direction of the President to aid the respective States in stamping out this disease wherever it may be? If the Senator from New York is willing to test the sense of the Senate on that general question by allowing a vote to be taken on the amendment that I have offered before we go on with the amendments of the bill, so as to see whether the Senate prefers this scheme of the committee, or simply prefers to aid the States in doing this thing that we all wish to do, I should be very glad, for it may save considerable time; but I can not move it as in order now until all the amendments to the bill are through.

Mr. MILLER. I should prefer to perfect the bill, if I can.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good.

Mr. MILLER. I see great difficulty in the substitute submitted by the Senator from Vermont unless it goes still further and undertakes to provide the entire machinery as to how the thing shall be distributed among the various States. I think the substitute would be entirely inoperative in the shape in which it has been presented to the Senate. After it is printed and we have had an opportunity to read it, perhaps we may be enabled to amend it so that it will be operative, provided we can not pass the bill as presented by the committee. Of course if the Senate does not favor the measure, when we come to vote upon it I shall then want to obtain the best relief possible and will take the best that the Senate may be disposed to give in the matter; but let us perfect the bill now before us if we can. I do not think it will take long to do that part of the work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no right to offer the amendment of which I have given notice, at the present time, according to the rules of the Senate, but I give notice that when the Senator from New York has perfected his bill according to the way he wants it, I shall move that as a substitute for the whole bill. But I can not do it now, I am sorry to say, in order to test the sense of the Senate as to what they would like to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture, which has been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 20, after the word "the," to strike out "President," and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture;" so as to read:

The Commissioner of Agriculture may, when in his judgment the public interests will permit, suspend the functions and pay of said commissioners, and, when in his judgment the public interest may require, he shall restore such functions and pay, of which suspension and restoration he shall make public proclamation.

Mr. MILLER. Let us disagree to that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 26, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to read:

The salaries of said commissioners, respectively, shall be at the rate of $4,000 per annum for and during the period of time in which they shall be engaged in the discharge of their duties as such commissioners.

Mr. MILLER. I should like to take the sense of the Senate upon that question. Let the amendment be put to a vote.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 17, to strike out "President of the United States" and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture;" so as to read:

All such rules and regulations, before they shall become operative, shall be approved by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and thereafter published in such manner as may be provided for in such regulations; and after such publication said rules and regulations shall have the force and effect of law, so far as the same are not inconsistent with this act and the other laws of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. I prefer to leave that as it stands, because the President will not care to be troubled with the making of these rules and regulations. The Agricultural Department has been doing this work through the bureau of animal industry now for three years, and it is very proper that these rules and regulations should be made by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senate will let the clause stand.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I want that to stand. We have been disagreeing to the other amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY. I mean I wish it to stand under the President's sanction. The amendment ought to be disagreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. The bureau of animal industry, which was organized three years ago, has been doing this work in all the States, wherever the State consented; and under that law the bureau of animal industry or the Commissioner has made the rules and regulations. In other words, under that law they were made by the Commissioner of Agriculture and they have been approved by a number of States, and the Department has the business thoroughly in hand.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a very, very different case. The powers to be given to the commission under this proposed law are greatly different from and vastly greater than those given to the old board. It is proposed that these unknown gentlemen shall issue a set of regulations inquisitorial in character and going into every farmer's barnyard at discretion; and those regulations are to have the force of statute law which requires the signature of the President. That is a most extraordinary provision.

Mr. MILLER. These rules and regulations are to be approved by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and that means of course that they are to be made by him. That is what it amounts to, and that is what has been done for the past three years.

I wish to say that there is a misunderstanding about the power of the bureau of animal industry. The bureau of animal industry in a State where the State has given consent to the operations of that law has been doing everything that is found in this bill. It has been entering the barnyards of the farmers; it has been taking the cattle and killing them and paying for them, and it has been making quarantine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under what authority?

Mr. MILLER. Under the authority of the Congress of the United States, which created the bureau of animal industry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under the authority of the State.

Mr. MILLER. Not under the authority of the State, but under the authority of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will kindly let some of the rest of us talk part of the time, I believe we shall come nearer to an agreement, at any rate. They have had no shadow of authority for this kind of work as he conceives except what they got from the phrase "with the co-operation of the State." Without that they would not have one particle of authority to go mousing around through the farms of a State.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator would do himself the justice and the Senate the justice to read the law regarding the bureau of animal industry he would find that the Commissioner of Agriculture was authorized to make rules and regulations for the extirpation of this disease, and when those rules and regulations were concurred in by the State——

Mr. HAWLEY. "When they were concurred in by the State."

Mr. MILLER. They went into the State not under the authority of the State. Does the Senator undertake to tell us that the State of Connecticut gives power to the Commissioner of Agriculture and the bureau of animal industry, and that they have been acting under that power?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are many things the Federal Government can not do without the assent of my State or any other State. There are many things it can not do. It had not the shadow of authority there without that sanction, and did not assume to have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. These acts of Congress provide that direct thing; they must get the authority of the State to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Precisely. The check is not to be accepted unless it is indorsed by the State. The order has no force until the State writes upon it substantially, "Approved by Connecticut, H. B. Harrison, governor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 11, to strike out "President" and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture;" so as to make the section read:

That when the owner of animals decided under the provisions of this act, by the proper authority, to be diseased or to have been exposed to said contagion, refuses to accept the sum authorized to be paid under the appraisement provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to declare and maintain a rigid quarantine as to the animals decided as aforesaid to be diseased or to have been exposed to any of said diseases, and of the premises or places where said cattle may be found, according to rules and regulations to be prescribed by said commissioners, approved by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and published as provided in the third section of this act.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that should be "the President" also. The same reason applies here.

Mr. MILLER. It is the intention to make that change, of course, and not to agree to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 3, after the words "approval of the," to strike out "President of the United States" and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture;" so as to read:

SEC. 9. That the said commissioners are hereby authorized to appoint a secretary of the said board, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Agriculture, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,500 per annum for his services during the time in which, under the provisions of this act, the services of the said commissioners shall be required.

Mr. MILLER. I think that had better be changed so as to let the appointment of this secretary, who is an important officer, rest entirely with the President and not with the Commissioner.

Mr. HOAR. Who is to receive the salary, the President, the Commissioner of Agriculture, or the secretary? According to the phraseology it is to be given to the President.

Mr. MILLER. I think we had better amend that by——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. The Senator from New York wishes to have it disagreed to?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that it is well to have our bills grammatical, and to transpose the words "subject to the approval."

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] who made the point upon the constitutional power of appointment, of course would make it here if he were present. It seems to me that it would be better to have this secretary appointed directly by the President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is agreed to. The Senator from Massachusetts merely wants to transpose part of the sentence.

Mr. HOAR. It reads literally—of course nobody would give it such a construction—

That the said commissioners are hereby authorized to appoint a secretary of the said board, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,500 per annum.

It means that the salary belongs to the President as it reads. Of course nobody would put that construction on the law, but I suggest that those words be transposed, so that the clause shall read:

That the said commissioners are hereby authorized, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, to appoint a secretary of the said board, who shall receive a salary, &c.

Merely changing the place of the words "subject to the approval."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection that amendment will be made.

Mr. MILLER. That is not the form in which I desired to have it. I desired to strike out the appointing power of the commissioners and simply provide that the President of the United States shall appoint a secretary of said board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been done already.

Mr. MILLER. It has not been done already, because such an amendment has not been offered before. The first thing we did was to disagree to the amendment of the committee, striking out the words "President of the United States" and inserting "Commissioner of Agriculture." That was disagreed to, and then the section reads:

That the said commissioners are hereby authorized to appoint a secretary of the said board, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

That is the way it now reads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment substituting "Commissioner of Agriculture" for "President of the United States" was disagreed to. Does the Senator from New York propose another amendment?

Mr. MILLER. I propose another amendment, and that is to strike out the words:

That the said commissioners are hereby authorized to appoint a secretary of the said board, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

And insert:

The President of the United States shall appoint a secretary of the said board, who shall receive a salary, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read at the desk, so as to be sure that we know exactly how it will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 9, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the words "said commissioners are hereby authorized to," and to insert "President of the United States shall;" and after the word "board," in line 2, to strike out the words "subject to the approval of the President of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That the President of the United States shall appoint a secretary of the said board, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,500 per annum, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the committee amendments will be continued in their order.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, in section 9, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred;" so as to read:

Who shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am opposed to that amendment. If the secretary is good for anything, he ought to be worth $3,500 a year.

Mr. MILLER. Let the amendment be disagreed to. If the Senator from Vermont is willing to expend the money, let it go.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us divide on that. He ought to have $3,500. That is small enough for anybody doing such work.

The question being again put, the ayes were 22.

Mr. TELLER and others. Let it go.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I will not let it go. He is really an important man.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 7 votes in the negative on the division; there is not a quorum voting.

Mr. FRYE. No further count.

Mr. TELLER. No further count is demanded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not help it. There is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A call of the Senate is in order.

Mr. MILLER. Let us have another count.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the roll be called as the rule requires.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I will ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and we shall in that way ascertain if there is not a quorum present.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll; and Mr. ALDRICH answered to his name.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, although we have not got any quorum——

Mr. HOAR. The first name was called on the roll.

Several SENATORS. Too late.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] answered distinctly to his name before the Senator from Vermont rose from his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then no debate is in order. The Secretary will proceed with the roll-call.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Chair decide that the Senator from Rhode Island answered one way or the other?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so informed by the clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). On this and all other questions I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. So would he.

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I am not advised as to how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] would vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. Very well, then; I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when Mr. WALTHALL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is absent from the Senate. If he were present he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], but would have voted the same way, if present.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is absent, and is paired upon all questions with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. SABIN. I understand that if the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] were here, he would vote "yea." I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The pair between the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] and myself has been transferred to the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 8, as follows:

YEAS—36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and I shall thereby obtain the opportunity of saying what I wished to say before it was voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, to reconsider the vote just taken. The Senator from Vermont has the floor on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I had hoped before any name was called on the roll (which I did not hear, but which my kind friend from Massachusetts did, whose ears are strong) to say that this officer, as the chairman of the committee had stated to the Senate, is really the most important officer of the whole body of these people, so far as doing things is concerned, and I did not think that at a salary of $3,000 a year the man could be obtained, if this bill is to go through in this way, to do this thing who was fit for it for that sum of money. His time is worth to himself a great deal more than that if he is fit for the place, for it is a most important place—a very important place indeed. Therefore, I hoped that at least $3,500 might be given to this gentleman, and it ought to be $5,000, in my opinion, if he is to do the duty which should belong to the secretary of this board.

Having said that, and the Senate being apparently of the opinion that the sum of $3,000 is enough, I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn. The next amendment reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be stated.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 9, line 17, to strike out "President of the United States" and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture;" so as to read:

And the said commissioners shall, on or before the first Monday in November of each year, during their continuance in service, and at such other times as they may deem conducive to the public interests, or as they may be required so to do by the Commissioner of Agriculture, report to him full and accurate accounts of their expenditures and other proceedings under the provisions of this act, and of the condition of said diseases throughout the United States, to be by him communicated to Congress.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I observe that the committee's amendments have been finally disposed of, and I should like to ask the Secretary to tell me what became of the amendment in section 1, line 12.

Mr. MILLER. That has been disagreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well. I now move to insert in section 1, line 15, after the word "commissioners," the words:

To constitute a bureau in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had given notice of an amendment, but I have no objection to that, as it is perfecting the text before I offer my substitute.

Mr. PLUMB. Oh, well, then I shall withdraw it, if the Senator desires.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say simply that we have passed a bill which was intended to give additional power and dignity to the Department of Agriculture, but it will have no more important duty to perform than such duties as are outlined in this bill. Whether that departmental bill shall pass or not, there is already legislation upon the statute-book which gives to a bureau in the Department of Agriculture somewhat similar powers, though not sufficiently extensive. It is proper that all these cognate things shall be gathered together under one roof. It is not at all anomalous for the President to appoint all the heads of bureaus in a Department. The heads of nearly all the bureaus, perhaps all of them, are appointed directly by the President—in the Treasury Department, in the Interior Department, and so on. By my amendment I propose to confer upon him the authority which he has in other Departments—to constitute the bureaus himself in his own hands under his own responsibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I gave notice of an amendment in section 6, line 5, after the word "act," to insert "such animals shall not be killed, but;" so as to read:

That when the owner of animals decided under the provisions of this act, by the proper authority, to be diseased or to have been exposed to said contagion, refuses to accept the sum authorized to be paid under the appraisement provided for in this act, such animals shall not be killed, but it shall be the duty of the commissioners to declare and maintain a rigid quarantine as to the animals, &c.

I wish to make it clear that it is not the purpose of the bill to kill the animal and compel the owner to take less than he thought it was worth, so that he might have his choice to take the money or he might have it quarantined under the other provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 6, line 9, after the word "found," I move to insert "and shall pay to the owner the damage caused thereby to any animal not diseased;" so that, if an animal not diseased be quarantined for a period of time, the damage shall be paid to the owner.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 2, line 40, where the language now is—

That in no case shall compensation be allowed for any animal destroyed under the provisions of this act which may have contracted or been exposed to such disease or diseases in a foreign country or on the high seas—

I move to insert, after the word "animal," the words "hereafter imported from any foreign country and;" so as to read:

That in no case shall compensation be allowed for any animal hereafter imported from any foreign country and destroyed under the provisions of this act which may have contracted or been exposed to such disease or diseases in a foreign country or on the high seas.

Mr. MILLER. There is no objection to that amendment on the part of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 2, line 42, after the word "seas," I move to strike out the words:

Nor shall compensation be allowed to any owner who, in person or by agent, knowingly and willfully conceals the existence of any such disease or diseases, or the fact of exposure thereto, in animals of which the person making such concealment, by himself or his agent, is in whole or in part the owner.

It may be quite desirable that if a man's cattle have been exposed and he willfully conceals the fact, he should not get any compensation if the cattle are afterward destroyed, even if they are not diseased; but it seems to me clearly unconstitutional to say that a man shall have his property taken for public uses without compensation, if a board find that he has done a certain act or failed to make known what he ought to make known. It seems to me you have no right to say that the penalty for not doing something which a person ought in morals to do shall be that a certain board of public officers, not judicial, not a jury, shall have the power to take his private property for public uses without compensation.

Mr. MILLER. I hope that amendment will be adopted. I want to save the Constitution as much as I can.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Before a vote is taken upon the proposition of the Senator from Vermont I want to perfect the text of the bill. I move to add to section 3 of the bill the following:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State and Territory, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State or Territory in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, or such State or Territory shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the commission and approved by the President, and whenever the governor of a State or other properly constituted authorities signify their assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations and in such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease from one State or Territory into another.

That is the third section of the animal industry act modified by striking out the word "co-operation" and putting in the word "assent," so that the objection which was made to the animal-industry act that a State could not be induced to co-operate is met by this modification.

If this amendment be adopted, it relieves the bill of the principal objection that it has with me, that the United States authorities can go into a State and slaughter cattle which the owner does not propose to transport to any other State or Territory, and can do this against the direct prohibition of the Legislature and governor of the State. I can never vote for a bill that has such a provision in it, but by this modification I propose that the assent of the authorities of the State shall be given to the modus operandi pointed out in the bill, and I can then support the measure; otherwise, not.

Mr. MILLER. How is that assent to be obtained?

Mr. VEST. From the governor or the legally constituted authorities. It is the same language:

And whenever the governor of the State or other properly constituted authorities—

That is the language of the animal-industries act—signify their assent.

Instead of "their readiness to co-operate," which was the language of the old act, I put in the words "their assent," whether they want to co-operate and give a cent of money or put any of their officers into the business or not, unless they object.

My idea is this: I will not vote for any bill that permits the Federal authorities to go in and slaughter cattle that are not intended to be transported, against the objection of the State, and to go to the premises of any citizen of a State when he is not taking any cattle out of the State.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask a question. I think the Senator is entirely right as to giving no assent to a bill which permits an outside authority to go in and slaughter cattle, but my question is as to who shall give that assent. Has the governor of the State any right anywhere to give an assent to an outside authority to go in there and discharge a duty which it has no right to do without the assent of the Legislature?

Mr. VEST. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I leave that exactly where the animal-industry act left it, and the language of that act was this:

Whenever the governor of a State or other properly constituted authorities—

Mr. HAWLEY. The supposition is that the governor has the lawful power to do it.

Mr. VEST. That depends upon the autonomy of the State. If the governor has the power under the constitution of the State, let him exercise it. If the Legislature have it, they will exercise it, because they will be the properly constituted authority for that purpose; or if the governor and Legislature conjointly have the power they can do it. In nearly all the acts adopted by the States the power has been vested either in the governor or in the Legislature, or in both conjointly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

Mr. VEST. I do not know whether the clerks can read it. I will read it again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to have it read again, so as to understand exactly how far it goes.

Mr. VEST. I wrote it hurriedly, and I do not think the Secretary can read it.

That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

That is the bill here, but it ought to be the President of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it merely proposed as a section to the bill?

Mr. VEST. It is to be added at the end of section 3. Section 3, if the Senator from Vermont will look at it, provides for rules and regulations to be adopted by this commission, subject to the approval, as we have made it now, of the President of the United States. I simply propose after those rules and regulations are made to add to that section:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State and Territory, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State or Territory in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, or such State or Territory shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the commission and approved by the President, and whenever the governor of a State or other properly constituted authorities signify their assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigation and in such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease from one State or Territory into another.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend that if we can have it where we can amend it, if the Senator will please send it over. I think the Senator from Massachusetts addressed the Chair before I did.

Mr. HOAR. I rose merely to suggest to the Senator from Missouri to insert words in his amendment so as to read, "whenever the governor of said State, being thereto authorized by law," adding the words "being thereto authorized by law" after the words "said State."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was precisely the amendment I rose to propose.

Mr. VEST. Let it read, "the governor or other legally constituted authorities being thereto."

Mr. HOAR. Put it after the word "governor"—"whenever the governor being thereto authorized by law or other legally constituted authorities."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri modifies the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator from Missouri modify his amendment?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri has accepted my amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read, then, so as to know exactly how it is in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That part of the amendment will be stated. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to insert and the Senator from Missouri agrees to modify the amendment by inserting, after the words "the governor of said State," the words "being thereto authorized by law."

Mr. VEST. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts there is one objection to that to which my attention has been called. Some of the Legislatures of the States may not assemble for eighteen months or two years.

Mr. HOAR. If the governor has no legal authority to bind the State till then——

Mr. VEST. Say "other properly constituted authorities." There must be power in the State somewhere to give this assent.

Mr. HOAR. The power may be in the Legislature alone.

Mr. VEST. I suppose the Legislature could be called. I will let it go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri consent to modify his amendment in that way?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "State," insert the words "being thereto authorized by law;" so as to read:

And whenever the governor of a State, being thereto authorized by law, or the other properly constituted authorities, signify their assent.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest further to strike out——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us know whether the Senator from Missouri accepts that as part of his amendment.

Mr. VEST. Certainly I do.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to strike out from the Senator's amendment the words "or Territory." We have absolute legislative power over the Territories.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the word

"Territory" will be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as modified.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to say a single word on that amendment. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, for if it is this bill will be of very little if any value; it will simply put things back to their present condition under the bureau of animal industry. In other words, it requires the assent of the States. The present law requires simply the State authorities to co-operate, and the amendment as now offered simply requires the assent of a State to the Federal Government coming into its borders and carrying out the provisions of this proposed law.

The principal desire for the enactment of this measure is for immediate action. I presume a majority of the Legislatures of the States of this Union are not in session. Some of them will not be in session for two years, and it is absolutely impossible that this assent should be obtained in any legal way. The governor can not have the authority unless there has been some law passed by the Legislature giving him authority to give his assent to the Federal Government to come in and carry out the provisions of this proposed law.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Legislature can be called, if necessary, I submit to the Senator from New York.

Mr. MILLER. The Legislatures were not called in order to carry out the original act of 1884. A majority of the States have failed to co-operate with the Federal authorities in action regarding it, and they will fail to co-operate and to take action under this proposed amendment, and therefore the disease will go on untrammeled.

The difficulty to-day in the State of Illinois is that the State undertook to co-operate and passed a law and appointed a cattle commission which was to co-operate with the bureau of animal industry. The trouble has been that that cattle commission in Chicago has substantially refused to co-operate, it goes on in its own way, and the bureau of animal industry can do nothing, and to-day the city of Chicago is a plague-spot so far as this disease is concerned, and the Federal Government is absolutely powerless to extirpate it. Therefore the Commissioner of Agriculture is put at the mercy of one State because it will not permit the Federal authorities to go on and extirpate the disease. If the Federal authority had power and money it could go into Chicago and in less than thirty days entirely extirpate this disease; and if it were to cost $1,000,000 or $5,000,000 to-day it would be of great benefit to the whole country, and would be cheap.

If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is adopted, the bill will be of no use at all.

Mr. VEST. Before the Senator sits down, let me call his attention to this proposed modification. He is speaking of the bureau of animal industry under the law requiring the co-operation of a State.

Mr. MILLER. I am willing to admit that the word "assent" improves it to a limited extent. The difficulty is you can not get the assent.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will allow me to say one word I shall not say any more. I want to vote for the bill——

Mr. MILLER. I know the Senator does.

Mr. VEST. But I can not vote for it if he sends this commission in to slaughter cattle never intended for transportation, against the prohibition of the State authorities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then may I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does he think this amendment to a particular section is going to control the other sections about the power of jurisdiction?

Mr. VEST. I think so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much afraid it will not.

Mr. VEST. Then I beg the Senator from Vermont to help me to give it that intendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am going to help you when I get my substitute before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I am not going to vote for the Senator's substitute.

Mr. HOAR. I am sorry to take up so much time, but I think if the Senator from Missouri will give me his attention he will see that his amendment is totally unmeaning, and that he will desire to modify it. This is the Senator's amendment:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State in which * * * disease is declared to exist or such State shall have adopted plans * * * and whenever the governor of a State being thereto authorized by law, or other properly-constituted authorities signify their assent * * * the Commissioner is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations—

He does not say "in said State," but the authority to expend money anywhere depends upon the governor of one State having certified it—and in such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease from one State or Territory into another.

So the Senator will want to further amend his amendment by saying the commission shall be authorized to expend therein, or in said State, so much of the money as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease in said State, or from said State to any other.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to such a modification.

Mr. HOAR. It will require that amendment also.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Massachusetts will see that that is the text of the animal-industry act. The construction of it always has been that the expenditure of money should be in the State, but I have no objection to the modification.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest after the word "expend" to insert the word "therein," and then after the word "diseased" to say "in said State, or from said State into any other."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, we must hear it read, so as to know exactly what we have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "expend" insert the word "therein," and after the word "diseased" insert the words "in said State, or from said State into any other State."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us hear it all read as it will stand modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, or such State shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the commission and approved by the President of the United States, and whenever the governor of a State being thereto authorized by law or other properly constituted authorities signify their assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized to expend therein so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations and in such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease in said State, or from said State into any other State or Territory.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the Senator from Missouri see that that limits the expenditure of money in any State to those particular objects which are mentioned; for instance, investigation, disinfection, and quarantine measures?

Mr. VEST. That is all you want.

Mr. MILLER. Not at all. The bill in other provisions gives the power to slaughter the cattle and pay for them. The Senator limits the expenditure now.

Mr. VEST. I suppose that is one of the means of disinfection. I suppose that is what you kill the cattle for.

Mr. MILLER. I scarcely think that killing cattle would be understood to be any part of the method of disinfecting. The killing is one thing and the disinfection is another thing.

Mr. VEST. I suppose the animal is killed lest the animal may infect some other animal that is sound, and therefore it is disinfecting the herd when you kill it. If that is not the meaning of it I do not know what is.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator had stopped at another clause in the sentence, where the amendment says that the money shall be used for carrying out the provisions of this act, then it would include whatever is found in the act; but he goes on and recites specifically what the money shall be expended for, and those objects are investigation, disinfection, and quarantine. I submit to the Senator from Missouri, as a lawyer, that he would never think for a moment that under those three items mentioned they could proceed to kill cattle and pay for them.

Mr. VEST. The preceding part of the bill provides for killing the cattle.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly it does. The Senator's amendment says the money shall be expended for carrying out the provisions of the bill, and then he turns around and absolutely limits the objects for which the money shall be applied.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. The preceding part of the bill provides for certain modes of getting rid of infected and diseased cattle. This amendment recognizes those modes by providing that the State authorities shall assent to them, and where a State has already adopted a plan it shall then communicate that plan to the commission in order that the commission may assent to that plan. It is no co-operation, but simply assent.

Mr. MILLER. I can only hope that the amendment will be rejected, because, as I say, it absolutely destroys the bill and makes it of no earthly use whatever. If it is adopted we might just as well go on with the present law.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment, and I desire to say now once for all what I think about this measure.

Something ought to be done. I am not a member of the committee and have not had charge of it, and do not know exactly what ought to be done, but a bill is pending in the House of Representatives which is not yet passed, as I see by the print in my hands. This bill is pending here. They are divergent in many respects.

Very able reports have been made on both sides, which I also hold in my hand, for and against these measures. Only a week will elapse before this Congress expires by limitation. I propose to vote for something, whether I like it very well or not, that will go to the House of Representatives and there be considered, hoping that between the two Houses on a conference something that is constitutional and valuable may be produced. The absolute killing of this bill here deprives us of all power to have consultation with the other end of the Capitol.

That we are in the presence of a disease which is likely to be of great injury to the trade of this country is beyond doubt. France, Spain, Portugal, I believe all the continental nations, have prohibited the landing of live cattle from America because of the existence of this disease. No individual State can take any action to show the people of those countries that the cattle which we send abroad are not diseased. It must be done by the power and authority of the United States or the trade with those countries in live cattle is ended forever.

England has not refused to allow our cattle to land, but refuses to allow them to leave the docks. They must be slaughtered there. I believe the time was a year or two ago when they were allowed to be taken about 14 miles into the interior and be fed about seventeen days, that being a modified quarantine, but now so rigid are the regulations that they have to be slaughtered on the dock, whether the market is good or bad, whether the voyage has been stormy or pleasant, whether the cattle are in a condition to be killed or not.

I have been advised of an effort on the part of the Canadian authorities to force all the cattle of the great Northwest to pass over the Canadian lines, to be shipped from Montreal direct to Liverpool or other ports in Europe, on the ground that England would accept a clean bill of health from her own authorities, but would not accept a clean bill of health from American authorities. That is one of the methods adopted to endeavor to obtain the cattle trade of the Northwest to pass through Canada instead of through this country, to the great injury of our own ports, our own carrying trade, and our own people. She has the clear right to do it, however, the ground being——

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator one moment? Does not this Government impose the same restrictions on cattle imported from Great Britain?

Mr. BECK. I do not know that we impose the same restrictions, but we do impose restrictions and for the same purpose—the prevention of contagion.

Mr. MILLER. We do not impose the same restrictions, but we maintain a quarantine on cattle imported from abroad now. They go into quarantine, I think, for ninety days. Then if no disease is discovered they are permitted to be carried over the country; but in England they can not be carried away from the port at which they are landed. They must be killed there.

Mr. BECK. And in other European countries they can not land at all.

Mr. BUTLER. The point I wanted to make was that this Government did impose restrictions on cattle brought from other countries.

Mr. BECK. Yes; and it ought to do so. We impose restrictions on passengers landing from foreign countries supposed to be infected with yellow fever or any other contagious disease. That is right. But what we ought to do, and must do, if we expect to maintain any foreign trade, is in some way and by some authority with which foreign nations can deal, to assure them in a manner that will be satisfactory to them that the cattle we send them are not diseased.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I call the attention of my friend from Kentucky to the present law on the subject of cattle coming into this country? I do not wish to interrupt my friend without his consent.

Mr. BECK. I am only seeking information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act of 1866, being now section 2493 of the Revised Statutes, provides this:

> The importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States is prohibited.

If it stopped there it would have been a very good act. It is good one way, but there is with it a proviso.

> Provided, That the operation of this section shall be suspended as to any foreign country or countries, or any parts of such country or countries, whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall officially determine, and give public notice thereof, that such importation will not tend to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States.

And then it provides authority to make rules and regulations, which I will not take time to read because it is not necessary. So I suggest to my friend from Kentucky that the power by law now conferred on the executive authority of the United States to keep out contagious diseases is complete.

Mr. BECK. I was not discussing that at all. That was suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. What I am concerned about is that we shall do all we can to satisfy and give assurance to foreign nations, to whose ports we desire to send our cattle, and where we must send them, that we are sending them sound and not diseased cattle. All the ports of continental Europe are closed against us to-day on the assumption that our cattle are or may be diseased, and England, under the pretense that she fears the same thing, does not allow our cattle to leave the wharf where they are landed, and is now considering propositions that the Canadian Government is pressing upon her to receive the cattle that leave the ports of Canada, which were raised in the stock regions of the Northwest, and pass them through Canada for export, to the injury of our own transportation lines and our own markets. In other words, England is to receive as true the assurance of her own authorities as to the healthfulness of animals exported from Canada, and she will not receive ours. I think we ought to change that condition of things if we can; and that is what I am endeavoring to do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but I wish to recall to the recollection of my friend from Kentucky the bill that passed the Senate early in the last session of this present Congress and is now pending in the House of Representatives, which was called the meat-exportation bill, that I believe passed the Senate unanimously. That provides for that very thing in the way of inspection. I am not sure that it applies to live cattle—I do not want to overstate it—but, if it does not, it can be easily amended to do it. It applies, however, to every kind of meat for inspection, and provides for a certificate and the power of self-protection against unjust discriminations abroad, and I am extremely sorry that our good friends at the other end have not amended it, if it needed amendment, to cover the point of my friend from Kentucky, so that we might have got it to be a law.

Mr. MILLER rose.

Mr. BECK. I have not made up my mind. Perhaps the Senator from New York knows more about it than I do.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care to speak about that very much; but if that bill were a law it could be of no possible avail in opening to us the commerce of Europe in the matter of live-stock. The markets of Europe will never again be open to us for our live-stock unless the Federal authority is given to extirpate this disease, and after having exercised that authority the Federal officers can go before the whole world and say there is no pleuro-pneumonia in the United States. Until that can be done by Federal authority the ports of Europe will never be opened to us. The mere inspection of an animal that goes to a port and is exported from New York or Boston will do no good whatever. It is on that basis that we are now shut out.
